It would be superfluous to enter into a retrospective summary of the proceedings of the season, which, in so far as the production of novelties is concerned, has, like that of Her Majesty's Opera, been unusually barren. Les Diamans de la Couronne with Mdme. Adelina Patti's Caterina, and Ernani, with the same lady's Elvira, may be said to include the whole. Some artists hitherto unknown to England have appeared; but only one of them has achieved a genuine success—viz., M. Maurel, a baritone-bass of thorough training and high accomplishments. Our own unrivalled Mr. Santley—who, for reasons not easily explained, seems to have abandoned the position he held so long and honourably in Italian opera—excepted, we are acquainted with no one so capable of filling the place of M. Faure as this gentleman. We have no other observations to make upon the season of 1873, to which, however independent of novelty, Mr. Gye has been able to give a certain éclat—thanks to the varied and extensive repertory he has at command. Whatever may be argued by connoisseurs about the system of employing two conductors for the same orchestra, it can hardly be denied that Mr. Gye, in this instance is fortunate. Signors Vianesi and Bevignani both rendered him excellent service. Upon the former has devolved the lion's share of work in the course of the season; but to the latter was entrusted the direction of some important operas; and, like his partner, whose ability is universally acknowledged, Signor Bevignani acquitted himself well.

Digitized by Google

THE CAST OF BEETHOVEN.*

Danhauser, the painter, was an ardent admirer of Beethoven, whom he had met at many musical gatherings in Vienna. It is undoubtedly true that Beethoven was rather brusque, and carefully avoided forming any new acquaintanceship whatever, but Danhauser's frank and affable manners produced a very favourable impression on him. After the two had met accidentally several times, Danhauser thought he should like to take a cast of Beethoven's face, so as to preserve for Posterity a faithful portrait of the great man. He mentioned his wish on the first opportunity, but Beethoven, under various pretexts, endeavoured to avoid compliance, confessing that he had not the slightest wish to see his features reproduced, and that he was too impatient to endure being posé. Danhauser, however, was not so easily beaten. He never ceased vaunting the merit of a model taken from nature, adding that Beethoven owed it to Posterity to hand down to them his features. Danhauser pleaded his cause so warmly that at length Beethoven yielded, and a day was named for him to go to the painter's house. At that time, besides painting in oil, Danhauser devoted a great deal of his time to modelling, and inventing patterns, for a manufactory of furniture and wood-carvings, left him by his father.

Joseph Danhauser, a pupil of Peter Craft, was born at Vienna in 1805. His genre pictures are very valuable. Among the best known are "The Oculist," "The Opening of the Will," and the "Convent Supper." Many of his historical pictures, also, are worthy of notice, especially the picture which adorns the high altar of the Cathedral, Eylau, and which represents Saint Stephen and Abraham repudiating Agar. Danhauser died in the flower of his age in 1845, in his father's house, Vienna. His name has been given to the street he inhabited.

At last the day so impatiently expected arrived; the day on which Beethoven had promised to go to Danhauser's. The great composer kept his word and was most warmly welcomed. After a short conversation Danhauser prepared for work. Beethoven, after taking off his cloak and cravat, was requested to sit down.

"You will not hurt my head, I suppose," observed the composer, somewhat dismayed at the preparations he beheld going on.

Danhauser tranquillized him, promising to be quick, so as to abbreviate as much as possible anything there might be disagreeable in the process. To Beethoven's great astonishment the painter began by pasting thin strips of paper on his eyebrows, and by smearing with an oleaginous liquid all parts of his face where there was any hair. He then asked the composer to put a small tube in his mouth, and to shut his eyes. The reader must know that, to take the cast of a face, the latter is covered with tepid plaster in a liquid state. The plaster soon gets cold, and forms a solid mass, which, when removed, contains the exact linaments of the countenance. The operation is exceedingly disagreeable for those subjected to it, because the face is, so to speak, walled in, and the patient can breath only through a small pipe or tube. Besides this, the plaster, when drying, produces a very painful sensation, to say nothing of the fact that it is no easy matter to remove the cast, because every hair adhering to the plaster is productive of pain. Danhauser had purposely omitted explaining all this to the composer, for fear the latter should refuse to undergo the ordeal. Beethoven had, therefore, not the slightest suspicion of what was in store for him. After the first few passes of the brush employed to lay on the plaster, he seemed alarmed, but, when the plaster, in drying, began swelling, and irritating his cheeks and forehead, he was both horrified and greatly enraged. He bounded to his feet, with his hair on end, and, while endeavouring to get rid of the plaster, exclaimed:—

"You are an impostor, a scoundrel, a monster!"

"For Heaven's sake, Capellmeister—" stammered Danhauser, confused and stupefied. But Beethoven, without allowing him to conclude his sentence, vociferated furiously:—

"Blackguard—cannibal!"

"Permit me to ——" said Danhauser.

"Keep off," roared Beethoven. Flinging his chair away, and catching up his cloak and hat, he rushed towards the door. Danhauser ran after him to offer his excuses. But Beethoven, without deigning to hear a word, exclaimed: "Be off, you villain, knave, assassin. Take care never to come near me, for I will strangle you."

Having uttered these words he went out, swearing and stamping his feet, with his face all plastered over with white, like that of the spectre in Don Juan. The door was slammed violently to, and the unfortunate painter, terrified and confused, could still hear at a distance the maledictions and imprecations which the composer was hurling at his head. After that Beethoven would not hold the slightest communication with Danhauser. Every time he saw him, even at a distance, he flew into a passion, and avoided him as much as he could.

It was not long, however, before Danhauser did take a cast of the great composer's face after all, and that, too, without exciting any outburst of rage. Beethoven was dead!

We may mention a tragi-comic incident which marked the occasion. Having received the consent of the Hofrath Breuning, and of Schindler, the Chapelmaster, Beethoven's friends, Danhauser, accompanied by his colleague, the painter Ranft, proceeded to the house of mourning. After finishing a pencil portrait of the illustrious Dead, Danhauser was about to take the much-coveted cast, when he was stopt by an unexpected obstacle. Beethoven had not been shaved for several days during his last illness, and it was absolutely necessary that the beard should come off. Danhauser sent for a barber, but the later asked a ducat for what he was to do, and, small though the sum was, the two artists did not possess so much. They were consequently obliged to send away the barber and manage without him. Ranft found a razor which he had ground. Danhauser lathered the face; Ranft shaved it, and then at last Danhauser took the cast. It was from this that the sculptor Dietrich modelled his bust of Beethoven, the only one faithfully reproducing the features of the immortal composer.—AUGUSTO WILKÉ.

* From La Gazzetta Musicale.

POPULAR CONCERTS IN GERMANY.*

During the last few years, the interest formerly evinced by the public for concerts has certainly been diverted from them to opera. It is a rare occurrence even for the most celebrated artists now-a-days to fill a room; while the public flock to hear any opera in which a popular cantatrice or a favourite tenor appears. In some small towns concerts are, to some extent, prevented from falling into neglect by the local musical societies, which engage artists for a fixed sum, but even they can invite only such artists as have already achieved a reputation, while the number of candidates far surpasses that of those elected. In large capitals these societies cannot well exist, because the entire organization of the concert system is different. There is no regular public which can be relied on, one year with another, and any system of concerts must have a completely different foundation. There is more chance that an association founded for purely musical objects will prosper in smaller towns, because the relations between the management and the public are more intimate, and the opinion of the latter carries weight with it outside as well as inside the concert-room; but in a large town a combination of this nature would not be attended with a beneficial result, for the following reasons:—

If the founders of such a society are private persons who attend to it from a mere love of art, they will soon perceive that it is impossible for them, with their regular professional duties, to devote unflagging attention and labour to their task, and concentrate all their efforts on one point. If, again, the majority of the founders consist of men of rank, or even men of independent means, following, therefore, no settled occupation, the undertaking is still worse off, because such individuals, in their zeal for the artistic Ideal floating before their minds, entirely lose sight of the practical part of the question, and waste more money than they spend judiciously. No board of directors, as it is termed, has hitherto, in large cities, advanced the interest of any art institution, no matter how heavy the sacrifices they have made. The case is even worse when only musicians are at the head of such an undertaking, because they cannot easily work well together, and because,

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

Digitized by Google

at the same time, they are placed as directors and musicians in opposition to public opinion, and, also, because a continuance of the enterprise is combined with sacrifices which they cannot be expected to make. We are not, of course, speaking of Subscription Concerts, which, being got up by firmly established musical bodies for a definite purpose (a fund for widows of deceased members, a sick fund, &c.), must be limited to a certain number of evenings, a certain kind of entertainment, and a certain class of subscribers. We are now speaking of concerts like the Monday Popular Concerts in London, and of the concerts given by M. Pasdeloup in Paris. And let it be here laid down as a fixed principle that such undertakings can be set on foot only by a private person, or by a musician, who, like M. Pasdeloup, acts merely as conductor. Nay, we almost feel inclined to assert that M. Pasdeloup's example cannot possibly be taken as a model in Germany, because M. Pasdeloup possesses, perhaps, more talent as an arranger than as a conductor, and because he had the skill to make a number of experiments, before he could so cleverly combine the various threads as to achieve such satisfactory results. He began with an orchestra of boys, with the Concerts des jeunes Artistes, and has ended in rivalling the concerts of the Conservatory. A German musician would hardly go through such experiments and ordeals, nor would he meet with the support which M. Pasdeloup could boast. It is, unfortunately, a fact only too frequently demonstrated that in all musical undertakings which have met with the slightest reverse the interest in them, no matter how lively it may have been at first, has cooled down, and, however favourably they were afterwards being developed, they have been wrecked by the stolid apathy of the public.

A German Arthur Chappell—combining a correct knowledge of artistic matters with business experience, and not appearing himself in the undertaking—would, supposing he possessed the necessary means and the necessary perseverance, have a most brilliant chance; but, of course, he would have to secure the very best artists to support him. For any other persons however, especially professional musicians, who must always be appearing themselves, there are such very great obstacles to surmount that, sooner or later, they are obliged to abandon the wearisome road that leads to no goal.

—o—

THE SYDENHAM MUSICAL CONTESTS.

(From the Liverpool "Porcupine.")

One of the most pleasant and healthy signs of the times is the taste which appears to be growing amongst us for the cultivation of music. In Liverpool, much as we pride ourselves upon our cleverness and our gentility, we are far behind Manchester in this branch of the art, and in England, as a country, we are greatly behind Germany. True, we have in Liverpool some accomplished musicians; but, taking the town as a whole, music, and particularly vocal music, is not pursued with an ardour at all in proportion to the means for its cultivation, and the varied and refined pleasures which it affords. We cannot be always carrying about with us trombones, violoncellos, flutes, and cornopeans, nor is it always desirable that, at home or abroad, our experiments upon these instruments should be continuous; for, however interesting they may be to ourselves, our neighbours are not always inclined to regard our early struggles with the affectionate toleration shown by our own relatives and friends. But every one is gifted with a voice which, by a little care and practice, may be trained to some degree of tune and harmony, and which may often be educated to take an effective part in the finest vocal compositions of the masters. Extremes illustrate most forcibly the value of cultivating a natural gift of this kind; and while the performance of the Representative Liverpool Choir, which took part in the National Music Meetings at Sydenham, shows what may be done by the combined practice of good and well selected voices, so the ordinary experience of an untrained man attempting a song, or the murder of harmony which one hears continually in a church or chapel congregation, shows the depth of vocal degradation in which too many of us are content to wallow. We hope that the concert of Tuesday night will tend to stimulate the love and practice of choral music in families. Certainly it would both be more pleasurable and elevating to hear the sons and daughters of a household uniting in the grand and beautiful harmonies of Handel and Haydn, Beethoven and Mendelssohn, than to find them soar no higher than the namby-pamby and soulless airs of the singing-saloon or the burlesque stage.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

30th July, 1873.

On Wednesday last, as a "representation extraordinaire," we had a performance of Flotow's L'Ombre, by four members of the Opéra Comique company, of Paris, who are now on a starring tour about this part of France. It was to be regretted that they gave only one performance, and arrived only at mid-day on Wednesday, thereby precluding a rehearsal, and a consequent efficient orchestra. A piano, with some violins and basses, were "all the sound we heard" as accompanists, and I must say the loss of support for the voice, especially that of the flute and reed instruments, was very evident. The "gods" and "gentlemen seated under the boxes," after requesting in their usual familiar way that the overture should commence, pronounced their disapprobation that there were not at least thirty-two in the orchestra. The stage manager had a "ring up," and explained the fact that M. de Flotow had composed music to M. de St. George's opéra comique for a full orchestra, but had also arranged the same, so that it could be performed by an orchestra similar to the one now in the house. The opera was a success, and deserved the applause it met with, and I hope we may again see at Boulogne Mdlle. Priola, Mdlle. Galli-Marié, M. Falchieri, and M. Lhérie. I would especially note with praise the quartet during the supper scene (Act 1).

The regular operas during the week have been Guillaume Tell, La Juive, and La Favorite, as grand operas, and Faust as opéra comique. The first opera went well, our new tenor, M. Gericault, singing well, especially in the duet with Mdlle. Telmar, but his enthusiasm got, perhaps, the better of his judgment, and he was tired out before the end of the opera. The orchestra was all that could be wished; the overture very good; the flute solo exceptionally so (played by M. Miramont). The duo with Mathilde, "Idole de mon âme," and the famous "Suivez moi," at the end of Act 4, were noticeable for their correctness.

La Juive on Saturday, in which M. Gericault sang the part of Eléazer, was also a success. The timbre of M. Gericault's voice is clear and good, and I believe he is an artist M. Clement and the frequenters of the Salle Monsigny will not repent having at Boulogne, to interpret many tenor rôles. The performance of La Favorite last night was grand—M. Gericault at his best—and we were introduced to a new artist, Mdlle. Peyret (contralto). Her voice is pure, strong, of large compass, and bears evidence of having been under the direction of a good and careful professor. It astonishes one to see a very young lady so very undeveloped physically, and hear such "tones" as she brought out last evening. The quartet and chorus (Act 3) obtained a recall for the artists. Faust was repeated with the same caste as before on Sunday.

Prospective opera arrangements. A Mdlle. Poitevin arrives to-day to take the place of Mdlle. Crouzat (soprano). M. Ytrac (barytone) leaves to-morrow, being remplacé by a M. Budent.

At the Etablissement matinée musicale on Sunday last, Mdlle. Holenberg (cantatrice Suédoise) sang an aria from Der Freischütz, and "Je ne puis espérer," by M. Gounod. Mdlle. Holmberg, I have already mentioned in your columns as having been good enough to sing four times here for different charities.

Boulogne is getting very "crammed" (more than full), and we are all getting busy—no wonder! This weather makes people both in London and Paris sigh and say "Oh for the sea," or, "Over the sea!"—in fact the sea! the sea!! the open sea!!! the sea they often wished to see before they see the sea. (N.B.) The open C is no relation to the musical note (Do). Got at by some singers and fished for by others!

I have just come from a concert at the Etablissement, given by Herr Dulcken (pianist). It was a great success. A concerto by Mendelssohn for pianoforte and orchestra, and "Mariannina" (chant populaire Italien), arranged by Herr Dulcken, went off with éclat. Herr Dulcken has a nice touch and brilliant execution. He is a son of the late Mdme. Dulcken, who, I believe was pianist to the Queen of England. S. C.

---

Signor Arditi left London on Monday for Italy, where he remains a month, returning to London previous to his departure for St. Petersburg.

Digitized by Google

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 2, 1873.

WE have received a letter, the meaning of which (had he read it—not without) Propertius might have explained, but which would have puzzled Tibullus, given Catullus the headache, and caused Persius and Martial each to turn a couple of somersaults. We nevertheless give it a place in our leading columns, because it has dropped from the pen of an earnest and conscientious writer, who speaks not only from his brain, or brains, but from his heart, or heart of hearts. His nom de plume, "Idealiser," inapt as it may appear to some, is enough to ensure a hearing, or reading, for what so eager and anything but catachrestical a writer has to urge; and thus, without further preliminary, we present his missive to our readers:—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—"Still they come." Grumbling letters about English opera. What do the writers mean! What is English opera? Not what might it be; but what is it? Three songs and a break-down, if such as the Beggars' Opera be taken for a sample, would be a not very inaccurate definition. The subject is important, or so many people would not be interested in inquiring about it. A discussion of its claims in an impartial spirit could be productive of only good results. Your latest correspondent, R. C., asks "Why English opera should be allowed to die out?"—A fair question, entitled to a fair reply. Without pretending to supply a complete answer to the question, I may be allowed, perhaps, to attempt an instalment, by way of whetting further inquiry, of some few items in the reason why. First, there is latent opposition to everything theatrical prevalent in dominant circles. Second, there is an absence of earnestness in English composers. Third, there is a slip-shod way of putting English opera upon the stage that is simply suicidal. From these causes English opera has died! Possessing neither breath of life nor reason to live, it has done the next best thing it could—namely, passed away. Is this the view we are to take of the question, or can any other be supplied?—If the English opera consists of but occasional songs, we have now the very institution in a more flourishing condition than ever before. How can this be may be asked?—I will reply. As the English opera is but a string of ballads, the Music Hall organization has supplied the English opera. But how about the scenery?—Well, plays may be rendered with meagre substitutes for scenes, and many of our Music Halls put on a better drawing-room scene, for "I dream't that I dwelt in marble halls," than many of the theatres proper. Then as to frequency, I suppose "The Death of Nelson," the leading scena in the opera of the Americans, "Let me like a Soldier fall," the great tenor air in Maritana," and "Tom Bowling," representing Dibdin's opera, are performed many times over for once of the most popular foreign opera extant. I estimate that these three songs are sung at least a million of times, in England only, every year. Now, it must be a good Italian opera that is done even ten times a year in London. But suppose Faust is done fifty times a year in various places, which is as much as it is, I will undertake inferentially and circumstantially to demonstrate—what it would be but a mere expenditure of postage stamps and time statistically to corroborate irrefragibly—that either of the songs I have named—"Tom Bowling" for instance—has been sung a hundred thousand times in the same period. Most likely double and treble that number. English opera, then, actual, real, gets performed in England, as compared with foreign opera, at the rate of about a thousand to one. And yet we have the old drivel and grunt about the decay of English opera! "Ah"—say some—"but we don't get the dialogue." The talking, I assert, is not opera at all, unless one might call it Irish opera. It is not part of the business of a musical man to groan and fuss about the talking being left out.

"But the choruses?"—it will be asked. Well, about the choruses I do not know one worth preserving that has not been heard hundreds of times by our public. Look at the English opera, Guy Mannering. I could easily prove that the glee-chorus, "The Chough and the Crow," has been performed a hundred thousand times in public for every once of the most popular foreign opera that ever held the stage. Let us away with this grumbling and complaining spirit. Let our young composers write only when they have melodies to put on paper. They will then find that their English operas will possess an innate, perennial charm, which not even the frosts of adverse criticism, nor, far worse, the undue caressings of over-fond sponsors, can wither or destroy. They will find that though all they write may not be equally acceptable, what is good is sure to live. Those who observe will see the core of the English opera transplanted into the conservatory of the exotic—in the Barbiere di Siviglia of Rossini, our own Bishop's "Home, sweet home."*

May I ask that if any of your gifted correspondents wish to contravene what I have said, they will kindly put their names to their lucubrations. I will then, to the best of my ability, endeavour to carry the subject further; but of merely personal controversy I shall take no notice.—Yours very truly, IDEALISER.

July 28th, 1873.

To this, possibly, Julius Cæsar Vanini might have replied: "Huic argumento respondent adversarii adeò vareò, ambiguè, perplexè," &c., &c. But let that pass. Although it was said by Hieronymus Cardanus (and pre-said in fluxer language by Pomponatius), few who have pondered the subject will be disposed to question the axiom—"Divina pars in nobis odoribus gaudet," &c., &c. By ponder, we, of course, mean weigh. Now, it may be doubted whether "Idealiser," though he may have balanced, has accurately weighed. But let that pass.

Our own private opinion is that such matters require serious consideration. We never had the slightest inclination towards stoicism; but that, it may be said, with more or less truth, is a little beside the question. Let us grant as much; and what then?—Has "Idealiser" established his case? That he has taken an immediate position we own. Yet there is a manner of taking a position, be it immediate or tardy. And herein lies the kernel of the argument (—aye, and the captain, too). Pascal says, in his famous Pensées, many good things, but none better than this:—"Comme la mode fait l'agrément aussi fait elle la justice"—unless it be that sentence in which he argues that, had the nose of Cleopatra been a very little longer, or a very little shorter, the whole future of the world might have been changed. But such complex elenches can only be properly discussed by philosophers like John Oxenford, Shirley Brooks, and J. V. Bridgeman, among the living; Douglas Jerrold and Horace Mayhew among the dead. We have not the slightest tooth against "Idealiser;" but he should be careful when he puts his finger out to touch—for it cannot justly (or at any rate proverbially) be said of "Idealiser" what Dr. Samuel Johnson, of the Rambler, the Dictionary, and Rasselas, said of Oliver Goldsmith, which, being unable to bring to mind, we are not able to cite "on the spur of the moment."

"Nunc est bibendum," says Flaccus. George Grove, the cumini sector, is abroad; so is Josephus Bennetteus; and Auguste Manns has to depend solely on his own proper resources. Terruit urbem (an "Adonic," or "Dactylic dimeter—all the same).

If we have in any way hurt the feelings of "Idealiser," or caressed him à rebrousse poil, we are sorry; but he ought to remember what Montaigne says:—"Un barbiere se represente, quand il est besoing, aussi magnifiquement en pourpoinct qu'en armes." We do not remind him of this in a spirit of malice, but ———.

DISHLEY PETERS.

* Which is not our own Bishop's.—A. S. S.

Digitized by Google

FERDINAND DAVID (CONCERTMEISTER).

It is doubtful whether it is happiness to attain old age. But it is assuredly something inexpressibly sad to see our best friends and companions, with whom we have lived and laboured, with whom we have shared so many joys and so many woes, pass away to that bourne whence no one returns. It is only a few weeks since that we lost here poor Wolfgang Müller, and now we are startled by the report that Ferdinand David has died in Switzerland, and will be buried to-morrow in Leipsic. He was very ill at the beginning of last winter, but recovered and devoted himself once more with all fidelity to his profession. About six weeks ago he wrote, in his humorous way: "I am going on tolerably, and have picked up pretty well. I shall never be quite well again, however, and have, therefore, made up my mind to take care of myself incessantly—a rather depressing business. But I can work, eat, and sleep. the last especially, with more virtuosity than anything else; my good humour and a certain lightness of heart have not yet deserted me, so I shall be thankful if things turn out no worse. At the end of next month I return to Tarasp, to breathe air 4,000 feet high, and drink chalybeate water; the first is certainly the higher enjoyment of the two." And now he has ceased to breathe at all.

If he had been obliged to take such care of himself — if he had been compelled to give up the exercise of his art, we must account him fortunate in dying, since, without his art, for him there was no life. Pupils, Gewandhaus Concerts, and music-paper—how could he have lived without them? It was only in the most incessant, in the most energetic exertion that, strange as it may sound, he found—repose.

There is, perhaps, no musician living who devoted talent, powers, and knowledge to the benefit of art with such irrepressible and ardent zeal as David. Summoned to Leipsic by Mendelssohn, he worked there for nearly forty years with the most gratifying results. He sent forth innumerable and admirable pupils into the world, he filled the orchestra with his tone and his enthusiasm, while he delighted and educated the public by the most thoroughly excellent performances of masterpieces without end. Not only did he enrich violin literature by his own sterling, clever, and effective compositions, but he was the first to render accessible, and to restore to publicity, numerous treasures of former times. As a teacher he lived to teach, assisting hundreds by his correct judgment, by his rich experience, and by his friendly advice. Hospitable, witty, good-humoured at home, a most affectionate husband and father, clever, vivacious, and amusing wherever he went, he never lost a minute. For everything important, too, discovered, written, or taught, beyond the sphere of his own art, he manifested a most lively interest. When he put down the violin, and laid his paper on one side, the best works he could find to read were good enough for him. His post in Leipsic is to be given to another, who, no doubt, will prove worthy of it; but to supply his place is hardly possible.

Yet, especially for the last few years, David had many opponents, and was subjected to the most unmerited attacks, and that partly in the very town of which he was such an ornament. The old story of Aristides is as young as ever. Men are tired of hearing any one called "The Just" too long.

To me he was a true friend for fifty years, since we first played music together as boys. For how much that was kind and good have I not to thank him! And how many are there in the same position as myself! Let such persons, when they peruse these lines, allow their own reminiscences of the Deceased to pass in review before their souls. Our greatest and most elevating consolation for the painful loss of any eminent man we loved, is to realise his individuality, to render clear to ourselves what he was, and what he was to us. It is gratifying, also, to be able to say that we, too, were something to him.

Cologne, 21*st July*, 1873. FERDINAND HILLER.

---

SIGNOR BEVIGNANI left London on Monday last for Brescia, and other cities of Italy. He will return to London previous to going to Moscow, where he is engaged as chef d'orchestre at the Imperial Italian Opera.

THE LITTLE GOATHERD.*

(From "Another World.")

In speaking of the "choice of a husband," I referred to the only case I recollected where the lady's hesitation rendered a third meeting necessary. The exception was interesting.

Early in my reign, whilst one day walking near the sea-shore, I was struck by the appearance of a little girl who was attending a flock of goats. A kid had fallen over a rock into the sea. The child was a lovely creature, with a beautiful complexion, handsome and expressive eyes, small hands and feet; and silken hair flowing over her shoulders. Her beauty was heightened by the expression of tenderness and grief at the loss of the kid. I was greatly interested, and watched her movements unperceived. She showed great intelligence and presence of mind.

Near the sea grows a peculiar kind of stringy reed, very strong and pliable. She tied several of these reeds together, made a noose at one end, and with the other end tied herself to a rock near the edge of the precipice, that she might not overbalance herself, and be dragged down, in her endeavours to recover her kid. She then threw down the noose at the other end of the line, and, after one or two attempts, succeeded with great dexterity in getting it round the body of the kid, which she gradually hauled up to the rock where she stood. Her movements were most graceful, and her address and dexterity truly astonishing. As soon as her success was complete she fondled and embraced the kid as though it had been a favourite sister whom she had saved.

In straining over the precipice she had drawn the knot that secured her to the rock so tight that she could not liberate herself until I came to her assistance and set her free. I then talked with her, and found that she had remarkable capacity, tenderness, and sweetness of nature, but was altogether uninstructed. I said to myself, it is impossible that a creature could be found so beautiful and intelligent unless Providence had intended her for something better than her present occupation.

By my orders she was thoroughly educated and cared for. She showed great aptitude for her appointed studies, and, having passed one ordeal after another with great honour, she was ultimately, thanks to our institutions, deemed worthy of a superior rank, and became one of our great ladies. In mind, form, and feature, she was a remarkable person, and her manners were most sweet and fascinating. She was a frequent guest at my palace. I delighted in her discourse on the rare occasions when my occupations gave me the opportunity of conversation.

Gratitude to her benefactor had given rise to a deep affection. Observing this, I told her that the peculiarity of my position, and the necessity for completing my great work, had decided me not to marry, and that the affection of a friend was all that I could give her. Marry, I said, and I will always watch over you. Had I felt disposed to marry, she would have been my wife. In obedience to my wishes, she allowed the "marriage choice meeting" to be called. She was so beautiful and engaging that the number of competitors was far beyond that required to complete the meeting. The suitors selected were the most promising young men in the city, and held the highest positions, but all the three several marriage meetings remained without result, except to confirm her resolution not to marry.

By our laws, every woman, however high in rank, who elects to remain single, is obliged to follow a calling adapted to her capacity and inclination. The interesting person of whom I have spoken possessed a peculiar talent for inventing and improving ciphers for telegraphic correspondence. This was turned to account. She was also entrusted with the superintendence and examination of reports made by those charged with the instruction of clerks engaged in the telegraph department, and proved superior in every important particular to any and all of the men occupied in similar pursuits.

---

* "The flower is hidden until the electricities of the sun and light draw it forth into life and beauty."

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—We take the following from a highly esteemed Liverpool daily paper:—

"The concert promised by the Representative Choir after the victory at Sydenham is to take place in the Philharmonic Hall on the 12th of August, and will be under the patronage of the Mayor, Mr. Robertson Gladstone, and Mr. J. B. Cooper, who have all taken the warmest interest in the choir from the commencement. In addition to selections from the competitive pieces there will be sung an anthem, specially composed by Sir John Goss, and a part-song, also composed expressly for the choir by Mr. J. L. Hatton, entitled 'Going Away.' The fact of two such eminent musicians having courted the muse for the benefit of the Representative and the St. Nicholas Choirs is testimony of which the choristers ought to feel exceedingly proud. It should be mentioned that the performance will be given by three choral bodies (though each is incorporated with the Representative Choir)—there being in addition to the Representative Choir, the St. Nicholas Choir and the Liverpool Vocalists' Union, the latter of which sang before the judges at the Crystal Palace, and obtained a certificate for their excellent singing. No doubt the deep interest that has been awakened in the competitive singers, and an anxiety which must naturally be felt to hear the vocalists who so triumphantly maintained the musical reputation of the good old town, will bring an overflowing audience. The management of the entertainment will be in the hands of Messrs. Phillipps and Hart."

—o—

ORGAN RECITALS.

On Thursday evenings, 17th and 24th July, two organ recitals were given at the Parish Church, Cranbrook, the proceeds being devoted as a present to the blower, Stephen Jenner. It is seldom the faithful attendant who supplies the medium through which the delightful music of the organ is conveyed to the ear of the listener is thus remembered; and the organist, Mr. H. Woolley, deserves honourable mention for setting so worthy an example. The aged servant of the church in whose behalf the performances were got up, has been "at the bellows" for about fifty-three years. Every one who plays the organ knows how pleasant it is to have this department satisfactorily attended to. What would an organist not give if he could make sure that his wind would not be "let out" for half a century? Old Jenner, though blind, has throughout maintained a character for punctuality and attention that, even in so humble a sphere, one is glad to find not allowed to pass without appreciation. The organ is a beautiful instrument of modern construction, and has been placed in the church through the liberality of a gentleman amateur.

G. T.

Times for Music.

CHARITY.*

I.

Fair was she to view,
That Italian maid,
In dress of gay hue
And beauty arrayed.
With her swift bright eye,
Like the blackberry,
Who, as I passed by,
Cried, "Have charity!"

II.

So sadly she smiled,
How could I say "No?"
For me she beguiled
With her tale of woe.
So, hoping to save
Her again troubling me,
A coin I gave
Just for charity.

III.

But that was not all;
For, as here I stand,
My heart I let fall
Straight into her hand.
So she's said she'd make
Her husband of me,
Not for my own sake,
But for charity.

ERNEST HOUGHTON.

* Copyright reserved.

"HOME! SWEET HOME!"

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Most persons in England believe that the question as to who composed the above world-known ballad was settled long since. They will, therefore, be surprised to hear that it has been again taken up in America, where some individuals now assert that John Payne, to whom a monument is about to be erected in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, wrote both the music and the words. We are informed that Payne was born in New York, and led a highly eventful life; that he was successively a clerk, a newspaper writer, a literary man generally, an actor, an operatic composer, and a diplomatist, in which last capacity he acted as Consul at Tunis, where he died, after a long and painful illness, in 1852. We learn that he composed "Home, sweet Home!" in a garret in Paris, when, far from his native land, he was in a state of the greatest distress. Like everything else, which ever made a sensation and marked an epoch in the domain of art, it was, as it were, created with the author's heart-blood. It was first sung with tremendous success by Miss M. Tree, at Covent Garden Theatre, London, and quickly became so popular that in two years the publishers sold 100,000 copies, and gained 10,000 dollars. With this song, Miss Tree conquered the heart of an Albionic Croesus, and Kemble, the manager, cleared a large sum. Payne, we are further told, composed, also, an opera called Clari, which brought him in just as little as "Home, sweet Home!" The New York Evening Mail favours its readers with two previously unpublished verses of the song. They are stated to have been written by Payne, and presented by him in the winter of 1833 or 1834 to an American lady in London.

Such is the claim now put forward by some of the American papers in favour of John Payne. Up to the present moment, I always laboured under the impression that Sir Henry Bishop composed "Home, Sweet Home" as well as the opera of Clari, in which the song was sung for the first time. At any rate, Sir Henry, in a letter dated the 17th December, 1849, and sent by him from London to Mrs. Scarisbrick of Liverpool, says he did so. He states, moreover, that Mdme Pasta was so fond of the song as to induce him to believe that, on her return to Italy, she begged Donizetti to introduce it into his Anna Bolena, on which he was then employed. This, Sir Henry adds, will account for a part of the melody being found in Donizetti's work.

Sir Henry's letter was published in the Athenæum, about the beginning of last year.

Before concluding, I may mention another delusion of mine I always fancied Miss M. Tree married the late Mr. John Kemble Chapman, proprietor of the Sunday Times. Whether he was the "Albionic Croesus" in question, I cannot say. Perhaps you, Mr. Editor, can throw a light on the subject. Yours, truly,

ENQUIRER.

—o—

THE ROBERT FRANZ FUND.

(From Dwight's Boston "Journal of Music.")

The undersigned acknowledge with many thanks the following contributions to the fund in behalf of Robert Franz:—

"Net proceeds at a private concert given at Mechanics' Hall, May 31, 1873, $1,238.02; Mrs. Quincy A. Shaw, $1,100.00; Sebastian B. Schlesinger, $400.00; Mrs. and Miss Tappan, $300.00; Barthold Schlesinger, $300.00; Mrs. and the Misses Cary, $270.00; Mrs. George R. Russell, $100,00; Miss E. F. Mason, $50.00; Mrs. C. W. Huntington, $50.00; Mrs. George D. Howe, $50.00; Mrs. Samuel Hooper, $50.00; Mrs. S. G. Ward, $50.00; Mrs. A. Hemenway, $50.00; Miss A. Hooper, $50.00; Mrs. Henry Higginson, $50.00; Cash, $50.00; Cash, $47.19; Miss Clara Doria, $25.00; Mr. Charles Howe, $25.00; Miss Pearson, $25.00; Mrs. L. Agassiz, $25.00; Mrs. Alex. Agassiz, $25.00; Mrs. Cabot Lodge, $20.00; Mrs. John Lodge, $20.00; C. Petersilea, $10.00; Mrs. F., $5.00; Cash, $5.79—Total, $4,381.00."

It is earnestly hoped that the same effort which has so successfully been made in Boston in behalf of the great song composer will also be made in other cities of the United States. The undersigned will be happy to take charge of and to transmit any sums that may be entrusted to their care.

L. AGASSIZ, J. S. DWIGHT, H. L. HIGGINSON, OTTO DRESEL, SEBASTIAN B. SCHLESINGER (Committee). H. L. HIGGINSON, Treasurer.

40, State Street, Boston.

Digitized by Google

Shaber Silber across divers Matters.

A race would seem to be going on among managers, each anxious to get his theatre shut up before the others. Mr. Buckstone was the first to reach the desired goal, in token of which the Haymarket was closed some weeks ago. Then Mr. Mapleson, undeterred by the fact that he had not yet been able to produce the promised Talisman, brought the season at Her Majesty's Opera to an end the Saturday before last. Mr. Gye gave his final performance at the Royal Italian Opera on Saturday. Messrs. Valnay and Pitron took their farewell benefit at the Princess's Theatre on Monday; the season at the Prince of Wales's Theatre terminates on Saturday next, and for Saturday also the last representation of opera or opera bouffe is announced at the St. James's.

We entertain but the very faintest admiration for opera bouffe, which was tolerable enough in the hands of Offenbach when Offenbach alone cultivated it, but it is not by any means supportable as produced, at the rate of one buffoonish opera per month, by a "servile herd" of imitators. Offenbach, if he had been moderately successful instead of being what he has been for years past the most popular composer in Europe, would have escaped the constant and often well-deserved attacks of which he has been made the mark. For, in attacking the great composer of the period, critics have really been directing their arrows or their yard measures at the public, over which he has exercised everywhere the sort of influence attributed to his own Orpheus performing "aux enfers." If Offenbach had written nothing but Orphée aux Enfers, Barbe-Bleue, La Belle Hélène, and the historical Grand Duchess, his success might have been forgiven him. No one has preserved the programme of the pieces played before Napoleon and the "pitful of kings" at Erfurt; but the Grand Duchess will always be known in connection with the great meeting of sovereigns held at Paris in the memorable year of the Exhibition, only to be surpassed in significance and importance by the still more memorable year of the war. Counting crowned heads and heirs-apparent together, every throne in Europe must have been represented at the performances of Mdlle. Schneider of Gerolstein—which, by the way, is no imaginary place, but a little town in the Trèves district, which, if the French had been able to execute their original plan of campaign, must at once have fallen into their hands. The furore caused by the Grand Duchess had its effect not only upon the very public which it had roused, and which demanded to be roused again, but also on the composers of France, who, finding that opera bouffe had become the rage, cultivated it to the exclusion of everything else. Hervé arose and produced the masterpiece originally known as V'lan dans l'Œil, which afterwards received the more refined title of L'Œil Crevé. L'Œil Crevé was succeeded by Le petit Faust; Jonas followed in the wake of Hervé, and Delibes in that of Jonas. The company of burlesque composers was further strengthened by the accession of Lecocq, who, like Delibes and Jonas, had previously sought reputation as a composer, not, perhaps of serious, but at least of graceful music. As for Hervé, it was reported that he had been an organist, and some even said that he had written a Mass. Nothing of this kind could be alleged against Offenbach. He at least forsook no other style for that of the opera bouffe, which he himself invented. Mon verre n'est pas grand, he might say, in the words of a man slightly his superior; mais je bois dans mon verre; and it is rather hard for him that a number of other composers with no glasses of their own should insist on joining in his libations. The alleged origin of Offenbach's addiction to opera-bouffe is curious enough, but quite intelligible. He was for many years orchestral conductor at the Théâtre Français, where the classical personages of the French pseudo-classical drama, with their interminable tirades, are said to have inspired him with an antipathy to which he gave ironical expression, first in Orphée, and afterwards with the greatest possible freedom in La Belle Hélène. His action had been preceded and provoked by suffering, and it was perfectly spontaneous; for which reason one can find some pleasure in listening to Offenbach even now, after having had a surfeit of works more or less Offenbachian in character. He is at once the Verdi and Gounod of the minor operatic drama, resembling the former rather than the latter in his copiousness of production. When he ceases to write, the particular sort of school founded by him will be on the point of ceasing to exist. Meanwhile, the management of the St. James's Theatre, to make our acquaintance with the master complete, have just brought out Les Braconniers, his latest work. They have also revived La Belle Hélène, and a performance of La Grande Duchesse has been given. Thus, beginning with Lecocq, who is less an imitator of Offenbach than any of the other composers of opera bouffe, they are ending with Offenbach himself; and whatever may be thought of either or both of these composers, it is quite certain that ample justice has been done to them by the St. James's company. No opera bouffe company that had previously appeared in England included three such artists as Mdlle. Desclauzas, who takes her benefit to-night in La Grande Duchesse, Mdlle. Fonti, the heroine of Les Braconniers, and Mdlle. Luigini, who has recently appeared with Mdlle. Desclauzas in La Fille de Madame Angot (an operetta—not strictly speaking an opera bouffe—which, all things considered, must be looked upon as the great success of the season); while M. Mario-Widmer, who appears in everything, has, in his own special line, scarcely his equal in Europe. He cannot be quite so droll as Dupuis in the part of Fritz, which the authors and composers of La Grande Duchesse had designed for that actor with particular care; but we can scarcely fancy him surpassed in his own parts in La Fille de Madame Angot and Les Cent Vierges, both of which works are known to have been written for the company performing at the St. James's Theatre, and now on the point of performing there for the last time this season.

Shaber Silber.

---

THE EMPRESS MARIA THERESA AT PRINCE ESTERHAZY'S.*

By C. F. Pohl.

(Continued from page 511.)

In Josephus Gregorius Werner, a first-rate counterpuntist who distinguished himself as a composer especially of sacred music, Paul Anton found his first chapelmaster. Werner trained his small chorus with iron pertinacity, as is proved by his masses and less important church compositions, which even now would be a fiery ordeal for the very best choir. Profane music was not performed under his rule (the solitary exception is an "Ecloga Pastorale," poetry by the Abbate Giovanni Claudio Pasquini, music by Francesco Maggiore, performed in the year 1755 in honour of the Prince's birthday). But new life was to be introduced into matters in 1761. It was Paul Anton that associated with Werner—who had grown old, ailing, and wonderfully tetchy—a young composer, Joseph Haydn, whose fresh power was destined to mark an epoch and spread his name throughout all countries. Prince Nicholas received from his brother the musical establishment, which had been enlarged a short time previously, and did all in his power to raise it still more. He himself was especially fond of playing an instrument now become almost a myth, the Baryton (a stringed instrument similar to the Viola da Gamba), for which he engaged two virtuosos, Karl Franz and Andreas Lidl. He gave Haydn, as his Kapellmeister, repeated proofs of his esteem, raising his salary, making him a present of a house, which he had twice rebuilt after it was burnt down, and, even when he left, bestowing on him a considerable pension. Like Johann Joachim Quantz, who composed for his pupil, King Friedrich II., about 300 solo pieces for the flute, Haydn wrote an extraordinary number of works for the favourite instrument of his Prince, who marked his satisfaction at this, also, by especial presents of money. The favourable impression made by these compositions on the Prince was sometimes, in the most kindly fashion, turned to account by Haydn for his subordinates in the band. Thus, on one occasion, when seeking to procure the remission of the punishment pronounced for some offence on two of his musicians, he forwarded a number of "new barytone pieces" simultaneously with his petition, a fact which shows him in all his truly touching amiability. A vast deal has been written to the effect that the appointment at Prince Esterhazy's was an obstacle to the rapid development of Haydn's powers; that the Prince selfishly used

* From the Neue Freie Presse.

Digitized by Google

him up, and so on. To this we may reply that the more retired his life, the more contented was Haydn, and if complaints of his seclusion now and then escaped him, and if, especially, he cast yearning looks towards Italy, he confessed that this very seclusion must render him original. We must not overlook the advantage he enjoyed in always having at his command the orchestra, with which he could try his compositions while still fresh from the pen. The new productions of his art could not remain unknown to him, as he sometimes resided in Vienna, and just in the same way he could not help becoming acquainted with every celebrity; for every artist sought him out. With regard to his pecuniary position, he might consider himself lucky, if we compare with that position the wretched circumstances of Mozart. If, too, through his wife's extravagance, his money sometimes ran short, his compositions quickly supplied him with more—his name soon became so highly prized that he could dictate to his publishers. With regard to his princely patrons, they must be thanked for having afforded him an appropriate field of action, especially at a period when he was altogether unknown. What did Vienna, or those beyond the "Empire" do for him, even when his reputation had extended to all countries? His works were performed, but no fitting post could be found for him. Yet, when George III endeavoured to secure him for London, Haydn, like Mozart, remained true to his prince. To the very last period of his life, he referred with thankful heart to the princely house, and especially to the "good and magnanimous" Prince Nicholas.

(To be continued.)

BEETHOVEN'S PASTORAL SYMPHONY.

The undated autograph of this extraordinary and most influential masterpiece affords no proof of the period of its composition. Collateral circumstances, however, point directly to the spring of 1808 as the time, and Heiligenstadt as the place of its nativity. Nay, Schindler records a conversation with Beethoven, in 1823, when the composer pointed out an elm-tree on the way from that village to Grinzing, under which he sat, when planning the Andante, listening to yellow-hammers, nightingales, quails, and cuckoos, and weaving their notes into its melody. The first performance of the work was at Beethoven's concert in Vienna on Thursday, Dec. 22, 1808. It was then announced as "A Symphony, under the title, 'Recollections of Country Life,' in F major (No. 5)." The concert consisted entirely of previously unheard music by the master, one of the pieces being the Symphony in C minor, which the advertisement defines as "No. 6." The unexplained discrepancy between the numbering of the two companion-works in this announcement and in the printed scores, is rectified by the inscription in the author's hand, on the first page of the Pastorale, in which, both in Italian and in German, he describes this as his "6th Symphony." The present work was published in May, 1809, the Symphony in C minor having been printed in April. The first performance in London of the Sinfonia Pastorale was at a concert of Griesbach's, the hautboyist. It was first played at a Philharmonic concert, June 5, 1820, and it has been repeated every year.

The programme of the concert at which this work was first played differs from the advertisement in its definition of the piece, and from the printed score, in its description of some of the movements. The first is important, as illustrating particularly the purpose of the composition, and as bearing strongly upon the general subject of descriptive or imitative music—"Pastoral Symphony (No. 5), more an expression of feeling than a painting." This is the avowal of an intention to record the author's impressions in the several situations to which the work is referred, and the denial of any design to produce a picture, in tones, of the situations themselves, or the objects that filled them. Every work of art is a statement, more or less indefinite, of the impressions or emotions of the artists during its composition, or at the moment of its conception. It is this fact which distinguishes a picture from a reflection in a mirror, a drama from a short-hand report. In the present instance, the artist has broken through the reserve with which musicians mostly veil the source of their impressions, and has declared what scenes and circumstances prompted the current of his thoughts; but while showing how he thought and felt, as distinguished from the thoughts and feelings of other men under the influence of the open country, the fresh air, and the sounds and sights of nature, he disclaims all pretence of representing to the oral sense what can alone be obvious to the visual.

The technical specialty of the Pastoral Symphony is the extreme simplicity of the means employed throughout, save only in that portion which depicts the terror, the amazement excited by a tempest. There is no hint of scholarship, either in contrapuntal contrivance or in harmonic research; and yet there is the most wonderful token of the master's deep and clear insight into the capabilities of those resources which he deemed exclusively appropriate to his subject, in the marvellous effects he has drawn from them. In all but the one exceptional movement, passing notes upon continuous chords are almost the only discords employed, save those natural harmonies peculiar to the fifth of the key, which are found out by untutored musicians, who sing or play together a fifth, a third, and a seventh, and make each proceed by its just progression, and are unable to account for the combination save by their own instinctive impulse. Not only do these combinations of harmonics—known as the notes of the limited and broken scale of the horn—prevail to the exclusion of other dissonances; the philosophical truths of harmonic relationship are probed in the free progression from fifth to fifth at those parts of the scale at which nature, defying the indiscriminate laws of the schools, warrants this exceptional progression by the good effect she gives to it, and the simple and peculiarly natural character of the music is largely due to the daring but successful application of the phenomena. The abundant employment of the tonic and dominant, the more frequent use of harmonic roots for bass notes than of inverted, chords, and the numerous instances of recourse to a pedal (or continued bass note through various harmonies), are all characteristic of the natural simplicity by which this work is distinguished. Further must be noted the frequently very long continuance of one harmony, and the sometimes manifold repetition of one melodic figure, perhaps of a single bar's extent. On the other hand, there are some changes of key which exceed the conventional limits of closest relationship—for instance, that from F to D in the first strain of the Scherzo; but this, and others more or less like it, are based upon the natural principle which binds in close affinity two chords, and consequently two keys, of which the third of the former (as A in the chord of F) is either the fifth or the root of the latter (as A in the chord of A or in the chord of D). Much as one must reverence the constant evidence this work presents of the perception of the fundamental principles of musical sound, and the application of these principles to musical art, one must still more admire the wonderful self-reliance that emboldened the master to discard all elaboration, all contrivance, all the means by which he, like other musicians, usually coloured and enforced his ideas, and restrict himself in this setting forth of the impressions of nature to the use of the simplest natural means, and these in their simplest and most natural forms. Who else than Beethoven could have dared to conduct movement after movement of a singularly extensive composition, in the belief that every thought it comprises was so truthful to its purpose as to be wholly self-supporting—wholly independent of the accessories by which, ordinarily if not universally, musical expression is defined and enhanced? The real gauge of how much is in this marvellous work, the calculation of how little is in it; and the great marvel is that so much is made of so little. G. A. Macfarren.*

LONDON WELSH CHORAL UNION SCHOLARSHIP.

At a general meeting of the members of the London Welsh Choral Union, held on Monday evening, the 28th of June, the following resolution was passed:—

Proposed by Mr. John Thomas (honorary conductor), seconded by Mr. Hugh Owen (honorary treasurer), and unanimously carried—"That a Scholarship be established in connection with this Society, to be called, 'The London Welsh Choral Union Scholarship,' for the purpose of affording a musical education, at the Royal Academy of Music, to any one of the most talented and promising of the young members of the Choir, until that education shall be considered completed."

The examination of the candidates (who must all be from among the present members of the choir—male or female—and under twenty years of age) will take place early in September next, in order to enable the successful competitor to enter the Royal Academy of Music upon its re-opening in the course of that month.

The first year's subscription towards the scholarship is generously guaranteed by Mr. John Thomas, honorary conductor.

Lines for Music.

Once more unto the Hall, dear friend,
(If you the pass will kindly send)
On Monday next our way we'll wend.
As for S. B.,
I would that he
Had ears to hear, like you and we,
Beethoven's charms in A or B.
To A. S. Sullivan, Esq.

* From the Analytical and Historical Programme of the Philharmonic Society.

Digitized by Google

LA FILLE DE MDME. ANGOT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—Each successive representation of La Fille de Mdme. Angot reveals anew the freshness and brilliancy of the music. It is true that the "gems" do not come often, but when they do, their tunefulness and originality are delightful. We are not treated, after waiting an hour, to a "rechauffée." The music swings along, and has that unmistakable "go" in it which will assuredly make it lasting. The performance on Saturday last, at which I was present, was excellent. Mdlles. Desclaussas and Luigini, sang and acted charmingly, as did Mdme. Delorme. The part of Ange Pitou suits M. Mario Widmer perfectly, and Messrs. Jolly and Charlier have never shone to more advantage. I am, dear Mr. Editor, yours faithfully, MŒLIBUS.

July 28th, 1873.

—o—

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Miss Edwards presents her compliments to the Editor of the Musical World, and would esteem it a favour if a slight error could be corrected in his valuable report of her concert, July 8th. It was stated Herr Lehmeyer was the only accompanist on the occasion, whilst Signor Alessandro Romilli, a most clever and finished pianist, shared the accompaniments with Herr Lehmeyer.

100, Ebury Street, Eaton Square,
July 24, 1873.

—o—

WAIFS.

Signor Arditi had the honour of an invitation from their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess of Wales, to the garden party at Chiswick, last week.

The number of pianos exported from the port of Marseilles, and manufactured there, or in Paris, Lyons, or Nimes, during 1872 was 1,420, representing a value of 1,134,949f. In 1852 only 341 instruments, of the value of 272,837f., were shipped; and in 1862, only 600, worth 478,575f.

ROSSINI ON GERMAN MUSIC.—The conversation turning upon German music, I asked Rossini, "Which was his favourite amongst the great masters?" Of Beethoven he said: I take it twice in the week, Haydn four times, and Mozart every day. You will tell me that Beethoven is a Colossus that often gives you blows in the ribs, while Mozart is always adorable. It is that he has had the chance of going very young to Italy at a time when they still sang well." Of Weber he says, "He has talent for selling by retail."—The Life of Moscheles.

People are speaking on all sides of the immense sums obtained for modern pictures by dealers, prices quite out of proportion to the real value of the works, and not conferring the slightest benefit on the unfortunate artists, who were probably content with a bare remuneration for time and labour. There is no line of business where a greater share of the profits is absorbed by the distributor than in the picture-dealing trade. It is the public who are at fault in not going direct to the artists, and giving commissions for pictures straight from the easel. By not relying on their own judgment, purchasers fill the pockets of a class of middlemen who, as a body, have no sufficient claims to encouragement.

CHOPIN.—Moscheles' studies of Chopin's music leads him to make the following observation: "I gladly pass some of my leisure hours of an evening in cultivating an acquaintance with Chopin's Studies and his other compositions. I am charmed with their originality and the natural colouring of his subjects. My thoughts, however, and through them my fingers, stumble at certain hard, inartistic, and, to me, inconceivable modulations. On the whole I find his music often too sweet, not manly enough, and hardly the work of a profound musician."—The Life of Moscheles.

The chief of the claque in the Vienna theatre An der Wien, Herr Panovetz, died some time since, leaving a considerable fortune, gained in the exercise of his profession. The members of the theatre, from highest to lowest, were in the habit of employing him, and even used to take him on their provincial tours. Until recently, Panovetz led the claque at the Carl Theatre as well as at the theatre An der Wien, but the new manager of the Carl decided that his services should be dispensed with at the former, as he would not give up his post at the latter. His success in obtaining applause for his clients was so great that he was paid very handsomely, especially at first performances, when the actresses and their admirers loaded him with presents. He had as many as forty young men under him when thought necessary that the applause should be unusually vigorous; but he generally employed a smaller number, preferring "quality to quantity."

Another German band, that of the Royal Saxon Sharpshooters of Dresden, Prince George Regiment—tempted by the lucrative example of the Prussian and French bands here (Boston) last summer—have come to this country, under the direction of Herr Hans Girod, "Kapellmeister of his Majesty the King of Saxony, and cornet-a-piston virtuoso." They gave their first concert on the 27th ult., in the New York Academy of Music, and, according to the Musik-Zeitung, "made quite a fiasco." The composition of the band is said to be coarse and brassy, consisting of metallic clarionets, cornets-a-piston, flügelhörner, trumpets, trompetinas, tenor horns, French horns, trombones, tubas, and helicon.—Dwight.

ROSSINI ON THE VOICE AND PIANO.—In the course of our conversation Rossini was full of hard hitting truths, and brilliant satire on the present study and method of vocalization. "I don't want to hear anything more of it," he said, "they scream! All that I want is a resonant full sound, not a screeching voice. I care not whether it be for speaking or singing; everything in fact to sound melodious." He then spoke of the pleasure he felt in studying the piano; and "if it were not presumption," he added, "in composing for that instrument; in playing, however, his fourth and fifth fingers would not do their duty properly." He complains that the piano is, now-a-days, only maltreated. "They not only stump the piano, but the arm-chair, and even the floor."—The Life of Moscheles.

CRYSTAL PALACE SCHOOL OF ART, SCIENCE, AND LITERATURE.—The award of prizes to art students in the ladies' division of this school was made on Saturday. Mr. Lewis Haghe and Mr. H. G. Hine officiated as judges of the water-colour paintings produced by lady students in the class conducted by Mr. Edward Goodhall. The silver medal was given to Miss Farquhar; the certificate of merit to Miss Mary Fownes Turner, and special commendation to Miss Thwaites. Mr. Joseph Durham, A.R.A., and Mr. T. Thornycroft were judges of the sculpture produced by members of the class for modelling in clay, of which Mr. W. K. Shenton is master. The silver medal was awarded to Miss Helena Teulon for a model of the "Venus of Milo;" the certificate of merit to Miss Macduff. The judges also bestowed commendation on models by both the above-named ladies, as well as works by Miss Kate Green and Miss Constance Hopcraft. The drawings and models were afterwards exhibited to students and their friends in the private studio of the school.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Digitized by Google

MIGNON.

Opera, in Three Acts,

BY

AMBROISE THOMAS.

The Opera complete, for Voice and Piano, with Italian and French words, net 20s.

All the following Songs, Duets, &c., can be obtained at HALF the marked PRICES, either with Italian or with French Words :—

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | STANZE (Basso)—"Fuggitivo e tremante"... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. | ARIA (Tenore)—"Si, solingo ognor pel mondo" ... | 6 | 0 |
| 3. | ROMANZA (Mezzo Soprano)—"Non conosci il bel suol" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 4. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Tenore)—"Leggiadre rondinelle" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 5. | TRIO—"Riconoscente amore, se nel cor" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 6. | STROFE (Soprano)—"Chi m'ama or venga meco" | 4 | 6 |
| 7. | MADRIGALE—"Bella Diva, per pieta" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 8. | DUETTO (Soprano e Tenore)—"Non darti alcun pensier" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 9. | VALZA DEL DUETTO—"Gai complimenti, plausi e sospir" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| 10. | STIRIANA (Mezzo Soprano)—"Io conosco un garzoncel" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 11. | MELODIA (Tenore)—"Addio Mignon fa core" ... | 5 | 0 |
| 12. | RECIT. (Cantabile) (Mezzo Soprano)—"Ella e la presso a lui" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 13. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Basso)—"Sofferto hai tu? conosci il duol?" ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 14. | POLACCA (Soprano)—"Io son Titania la bionda" | 6 | 0 |
| 15. | CORO—"Or—sù sciogliam le vele" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 16. | NINNA-NANNA (Basso)—"Del suo cor calmai le pene" ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 17. | ROMANZA (Tenore)—"Ah non crede a l'afflitta nel vergin suo candore" ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 18. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Tenore)—"Ah! son felice! io son rapita" ... ... ... ... | 7 | 6 |
| 19. | PREGHIERA (Mezzo Soprano)—"O vergin Maria il Signore sta conte" ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 20. | FORLANA (Soprano)—"Finche resti al prato un fior" | 6 | 0 |
| 21. | ARIA (Soprano) —"A meraviglia, a meraviglia" ... | 6 | 0 |
| 22. | RONDO GAVOTTA (Mezzo Soprano)—"In veder l'amata stanza d'alle" ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |

N.B.—All the above Songs are published in different Keys, to suit all Voices.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

Arrangements for the Pianoforte of the above Opera, by the best Composers, can be obtained from the Publishers.

NEW PIANO MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.

WEDDING WALTZ. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

LA CAPRICIEUSE. Morceau de Salon. By GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

VALSE DE BRAVOURE. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

STAR OF THE CIRQUE. Lancers. (Illustrated Title). Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

BEFORE THE WIND. Galop. Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

MARCHE BRESILLIENNE. Composed by IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

STELLA. Grande Valse de Concert. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

BIANCA. Mazurka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 2s.

HAIDÉE. Polka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 3s.

NEW SONGS.

UN DESIO. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

LA VISIONE. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

IO LA VIDI. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

ROW, GONDOLIER, Barcarolle. Sung by Miss JOSÉ SHERRINGTON. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

M'HA LASCIATO, Stornello. Cantata da Madame CONNEAU. Composto dal Cavaliere FABIO CAMPANA. Price 3s.

THE MELTING OF THE SNOW. Duet. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE and Madame PATEY, at the London Ballad Concerts. Composed by HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

MID THE SCENTED CLOVER. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

AH! WELL A-DAY. Song. Composed by JESSICA RANKIN. Price 3s.

LA BACCANTE. Canzone. Cantata da Madame SINICO. Composto dal ETTORE FIORI. Price 4s. (With a portrait of Madame Sinico).

THE BIRD'S LOVE SONG (with Clarionet Obbligato). By HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

THE MARINER. Sung by Signor FOLI. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

ROSE-LEAVES.

MORCEAU ÉLÉGANT.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

Played by the Composer at his concert with great success.

LES TROMPETTES DE LA GUERRE.

MORCEAU MILITAIRE.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LA TRAVIATA.

FANTASIA ON VERDI'S OPERA.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

SOUVENIR DE LA MADELEINE.

MORCEAU SUR LES OFFERTOIRES DE LEFÉBURE-WELY.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

WALTER MAYNARD'S SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION.

MUSIC COPY BOOKS,

Nos. 1 to 6, Price 6d. each.

TRANSPARENT MUSIC SLATE.

Price 3s.

A knowledge of the construction of Music is acquired in the readiest and most simple manner by this method of teaching.

No attempt is made to introduce a new theory, either in the Copy Books or Transparent Slate.

Music being acknowledged as a universal language, its orthodox notation, rules, and signs, are explained and illustrated according to a plan which any novice can understand, and by which they cannot fail to become indelibly impressed upon the memory.

The system, although but recently published, is already approved and encouraged by every reliable authority upon the subject of musical education.

To beginners its simplicity renders it invaluable; to those who have acquired certain mechanical or vocal facility, but who are deficient in musical knowledge, it has proved more useful than any other method of education, owing to the facilities it offers of self-help.

The Music Copy Books contain a progressive course of instruction in music, leading up to some of the most advanced branches of harmony.

SEQUEL TO THE ABOVE—Price 6d.

KEY TO THE SEQUEL—Price 6d.

The following quotations from the Press show the favourable reception with which the new system has met from the most influential Art Critics of the day:—

"Mr. Walter Maynard makes a very novel application of a very familiar help to knowledge. The system is of manifest value. It impresses 'hard facts' upon the mind in a fashion not less easy than agreeable."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Walter Maynard makes the study of music a pleasing amusement, and the early tasks of students delightful. He has cleared away a great deal of difficulty in their paths, and made intelligible much that would otherwise be dark and obscure."—News of the World.

"We could wish to see this excellent system of Mr. Maynard's followed in the public schools of the country The necessity of teaching music seems to us palpable, and the necessity once admitted, can there be a better mode of instructing it than by the system which Mr. Maynard has originated? The instructions are simple and easy to retain in the mind. Mr. Maynard smooths every difficulty that can be smoothed."—Lloyd's.

"The means of obtaining knowledge are interesting and agreeable, and the knowledge thus obtained will be solid and lasting. Time and labour are recognized, thought and intention are inculcated, encouraged and rewarded."—Orchestra.

"To schools and teachers the system will be invaluable, and for classes it offers advantages that no other system possesses."—Weekly Times.

"That part of the work devoted to harmony will be especially welcome to all teachers who, while anxious to give their pupils some intelligent notion of what music really is, have found great difficulty in finding suitable instructions."—Echo.

"The observations of the author, and his instructions for the pianoforte, harmony, and vocalization, are admirable. Assuredly, we wish him success in this, his new scheme of teaching music."—Evening Standard.

"Calculated largely to facilitate the task of popular musical education. The plan is a novel one, the chief principle of which is the exercise of the pupil's memory by first copying the exercise at the head of one page, and then writing it entirely from recollection."—Daily News.

"We consider it an easy and excellent way of obtaining a complete knowledge of music, with comparatively little trouble."—Dispatch.

"These books may be regarded in a two-fold capacity—first, as books of ordinary instruction; second, as making an extraordinary application of a familiar educational device. Their value in both respects is manifest. The lessons are comprehensive and clearly expressed, so that the student finds all that it is necessary for him to know in the early stage of his career. We, therefore, strongly recommend these books, both for home and school use."—Musical World.

"We have no doubt that Mr. Maynard's work will be adopted by teachers, whose labour it will be found to simplify very greatly, while it will materially aid the student."—Manchester Guardian.

"It will probably form a greater help to the acquisition of music than any educational work with the same object that has yet been published."—Leeds Mercury.

"Mr. Walter Maynard has done a good service to the students of music."—Leamington Courier.

"Particularly suited to those disposed to the practice of self-help, as well as to those who can afford the aid of a professor."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"We highly recommend these books to the attention of music teachers, and those who wish to learn music easily, cheaply, and thoroughly. No such cheap and able class books have been before seen by us."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"A very useful idea, that will lighten the drudgery of music."—Malvern News.

"It is impossible to praise too highly this series of Copy Books. If anything will induce a young pupil to prosecute a progressive study of music, these Copy Books may be relied upon to do so."—Glasgow Daily Herald.

"The plan is excellent, the labour imposed is very trifling, and if the exercises are carefully written they will be a great help in enabling the pupil to remember what has been previously learned."—Birmingham Morning News.

"The Copy Book feature, which requires the learner to transcribe what is put before him, and to commit to paper numerous and valuable exercises, is an advantage apparent at first sight, especially with regard to the studies in notation and harmony."—Sunday Times.

MAY BE HAD OF

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, New Bond St., London,

Or of any Musicseller in Town or Country.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

HUTCHINGS & ROMER'S LIST OF SONGS

JUST PUBLISHED.

FRANZ ABT.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| ROSE OF ROSES ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| THE SONG OF LOVE ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| O FATHER, PROTECT HIM ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| MY MESSENGERS ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| THE CONFESSION ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| HAST THOU A THOUGHT FOR THE WANDERER | 3 | 0 |

The Words of these songs are by MISS HAVERGAL.

CIRO PINSUTI.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOU GAVEST ME A FLOWER ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| HAPPY AS A WILD BIRD ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| THOU ANGEL OF MY DREAMS ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| FOLLOW ME GAILY ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| OVER THE OCEAN ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

VIRGINIA GABRIEL.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THAT EVENING (A Gondola song) ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| SAY, BIRD OF SUMMER ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| ANGEL MUSIC ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| THE MUSIC, MOTHER, OF THY VOICE ... | 4 | 0 |
| O, LET ME SLEEP ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |

JOSEPH L. ROECKEL.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| KATIE, MY QUEEN ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| THE OFT-TOLD TALE ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| LITTLE MAY (In C and D) ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| I STOOD ALONE (Recollection) ... ... | 4 | 0 |

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 2, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51.—No. 33. SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE, This Day (SATURDAY), August 16. In the Afternoon there will be a Special Performance of Verdi's Grand Opera, "IL TROVATORE," and other entertainments. In the evening, A GRAND CHINESE FETE and FEAST OF LANTERNS. Two Illuminated Pyramids will be erected on the Second Terrace, where the lawns will be opened for promenade, and the fountains will be played continuously; military music; the flowers, now in luxuriant beauty, will be illuminated by Chinese lanterns, and the margins of the fountain basins will be decorated in like manner. At the conclusion of the Fete the landscape will be lighted up by tinted fires. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—CHINESE FETE and FEAST of LANTERNS.—Extraordinary Chinese Illumination, the most extensive ever attempted; including two Pyramids of Light, each 100 feet high. Tea will be served on the Terrace.—THIS EVENING.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—FORESTERS' GREAT GATHERING on TUESDAY Next.

CRYSTAL PALACE, TUESDAY Next, FORESTERS' GREAT DAY.—The special Entertainments and proceedings will include Orchestral Concerts by the Company's unrivalled Band, conducted by Mr. Manns. Blondin, the Hero of Niagara, will make his only appearance at the Crystal Palace this season, and will perform on the high rope. A great Fountain display, including the Temples, Cataracts (upper series), circular Fountains, and great jets, 280 feet high. Procession of the Order, with Insignia, in the Gardens. Two great Balloons will ascend. Arrangements will be made for open air dancing, to music, in various parts of the grounds. Aquatic Sports and Swimming Matches will take place on the lake and lower waters. Boating, Cricketing, Quoits, Swings, Roundabouts, Trapezes, Archery, Rifle Shooting, and numberless out-door amusements will be provided. Military bands will play in the Gardens and on the Great Orchestra. Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke will give a special performance, including the Spiritualists' manifestations, and the great Box Trick. Romah, Mexican Athlete of the Golden Wing, in his marvellous aerial feats; the Famous B.B.B. Minstrels, and many other attractions. Doors open on this occasion at 9 a.m. Special arrangements by road and rail. Admission, One Shilling, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

"PEACEFULLY SLUMBER."

MADAME PATEY will sing Randegger's admired Song, "PEACEFULLY SLUMBER," at the Birmingham Festival.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR. WILFORD MORGAN will sing his popular Ballad, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," throughout his tour in the autumn with Madame Lemmens-Sherrington.

THE KIBBLE CRYSTAL ART PALACE, ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, Glasgow.—The Treasurer will be happy to hear from first-class Vocalists, Instrumentalists, and Concert touring parties, stating terms and dates vacant, for Engagements in Glasgow. Apply to Mr. Robert Downie, 131, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

These Instruments are now acknowledged to be the best for use in Church, Chapel, School-room, or Drawing-room. See Testimonials from Sir Julius Benedict, and other eminent Musicians.

PRICES, 20 TO 200 GUINEAS.

Illustrated Lists Gratis and Post Free.

Sole Agents:

METZLER & CO., 37, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

THE CHEQUE BANK, LIMITED,

HAS COMMENCED BUSINESS AT ITS OFFICES,

PALL MALL EAST, & 124, CANNON STREET, E.C.

The GUARANTEE FUND of £100,000 CONSOLS has been invested in the names of the following

Trustees.

ROBERT DALGLISH, Esq., M.P. | SAMUEL MORLEY, Esq., M.P.
CUTHBERT E. ELLISON, Esq., J.P. | W. H. SMITH, Esq., M.P.

THE cheques of the Cheque Bank supply a new, safe, and universally applicable method of paying and transmitting small amounts of £10 and under.

Each cheque will bear stamped on its face the maximum amount for which it can be filled up, but the maximum amount must be previously deposited, and thus no account can be overdrawn. All cheques are crossed and payable only to order.

The cheques are supplied in books of ten each, costing 1s., being 10d. Government duty, and 2d. Bank commission.

Application for cheques to be made at the offices as above, or at any of the following Bankers, where the funds of the Cheque Bank will be deposited:—

THE BANK OF ENGLAND.
THE WESTERN BRANCH OF THE BANK OF ENGLAND, Burlington Gardens, Bond Street.
GLYN, MILLS & CO.
WILLIAMS, DEACON & CO.
NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK OF ENGLAND.
DIMSDALE, FOWLER, BARNARD & CO.
CONSOLIDATED BANK, LIMITED.
ALEXANDERS, CUNLIFFES & CO.
NATIONAL BANK OF SCOTLAND.
ALLIANCE BANK, LIMITED.
JAY COOKE, McCULLOCH & CO.
HERRIES, FARQUHAR & CO.
R. TWINING & CO.
CITY BANK.
UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND.
MANCHESTER AND SALFORD BANK.
MANCHESTER AND COUNTY BANK.

By order,
S. J. NICOLLE, Secretary and Accountant.

Pall Mall East, S.W., 11th August, 1872.

LET THE HILLS RESOUND.—The composition of Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, so eminent in itself, and rendered with so much spirit, that the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the whole royal party, demanding a repetition, it was given a second time. See the Times, July 16. Post free for 4 stamps. As a Pianoforte solo, by the Composer, 24 stamps.

W. T. WRIGHTON'S BEST SONGS.—"Thy Voice is near," 4s. "Her Bright Smile," 4s. "Only one to bless and cheer me," 4s. "The Wishing Cap," 4s. "The Liquid Gem," 4s. "O would I were a Fairy Queen," 3s. "Be Happy, and Never Despair," 3s. "What though thy sun be clouded," 3s.—London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. All post free at half price in stamps.

HENRY W. GOODBAN'S "GIRLS AND BOYS' OWN BOOK FOR THE PIANOFORTE." An easy, concise, and complete Tutor. Post free for 32 Stamps. "Among the many instruction books for pianoforte playing which have come under our notice, we have never met with one so easily intelligible to youthful students. Teachers and parents will find this a most valuable acquisition."—Observer. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

QUACK-QUACK.—The immensely exciting WILD DUCK GALOP, introduced nightly in the comic opera of the "Wonderful Duck," at the Opera-Comique, and vociferously encored. Can be sung as well as played. 18 Stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

"MY WHITE ROSE,"

SONG,

(in F and in B flat).

Written and Composed by LOUISA GRAY.

Price 4s.

London: J. B. CRAMER & Co., 201, Regent Street, W.

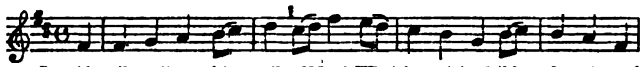
Digitized by Google

Just Published,

"SWEET HAWTHORN TIME."

WORDS BY (SONG.) MUSIC BY

WM. HENDERSON. EMILE BERGER.



Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May! What joys at-tend thine ad-vent gay!

Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May!
What joys attend thine advent gay!
On every tree the birdies sing,
From hill and dale glad echoes ring;
The lark, inspir'd, to Heav'n ascends,
The gurgling brook in beauty wends
By mossy bank and grassy brae,
Where violets-bloom and lambkins play.
Delightful Spring—sweet month of May
What joys attend thine advent gay!

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"A pleasing song, entitled 'Sweet Hawthorn Time,' . . . . . would be a trump card' in the hands of any amateur able to do it justice."—Daily Telegraph.

Just Published.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"

"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"

("Connais tu le pays.")

Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,

In the Opera of "MIGNON."

The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W

"THE PET LINNET,"

BALLAD,

Sung with great applause by Miss LINA GLOVER at the Royal Albert Hall.

Composed by J. W. GLOVER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MONS. FAURE'S NEW SONGS.

"VALSE DES FEUILLES" .. .. .. .. .. Price, net, 2s. 6d.
"LE PRESSOIR" .. ... .. .. .. .. .. ,, 2s. 6d.

Composed and Sung by J. FAURE.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE VALLON NATAL,"

MELODIE.

De Mdme. WILLY DE ROTHSCHILD.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CUPID'S APPEAL,"

BALLAD,

And the Sequel,

"MARRIAGE BELLS,"

SONG.

Price 3s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW VOCAL DUET.

"THE LARK,"

Duet, for two Mezzo-Soprano Voices,

Dedicated to the Misses EDITH and GERTRUDE HOLMAN-ANDREWS.

Composed by IGNACE GIBSONE.

Price 3s.

"Messrs. Chas. Swain and Ignace Gibsone deserve the thanks of teachers and the public for writing and composing a most graceful duet for two sopranos. "The Lark" deserves to be successful as it is neither puerile nor over difficult."—Graphic, Aug. 2, 1873.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG.

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"OUR DARLING,"

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

NEW SONG BY SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

"LOVE AT SEA,"

Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Composed by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE RAT DE VILLE,"

BY

"LE RAT DES CHAMPS,"

(FABLE DE LAFONTAINE,)

Chantée par JULES LEFORT.

Musique de ETIENNE REY.

Price 4s.

(Edition de L. Escudier, Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ST. PATRICK AT TARA,"

CANTATA,

With characteristic words from Ossian, Moore, Clarence, Mangan, &c.

Composed, and dedicated by express permission, to

His Royal Highness PRINCE ARTHUR PATRICK.

By J. W. GLOVER.

Price 5s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"HAMLET."

By AMBROISE THOMAS.

As sung at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.

The Opera, complete, for Voice and Piano, with Italian or French words price 20s.
The Opera, complete, for Piano Solo .. .. .. .. .. price 12s.

All the vocal music (with Italian or French words) can be had separately, as well as arrangements for the Piano, by KETTERER, and other popular composers.

Also, OPHELIA'S SONG, and HAMLET'S DRINKING SONG, with English words, 4s. each.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

TWO DUETS

FOR

TWO PERFORMERS ON ONE PIANOFORTE,

No. 1, DUET IN G. No. 2, DUET IN F MINOR.

Price 3s. each.

Composed by HEINRICH STIEHL.

(Op. 73.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

ARABELLA GODDARD AT MELBOURNE.

(From the "Melbourne Argus," June 3rd.)

After a series of triumphs in the great capitals of the older world, Madame Arabella Goddard has made her appearance in Melbourne. There were untoward circumstances attending the conclusion of the long voyage which had to be undertaken before she could come to us, which she and all of us had to deplore at the time, but these are all forgotten now that she has been seen and heard. All that remains to do is to congratulate ourselves upon her appearance here, and to chronicle the success which attends her [in this place as it has done in all others that she has visited. By the same rule that genius belongs to no one country in particular, the possession of superlative skill as an executant in musical art is recognized by people of different countries and various languages as a quality that commands spontaneous and unqualified homage. We English have at all times answered to the touch of this power with a frank and ready response, and at no time have we done so with a better grace than to those gifted men and women who were born and trained outside the circle of our own home influences. In Madame Goddard we possess an artist who has proved in her own experience of foreign countries the truth of what we state, and now comes here as to a second home, so that we may show that we value native worth as it deserves to be prized. Madame Goddard does not at this stage of her career need criticism as to the quality of her performance; she has run the gauntlet of all that could be said on this subject by all the schools. Description may serve the purpose of those of our readers who have not seen and heard her; and even on this point it is not unlikely we may repeat that which has been said before at some other time in some other place, but nevertheless a local opinion is due to the lady as well as to the reader.

Mdme. Goddard, last night, selected Thalberg's Masaniello fantasia, the andante and allegretto movements from the Ne plus ultra sonata of Woelfl, and again, Thalberg's fantasia on "The Last Rose of Summer." In the first, she recalled to the long dormant memory of the listener the style of the master whose arrangement she reproduced so brilliantly; the tuneful "March" and the quaintly brilliant "Tarantella" from Auber's opera were played simultaneously, the one against the other, with the same clear reading and perfect precision that distinguished the performance of Thalberg himself. So, again, in the fantasia on "The Last Rose of Summer," the singing quality which that master was able above all others to impart to his touch in the performance of such subjects, was reproduced with an effect which surprised the listener as being so sweet to the ear and so appropriate to the theme, so unexpected as coming from an instrument of percussion, and so rarely heard, even when players of great ability are the performers. It was on the conclusion of this last piece that the audience rose to the full understanding of the whole merits of the circumstance. Madame Goddard had been handsomely received as was her due; she had been heartily recalled after each appearance, and that was no more than was to have been expected; but on this occasion she had to return amidst cheers and every demonstration of enthusiastic applause to receive the parting salute of an audience who thought they were bidding her farewell. There was no withstanding such an appeal as this, and Mdme. Goddard sat down again to her piano and gave Thalberg's arrangement of "Home, Sweet Home" with the same inimitable grace that distinguished her performance of the previous air. These pieces that we have named belonged to Thalberg, the other that we mentioned previously was from the pen of Woelfl, a contemporary of Beethoven, the greatest executant of his day, an extraordinary musical improvisatore and wayward genius, who subsided gradually from an honoured and prominent place in art, and died unfriended and almost unnoticed in London in the second decade of the present century. The old tune, "Life let us cherish," was the theme of the two movements played by Mdme. Goddard from Woelfl's Ne plus ultra sonata, the familiar nature of the subject, and the perfect execution of the variations which were superimposed upon it, compelling the rapt attention of the whole audience. Beethoven had Mdme. Gigot for sympathetic interpreter while he lived. Mdme. Goddard has resuscitated Woelfl by the manner in which she produces his work to her audience. As an executant she has attained, by a life-long practice, the mastery of the pianoforte manual. Intervals of no matter what unusual distance, passages in octaves of any degree of rapidity, diatonic and chromatic scale passages of any kind whatsoever, are to be mastered, as Mdme. Goddard has mastered them—by assiduous practice; but after this comes the exhibition of a quality in which only a great artist excels, and in which Mdme. Goddard is super-excellent. It is in the "touch" that lies the charm of Mdme. Goddard's playing. It is in this quality, innate and not to be acquired, that makes the wires vocal—that impresses the player's mind upon the merely mechanical instrument, and in so doing displays the possession of a talent that would be genius if it could create as well as it interprets. To listen to Mdme. Goddard's playing is to hear the realization and perfect expression in elegant accent, just emphasis, and sympathetic tone of the idea of the composer whose work she may be reading. The pianoforte used on the occasion was a magnificent grand, sent expressly by the eminent London firm of Broadwood & Sons.

On the conclusion of her last solo, Lady Bowen, through Major Pitt, A.D.C., very kindly presented her bouquet to Madame Goddard; and another very handsome present of the same kind, bearing the inscription on silken streamers, was also presented to the great artist on the platform by Mr. Hill. It was sent by another popular performer, whose pianoforte playing in Melbourne of late has done much to ingratiate him with the Melbourne audiences. It will please all lovers of music to learn that Madame Goddard will give other representations here in Melbourne on her return from Sydney.

> "Ad A. Goddard Testimonianza d'Ammirazione,"

A line only must suffice for the beautiful violin playing of Mr. Hill, which, next to the great attraction of the evening, was the portion of the concert most highly enjoyed. Miss Christian and Mr. Bucke were the vocalists. The former is an established favourite, and the latter is a recent arrival who has yet his spurs to win. Mr. Coleman Jacobs was the accompanyist.

His Excellency the Governor and Lady Bowen, accompanied by His Excellency Sir James and Lady Fergusson, honoured the performance with their presence, and remained until the conclusion of it.

The Shuffle of Cards.

More changes! more changes! Political Bards,
Tune your harps, and be-minstrel the Shuffle of Cards.
First, in pious condolement the fact be expressed—
Economical Baxter seeks "Baxter's Saint's Rest."
Then chant how the kind but too pliable Bruce
Turns Peer, and will go where he may be of use;
Succeeded at "Home" by the cynical wag,
Bob Lowe; how our Bobby will scold, skin, and scrag!
Next, sing how John Bright, having done his erratics,
Comes back, the bold Quaker, to quell the fanatics.
Then twist up your strings with your sturdiest screw—
Our William, too strong for one office, takes two;
As Premier puts forth his magnificent Powers,
And casts up the national books at odd hours.
Sing out, singing beggars, and wish him good luck:
His fiercest opponents must honour such pluck.
Then twangle us off all the little affairs,
How Dodson the national book-keeping shares;
How Arthur, the son of Sir Robert, comes in
To do what was done by the glorified Glyn;
And, lastly, play up an uproariously rare tune,
To hail the alleged new avatar of Ayrton;
Proclaim that our rated and very much roast man
Abandons the Ædile, and puts on the Postman.
(At least, so 'tis said.) And in future no chap
Will scoff that our Ayrton is not worth a Rap.
Sing away, twang your harps, be your trumpets all blown,
We'll have an Eisteddfod, old bricks, of our own;
And here's the Prize Theme that we toss to our Bards—
"Who the deuce cares a fig for this Shuffle of Cards?"

Punch.

MAYENCE.—A short time since, M. Schott, the well-known musical publisher, invited all the persons employed in his establishment to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the entry of three of his workmen into the service of the firm. Some valuable and handsome presents were offered the three heroes of the day by M. and Mdme. Schott, as well as by their comrades. The firm will shortly celebrate the hundredth anniversary of its establishment.

Digitized by Google

THE EMPRESS MARIA THERESA AT PRINCE ESTERHAZY'S*

By C. F. Pohl.

(Continued from page 528.)

Schloss Esterhaz, the Castle, or Château, of Esterhaz, was a wonderful creation of the Prince Nicholas, whose favourite abode it was, just as the fortress of Forchtenstein had once been that of the first Prince (Paul). "Perhaps, with the exception of Versailles, there is no place in all France which can be compared with it for magnificence." Thus wrote a French traveller (Risbeck); and the French ambassador, the Prince de Rohan, sent by Louis XV. to the Court of Vienna, where he excited by his dissipated mode of life the displeasure of the Empress, says in a like spirit: "At Esterhaz he found another Versailles." In a pamphlet (Excursion à Esterhaz en Hongrie) published by Schönfeld, Vienna, in 1784, the description of the château is introduced by the words: "Le Maître, le Palais, le Théâtre, et le Bois, tout plaît en ces beaux lieux, tout instruit à la fois." Another pamphlet (Relation des Fêtes données à sa Majesté l'Impératrice), published by Gehlen, Vienna, calls Esterhaz "le séjour le plus magnifique et le plus délicieux." One feels really inclined, on viewing all this splendour, to fancy one's self in a beautiful dream, and willingly endorses the opinion pronounced by numerous foreign visitors: "Esterhaz is unsurpassed in Europe."

Esterhaz,† which can now easily be reached, viâ Oedenburg, by the railway from the Gross-Zinkendorf station, lies at the southern extremity of the Neusiedl Lake (at that period a quarter of a German mile off) in the county of Oedenburg in Lower Hungary, and between the villages of Süttor and Szeplak. From the latter place, situated an hour's walk to the west, and whither Haydn often strolled to enjoy the treat of playing the organ, an avenue of lime trees, 450 fathoms long, leads to the village and château. When near the château it runs through two rows of pretty houses, built in the composer's time, for the accommodation of the most necessary workmen. About half-an-hour's walk in a northerly direction, between Esterhaz and the Lake, lies the hamlet of Schrollen (Sarrod), after which the splendid hunting establishment belonging to the present château was named. A representation of the old château, which was 27 fathoms in breadth, is to be seen among the pictures still at Esterhaz (No. 44). The place was the occasional residence of Prince Paul Anton (brother and predecessor of Nicholas), a passionate lover of the chase. One room of the château is still adorned with valuable tapestry, painted in oil, and representing the princely amusement of stag-hunting, the establishment for which is said to have cost some forty thousand florins a year. As the centre of a region overrun with reeds and rushes, with brambles and stunted grass, with long-stretching morasses, interspersed with floating turf, and having near it a peculiar lake stocked with all sorts of wild fowl, and not far from a magnificent alderwood, the site of the château seemed as though expressly designed for a sportsman, and appeared to all the greater advantage from the fact of the melancholy solitude around. It, however, was as unhealthy as it well could be for those who always resided there. They crept about like spectres, victims of the marshy atmosphere, annoyed by all kinds of insects, and, moreover, attacked in spring by cold ague. With regard to all this as well as other things, Prince Nicholas was a benefactor to the neighbourhood, causing splendid canals to be constructed at his own expense, and, in the year 1780-1781, building a dam four thousand three hundred fathoms long over the reed-grown, and mostly bottomless morass (the Hansag as it is termed) stretching from the château in an easterly direction as far as Pomhaggen (Pomogy).

It is difficult to understand what could induce Prince Nicholas to erect a fairy-like palace in so inhospitable a region. Perhaps he was excited thereto by the very contrast. It is impossible to help gazing with all the more astonishment at a pile erected, out of the way of all traffic, at ten times as much as it would have cost anywhere else. It is valued at 11,000,000 florins. The Prince seems to have finally made up his mind on building the palace shortly after his return from Frankfort. At the election and coronation there of the Arch-Duke Joseph as Roman king (1764), the Prince had, as representing the first Bohemian ambassador at the election and coronation, made an extraordinary display. In August, 1765, he impatiently urged on from Innsbruck the erection of the château, to which he finally, in a letter of the 4th January, 1766, to his steward, Herr Rahier, for the first time gave the name of the Schloss Esterhaz, or the Château of Esterhaz, from the place whence the princely family sprang (the Magyar village of Esterhaz upon the island of Schütt), and this name it has since retained.

As the traveller advances along the Oedenburg road from Szeplak, he passes, near the château, which, with its park, occupies an area of 6,000 fathoms, the spacious farm-buildings; a large mansion, nearly 80 fathoms long in front, where were lodged the Prince's own physician, the apothecary's establishment, the Prince's musical establishment, the operatic artists, and the actors; further on the extensive stables capable of accommodating more than a hundred horses, the summer and the winter riding-school, coach-houses, and well-furnished saddle rooms; the small guard-house, and an imposing edifice intended for visitors of high rank. Opposite a gate of artistically worked iron foliage, the principal entrance to the court-yard, in the direction of the lake, was situated on each side the avenue the main guard of Grenadiers, powerful men, mostly six feet high, in the Prince's uniform (at that period a dark blue coat with red flaps and facings, white breeches, and black bear-skin caps with yellow plates). On entering the court-yard, in which is a fountain adorned with a splendid group of figures, the visitor beholds a really imposing sight. Before him is the château built in the Italian style, richly ornamented with statues, relievi, and columns, and, with the principal structure and wings, extending 54 fathoms in breadth. A detached flight of steps conducts on each side to a broad balcony, resting on eight columns coupled two and two. Here on the first floor is the Paradesaal, or state apartment, perfectly white and fitted up with extravagant magnificence. The ceiling is adorned with frescoes of mythological subjects; five large chandeliers, and twelve beautifully wrought girandoles fixed to the walls supply the requisite light at night; the armchairs and sofas are of red damask with deep gold borders. In the corners, on marble pedestals, stand statues, life-size, of the Seasons, ornamented with gold-worked festoons. Alabaster urns, chalcedony vases, and clocks set with precious stones rivet the attention. Stepping out upon the back balcony, the visitor enjoys a surprisingly beautiful view of the garden, which is artistically laid out, and of the far-stretching avenues of the pleasure wood. A charming contrast to the upper apartment is offered by the summer apartment, on the ground floor, under the principal flight of steps. It rests upon square columns, between which are high alabaster urns. The floor is inlaid with white marble. The ceiling of this apartment also is decorated with mythological subjects, painted by Grundmann; the walls are decked out with silver-coloured and green garlands of flowers. Broad mirrors fixed against the walls rest upon white marble tables, which are further decorated with groups and single figures of the finest porcelain. In the side-walls are niches lined with looking-glass and containing marble basins on a rocky groundwork, with dragons spouting forth water, and with swans.

(To be continued.)

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

† Haydn, in his letters, kept to "Estoras," a mode of spelling suggestive of the origin of the princely house. As late as the year 1774, the Almanach von Wien contains the following entry: "In der Wallnerstrasse No. 164: Nicolaus Fürst von Estoras."

Pesth.—The new manager of the German Actien-Theater has just published his programme, but, of course, no one expects it will be carried out in its integrity, any more than the opera-goers on the banks of the Thames believe that they will really have a chance of enjoying all the good things which certain well-known impresarii annually promise them. If Herr Kullak does only half what he says he will do, great will be the rejoicing among the German community, and fierce the spirit of opposition which will animate the Magyar journals. Among the stars said to be engaged are Mdme. Mallinger, Mdlle. Brandt, Herren Adams and Müller. The success or failure of the management will, however, depend chiefly upon the regular company; if that is bad, Herr Kullak will find that he relies upon his stars in vain.

Saratoga (U. S.)—Mr. Gilmore, of Jubilee fame, with one half his band, is playing in the Grand Union Hotel here. The other half is delighting the patrons of Profile House in the White Mountains.

Digitized by Google

DIE ZAUBERFLÖTE.

The subject of the fable of Die Zauberflöte is so strange, so disconnected, and often so unintelligible with its trivialities, that people have always wondered how Schikaneder could have hit upon it, and what was the reason of this extraordinary production. It was generally supposed that Schikaneder had done so from carelessness, and Mozart's excellent biographer, Jahn, asserts that Schikaneder partly altered his work as first written, because a Singspiel, or piece interspersed with songs, founded on the same legend, had been produced with great success by Marinelli at the newly-erected theatre in the Leopoldstadt. According to a book now almost forgotten: A Secret History of the System of Swearing among the Jacobites for Friends of Truth,* London, 1795, Schikaneder obtained the subject for the libretto of Die Zauberflöte from some unknown person, and wrote the book in exact accordance with his instructions. The real author is the Order of the Illuminati, which had then chosen Vienna for its principal field of action, and carried on a secret propaganda throughout Germany for the ideas of the French Revolution. Pictures and poems were forced into the service, and in the theatres there were represented innumerable allegories, which only the Initiated could understand. The Zauberflöte is said to be such an allegory of the French Revolution, as the latter was down to the year 1791. It is presumable that Schikaneder was in the secret, but Mozart, on the contrary, had certainly no suspicion of it. The success immediately achieved by the opera in Vienna is thus explained in a twofold manner, being accounted for partly by the beautiful music, and partly by the hidden meaning applauded by the numerous Illuminati. Die Zauberflöte was performed sixty-two successive evenings at the Wiedner Theatre, and the rush to see it was always as tremendous as ever. The number of persons who understood the allusions in it of course kept on increasing. The allegorical significance of the different characters is said to be as follows:

| | |
|---|---|
| The Queen of Night . | The previous Government. |
| Pamina, her Daughter | Freedom, who is always the Daughter of Despotism. |
| Tamino . . . . . | The People. |
| The Three Nymphs . | The Deputies of the Three Estates. |
| Sarastro . . . . | The Wisdom of a better System of Legislation. |
| The Priests of Sarastro | The National Assembly. |
| Papageno . . . . | The Rich. |
| An Old Woman . . | Equality. |
| Monostatos, a Moor . | The Emigrés. |
| Slaves . . . . . | The Servants and Soldiers of the Emigrés. |
| Three Good Genii . . | Prudence, Justice, and Patriotism, Tamino's Guides. |

The course of the piece may now be thus explained. Tamino is pursued by a monstrous serpent (the impending national bankruptcy), which threatens to swallow him up. The Queen of Night would fain save him, since upon his existence depends her own. She cannot, however, do so alone, and employs the assistance of her three Nymphs, who, in consequence, annihilate the monster. Tamino bursts out in loud thanks to his fair preservers, who further make him a present of a magic flute (the liberty of speaking and complaining for the advancement of his interests). At the same time, however, the Queen charges him to deliver her daughter from the hands of a tyrannical king, Sarastro, who has carried the maiden off, and hidden her in a cavern. To encourage Tamino still more to accomplish the task, the Queen promises him the hand of her daughter, but in this she deceives him, having already promised it to Monostatos. Meanwhile, Tamino swears to restore her daughter, and the Queen sends him a message to the effect that in his adventures he must rely entirely upon the guidance of the good Genii. Tamino sets out, accompanied by Papageno (the Rich, who, because, previously to the Revolution, they were subordinated to the nobility and the clergy, willingly assisted in the overthrow of the State). He meets Sarastro, and is astonished at finding in him a brilliant and beloved sovereign, instead of a cruel tyrant. Sarastro appears in a car drawn by wild beasts, to signify that law-giving wisdom softens the natural roughness of man, and that all willingly submit to it. The Prince, too, receives Tamino in a friendly manner, and tells him that the Queen of Night has deceived him. Tamino willingly believes Sarastro, who promises him the lovely Pamina as his wife, and says he shall be introduced by his Priests into the Temple of Honour and Happiness. The Priests announce this through speaking-trumpets, to indicate that their words are addressed to the whole earth; at the reception they illuminate the most horrible places with torches, to signify that the torch of enlightenment has at length penetrated into the very darkest parts of the earth. Tamino has to submit to all kinds of tests before he can enter the Temple. He afterwards marries Pamina. His companion, Papageno, at first courageous and even boasting, is at bottom a man deficient in character, who eventually busies himself only with the material comforts of eating and drinking. He ends by becoming used up, and wants to hang himself. The three good Genii give him sound advice, and, in the long run, he consents, though very unwillingly, to espouse the eldest of the three (Equality). To reward him, his wife becomes young again, and he is happy. Papageno's feathers typify the vanity of the rich; the shepherd's pipe, their rudeness; and the set of bells, to which all must dance, is an effect of wealth, and represents the sound of money. Monostatos (the Emigrés) endeavours in every way to ruin Tamino's happiness. He even wants to kill Pamina, for which Sarastro punishes him. He then joins in despair the Queen of Night and endeavours to storm the temple of Happiness, but is precipitated with her into the abyss. The wild beasts who lay aside for a time their wildness at the sweet tones of the magic flute are lions (the arms of the Netherlands), Leopards (England), and Eagles (Austria, Russia, and Prussia). The rest signify the smaller states.—Stuttgarter Museum.

* Not knowing the original book myself, I have thus rendered the German title:—Geheime Geschichte des Verschörungssystems der Jacobiner für Wahrheitsfreunde.—TRANSLATOR.

BARCELONA.—Herr R. Wagner has accepted the post of honorary President of the Sociedad Wagner, lately founded here, and promised to write a work to inaugurate the Sociedad aforesaid.

BADEN.—Dr. Hans von Bülow, assisted by Herr Carl Hill and the band of the Theatre, lately gave a concert devoted chiefly to the new German school. He appeared both as conductor and pianist. In the former capacity, he conducted the "Symphonische Festklänge," by the Abbate Franz Liszt, the "Dance of Sylphs," from the Faust of Hector Berlioz, the overture to Tannhäuser, by R. Wagner, and the "Rakoczy March," scored by Hector Berlioz; in the latter, he played Henselt's Concerto in F minor, for Piano and Orchestra, and Weber's Polonaise, arranged by F. Liszt (Op. 72). Herr Hill sang a scena from the first act of Der fliegende Holländer, "Fluthenreicher Ebro," Schumann, and "Gewitternacht," R. Franz.

DRESDEN.—The Delegates of the General Confederation of German Musicians (Allgemeine Deutsche Musikerverband) will hold their second meeting at the beginning of September in this capital. It is now five years ago since the first notion of establishing a benefit society, or club, for assisting musicians in sickness, was first started by a small knot of the brotherhood in Berlin. The straightened circumstances of the great majority of German musicians favoured the enterprise, since every one acknowledged that their necessities could be alleviated only by leagning closely with each other. The Association now counts about 600 members, and is established on so firm a foundation that it can make its sick members a handsome weekly allowance. From this Association sprang the Association of Berlin Musicians, the great object of which was to raise in various respects the status of the profession. For this purpose a special organ, Die Deutsche Musikerzeitung, was founded, to explain what the Association desired to effect, and to set forth its views. The Association now numbers above 1,200 members. Last summer the directors undertook to create a General Confederation of German Musicians, and intelligent members of the profession were despatched from all the large cities to promote the plan. In three days the work was done. On the 13th September thirty representatives of the musicians of Germany signed the list as members. Others imitated their example in such numbers, that the names were soon counted by thousands. In addition to the pecuniary benefits the members derive from the Confederation, there are social advantages which they cannot fail to enjoy through its agency. With a view to elevating them morally as well as materially, every member is strictly prohibited from breaking an engagement once contracted. Infraction of this rule is, if the circumstances require it, followed by expulsion from the Confederation. The approaching meeting will, probably, not be dissolved, before the Delegates have agreed upon the long projected plan of establishing a General Pension Fund for German Musicians.

Digitized by Google

Before the Cathedrals.

Mr. Barnby is apparently resolved to make J. S. Bach's setting of the Passion according to St. Matthew an annual feature at his Oratorio Concerts. He is justified in so doing after the pains he must have bestowed upon getting it up, and the marked success which attended its performance at Exeter Hall last year. That so sublime a work should have been allowed by musical Germany to lie on the shelf unnoticed for an entire century seems astounding. And yet that such was the case is incontestable, for between 1729—when it was first given at St. Thomas's Church, Leipsic, on Good Friday—and 1829, when Mendelssohn, then a mere youth, but full of enthusiasm for Bach, obtained permission, after much vain soliciting, from his crabbed old master, Zelter, to have it performed at Berlin, it had never once, according to concurrent testimony, seen the light. But, since the triumphant success of Mendelssohn in 1829, it has become known to most of the principal cities of Germany; and though we cannot find that its popularity among the Germans is, as some would pretend, equal to the popularity of Handel's Messiah among ourselves, it assuredly, in a degree more restricted, may be looked upon, from a musical point of view, as the German Messiah. There is, however, an essential difference between the two oratorios. That of Bach, one of five he is believed to have composed on the same plan, was expressly intended for Church uses, while that of Handel had no such intention. Again, while Bach's simply elucidates the passion, the suffering and the burial of the Saviour, Handel's extends over a much wider sphere, and admits, in consequence, of larger and more varied musical treatment. But this question has been sufficiently discussed before; and we have only to add that if Bach's Passion could ever be made as generally popular with us as is the Messiah of Handel, we should hail it gladly as a sign of progress in more than one sense, inwardly confessing at the same time that something very nearly akin to a miracle had been accomplished.

It was the Passion of St. Matthew with which the Oratorio Concerts were "inaugurated" the other evening; and a more promising beginning of a new season (the third) of these sterling entertainments could hardly have been desired. Last year the oratorio was given at Exeter Hall; this time St. James's Hall was the arena. Without entering into any arguments about antagonistic claims, or of the two buildings as fitted for the purposes of music, we may unhesitatingly affirm that the second performance of the Passion was far superior to the first. This is all to the credit of Mr. Barnby, whose endeavours to obtain as good a general execution as possible, without the advantage of such unlimited preparation as continental conductors enjoy, deserve hearty recognition. How arduous was the task he had set himself musicians need not be told. But he approached it undaunted, and success in a great measure may justly be said to have rewarded his spirited and praiseworthy efforts. That all the choruses—to the clear and emphatic utterance of some of which, the double choruses especially, the larger accommodation afforded by the Exeter Hall orchestra was, for evident reasons, more favourable—were equally well done it would be untrue to say. Nevertheless, the average performance was singularly effective; and, on the whole, we have never heard the opening double-chorus, "Come, ye daughters, weep with me"—to name the most elaborate and trying of them all—go so smoothly and with such precision. The antiphonal passages, where Zion exhorts, and the faithful inquiringly respond, were admirably brought out; while the touching Lutheran choral ("O Lamm Gottes unschuldig,") which calmly pursues its course above all the intricate combinations of vocal and instrumental harmony, was heard throughout as if there had been nothing that could possibly interfere with its distinct enunciation. After this successful dealing with what, although the oratorio begins with it, is the severest test of efficiency on the part of both singers and players, there was little reason to be apprehensive about the sequel. That the double chorus, "Have lightnings and thunders in clouds disappeared?"—which, according to Mr. Barnby's arrangement, ends the first part—produced, as at Exeter Hall last year, the effect of the evening may easily be credited; and yet we must again protest against the omission of the splendid and nobly wrought out chorus, "O man, thy heavy sin lament," which, according to Bach himself, succeeds it. Any true lover of Bach's music would greatly prefer having this chorus retained to hearing its immediate precursor twice over, as was the case the other night. Without entering into further details, we must be content to add that the chorals, almost without exception, were sung in a manner which did infinite credit to Mr. Barnby's choir, and that the double chorus, "In tears of grief we here recline," which brings the scene at the sepulchre and the oratorio itself to an end—perhaps the loveliest and most expressive piece of all—was given to perfection.

A line must suffice to say that the recitatives and solos in which the oratorio of the Passion is so rich could scarcely have been confided to artists more competent to do them justice. We were glad to find the pathetic air, "Have mercy upon me, O Lord," assigned last year to a soprano, now restored to the voice for which it was originally meant—a contralto. The violin obbligato accompaniment to this air is as striking and appropriate in its way as that to the "Benedictus" in Beethoven's Second Mass. The pianoforte accompaniment to the recitatives, indicated in the score by "figured basses," were assigned with excellent effect to the pianofortes. In conclusion, we do not see why, when the Passions Musik is performed in a concert-room, there should be more curtailment than is found absolutely necessary. If the original practice of having a sermon between the two parts into which the oratorio is divided were adopted, the case would be different. But this, like the singing of the tunes of the chorales by the congregation, appertains exclusively to the Church; and as Bach's great Protestant music seems very unlikely, at any rate in the present time, to be heard in one of our English churches, and as we are compelled, in order to hear it at all, to go to a concert-room, we confess we should like to hear it as nearly as possible in its integrity. Ghost.

—o—

RAPHAEL'S CARTOONS.

SIR,—A paragraph in the Pall Mall Gazette informed us the other day that two pictures by the old masters, belonging to the gallery of the Louvre, but lent to some plausible official, had been destroyed by fire. It so happened I had been reading that very morning Mr. Leslie's masterly criticism on the cartoons by Raphael which her Majesty has been persuaded to lend to the authorities at the Kensington Museum. One passage I should like to quote. I have not the book with me so I cannot be sure as to the exact words, but I believe they were something to the following effect:—

"These grand works were painted entirely by Raphael's own hand, and in the very plentitude of his power; whether we consider the interest of the subjects, the grand style and mysterious grace in the drawing and arrangement of the figures, the marvellous dramatic power in their gesture and expression, or the masterly skill in the execution, considering the purpose in view, we may safely pronounce this glorious series to be—if we except the frescoes of the Vatican—without a rival in the world. I never see them without new wonder and delight, yet my pleasure is sadly damped when I think of the risk to which they are exposed. If a fire were to break out in the palace, in a few minutes all might be destroyed."

When Mr. Leslie wrote the cartoons were still preserved in the room which Sir Christopher Wren built for them at Hampton Court. Here, I believe, provision had been made, at the instance of the Prince Consort, for removing them at the first alarm to a place of safety. I would urge that if the room in which the cartoons are now placed is not fireproof, absolutely fireproof, such a room ought to be constructed without a day's delay. With Mr. Cole's well-known energy, and Mr. Redgrave's well-known skill, there could be no difficulty, and there could be no excuse. In a new gallery, too, some provision might be made for protecting the cartoons from the attacks of another enemy, to which they are now exposed—viz., excess of light. In "The Miraculous draught of fishes" we have apparently a proof that some of the pigments are by no means as permanent as could be wished. Scarcely a trace of colour is now visible in the drapery of the principal figure, though its reflection in the water is still decidedly red. In the room built at Hampton Court by Wren, the cartoons were hung opposite the windows, but at a higher level, so that the only light which reached them was that reflected from the ground outside. A very tender and "becoming" light it was. As the spectator, moreover, stood with his back to the windows, the line of sight very nearly coincided with the line of light, so that the shadows cast by the folds and creases of the paper, now so painfully evident, were almost invisible. If the cartoons cannot be placed in greater safety at Kensington than they were at Hampton Court, there are some who would not be sorry to see them restored to the old, silent, softly lighted home so carefully and skilfully prepared for them. K.

GENOA.—A new opera, Salvator Rosa, the music of which Senhor Gomez, composer of Il Guarany, is now writing at Lecco, will be produced this winter at the Teatro Carlo Felice. The libretto is from the experienced pen of Signor Ghislanzoni.

WEIMAR.—In honour of the birthday of the Grand-Duke, an old operetta, Elwin und Elmire, composed by the Duchess Anna Amalia, was taken from the shelf, where it had so long been lying, and performed before a very select audience at the little theatre, in the Château of Dornburg, by the leading members of the regular Grand-Ducal operatic company, under Herr Lassen as conductor. The Abbate Franz Liszt, who was present, pronounced a highly favourable opinion on the work; but that, of course, he was bound to do. It would appear, however, that Elwin und Elmire is really not entirely destitute of merit. The Duchess studied under Fleischer of Brunswick, and Wolf, Capellmeister, here.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

August 13th, 1873.

"Music at Boulogne-sur-Mer?" Yes, I should think so! more music than one can listen to. Repetitions of Trovatore, Guillaume Tell, and Charles V., and the production on Saturday of Mignon, constituted our operatic répertoire of last week. Of the first I have not much to say, except that in the rôle of Azucena I had expected more from Mdlle. Peyret, after her performance as Odette in the opera of Charles VI. M. Bresson was "toujours" M. Bresson. The other two were also successful.

The première representation of Mignon calls for further comment, but I don't know how to comment on Ambroise Thomas's charming opera. Mignon was represented by a new actress on our stage, Mdlle. Celine Mey. She acted and sang the part of the heroine very well. Her declamation is perfect, her singing accurate, and her voice of good compass for a mezzo-soprano. The pathetic appeal, when remembering in a dream the country of her childhood, she sang with effect. "Connais tu le pays où fleure l'orange? (Non conosci il bel suol?)" Je connais un pauvre enfan de Bohême ("Io conosco un garzonnel"), and her part in the duo, "Les jeunes hirondelles," I will only record as gems of vocal art and musical thought left on my memory. She sang each of them well, and justly earned applause. The melody "Adieu, Mignon!" (Addio, Mignon fa core) in Act II., was sung by M. Bresson with grace and tenderness, and charmed every one. M. Larrivé, as Lothario—from the first act, when he arrives at the stage and sings the air "Fatigué et tremblant," to the last act when he discovers himself to his wandering and forsaken daughter, Mignon, and gives her away to Wilhelm—was acted and sung with care and appropriate gentleness. I might go on enumerating many other delightful airs, duos, and choruses from this really beautiful opera of Ambroise Thomas, and scrutinize with pleasure the words and plot, but there is no necessity as you have heard the opera in England, where it is known and appreciated.

On Saturday evening last there was a very full attendance at the Casino (this fact, with the crammed Operahouse, proving how full Boulogne is at the present moment, "and the cry is still they come!") to listen to a grand concert at which Madame Silvia Floriani (de l'Opera Italien), M. Bosquin (1re tenor du Grand Opera), Le Chevalier de Kontaki, and Herr Dulcken took part. The two latter gentlemen played a duet on two pianos. Madame Floriani sang an air from Norma, two English airs ("Marguerite," and "I love my love"), and joined Bosquin in a duo from Gounod's Philémon et Baucis. It was altogether such a success that, on Sunday, instead of the then already announced ordinary concert at 4 p.m., Madame Floriani consented to sing twice, and M. Dulcken to play twice. A small additional charge was made for admission, and a plate placed at the door for the charitably inclined to drop in money for the unfortunate town of Bazeilles, which was set on fire on September 2, during the battle of Sedan, no one knows by whom, and has recently again been suffering from the devouring element. Ordinary concerts as usual.

Masses at the churches unusually fine this week—M. Guilmant presiding at the organ of St. Nicholas on Monday last—all "leading up" to L'Assomption, on Friday next, when Cherubini's grand mass (Messe du Sacré), I hear his best, is to be played with full orchestra, &c. On the 17th there will be a grand solemn mass, at which the Bishop of Arras will be present, to dedicate "La France à la très sainte Vierge," a procession from the six parishes of the town taking part in it. Processions from all parts to the celebrated "Notre Dame de Boulogne" will continue daily to the end of the month.

The "Société de Bienfaisance" has begun its work of usefulness by giving weekly dancing parties in the open air on Mondays, from 8 till 12, with an entr'acte at 10.30 p.m., during which there are fireworks. I have noticed that set pieces are admired, but do not elicit from the assembled throng so many exclamations of "Oh!" in various notes as do the rockets and Roman candles. This "Société de Bienfaisance" has, I believe, succeeded in inducing the band of the Belgian Guides to cross the frontier, and we may expect to hear them at the Jardin des Tintileries shortly. "Enfin!" I must end, not, however, without noticing the Fair which began on the 5th, and is to last a fortnight. I could write you a very long letter about this only, but forbear. The long "street of shops, or booths," where are retailed the gilded (or otherwise) gingerbread, toys, sweetmeats, and jewellery, together with the dulcet thumps on the big drum at the waxwork show, mingled with the sound of the organ at the "merry-go-round," are the attractions. I must not forget, however, to mention the two theatres, one of which I went to. It was announced in large letters outside, "Jeanne d'Arc," and an engaging looking young lady, in a white skirt, steel armour, and helmet, was inviting the crowd to enter the tent in the usual way. I entered; the tent was full. The orchestra—consisting of an ophecleide, two violins, and a cornet—struck up; but what a disappointment! The piece had been changed for a play without a name; but if I call it Les Brigands, and state that the scene was in Spain, that the heroine was lost and found, that the usual duet took place, and the usual pistol shot was heard at the finale, I shall not be far wrong.

S. (O. P. Q.) C.

—o—

MUSIC AT MELBOURNE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The great event has come off; Madame Arabella Goddard has been heard in Melbourne. It would certainly be a curious incident in the artistic life of "la reine des pianistes" if she were not a success in any civilized town, and such a circumstance has not occurred here. No; her reception has been such as was naturally to be expected in a town that rather prides itself on its musical taste and judgment—most emphatic. Her great ability, her exquisite touch, have been recognized; and her re-appearance, after her visit to Sydney is concluded, is looked forward to by numbers with much interest. There is also a hope generally expressed that at her next recital she will favour us with one or more of Beethoven's sonatas entire.

The Italian opera season is over; and the English opera, with Miss Alice May as prima donna, is now in full swing. Barbe Bleue is just withdrawn, and Balfe's Bohemian Girl substituted. It is wonderful how this opera retains its popularity. Last night there was a splendid house and most enthusiastic audience. Miss Alice May was encored in "I dreamt that I dwelt," and Mr. Beaumont in "The fair land of Poland." Before the opera the Mdlles. Novaro gave Poise's operetta, Bon soir voisin, in French, as a lever de rideau, but their voices are scarcely suitable to so large a theatre.

On Saturday next Signor Giorza gives another organ recital at the Town Hall, when he will be assisted by Mrs. Cutter, Signori Lusini and Cecchi, Mr. Hill, and others.

During the Italian season Miss Alice May has had a small company of her own, under the conductorship of Mr. G. B. Allen, travelling all through New South Wales and a great part of Victoria with great success. Everywhere the press confirms the criticisms of the metropolitan papers, and says that such an artist was never before seen and heard in their respective towns, some of them many hundreds of miles from the metropolis. We understand that the events of the tour would make a readable book. Mountains and rivers have been crossed by the dozen, the former without any roads and the latter without any bridges. Although upsets were numerous, there was no one hurt; and, in fact, these incidents came at last to be expected. Then there was another cause for a little pleasing excitement, namely, the probability of being "stuck up;" as more than one coach had been recently robbed in districts where the company was travelling. But Miss May came through all scathless, with health renewed, her voice greatly improved, and with a purse also considerably developed.

Melbourne, June 17, 1873.

---

SAINT FRANCISCO.—According to the New Yorker Musik-Zeitung, Herr Wieniawski's concerts here, despite all that has been written about the crowds attending them, are anything but a pecuniary success at any rate. On one occasion, we are informed, the artist refused to play because enough money had not been taken at the doors.

PARIS.—The manager of the Grand Opera, M. Halanzier, has engaged two new artists: Mdlle. Girins, who will make her first appearance in La Juive, and Mdlle. Alice Hustache, daughter of the chorusmaster. M. Faure will re-appear about the end of September, either in Don Juan or La Coupe du Roi de Thulé.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CREAM O' TARTAR.—We know of no such society of Chemists and Druggists (Limited) as that which you mention, and, therefore, could not be aware that the directors have declared a dividend at the rate of ten per cent, with a bolus of seven pounds on each hundred pounds' worth of shares.

TYRO.—We feel flattered, of course, by the great faith you express in our knowledge and acquirements, but frankly confess we should prefer your purchasing a good, though cheap, treatise on the instrument you have selected to learn. We will, however, answer your question this once, in the hope you will not honour us again. The compass of the Violoncello reaches to the one lined a (a), and, with the harmonics one or two octaves higher.

CROTCHET.—The name of the musician to whom you refer was Reeve and not Reeves, singularly enough. He was at first apprenticed to a law-writer in Chancery Lane, and had, as companion, the famous comedian, Munden. He wrote a great deal for the stage, and eventually became part proprietor of Sadler's Wells.

GOG AND MAYN'T-GOG.—The proper translation of the phrase: "Le siége de la Société est à Paris," is decidedly not: "The siege of the Society is carried on in Paris."

ENQUIRER.—Mrs. Bowers, the lady in question, was once manageress of the Academy of Music, New York, and often travelled with Miss Charlotte Cushman as second star.

C. S. (Spilsby). We are only acquainted with one quartet concertante for four violins—that by Maurer, which has been frequently played in London. Possibly Mayseder may have written one, but we cannot answer for it.

AUGUSTUS MAYHEW.—The line applied to your "Son and Hair" is from Homer, and runs thus:—

Ξανθαὶ δὲ κόμαι κατενήνοθεν ὤμους.

We may render it,

"Adown his shoulders flow'd his yellow locks."

The compound, κατενήνοθεν, is peculiar, but presents no difficulty. The simple form, ἄνηνοθα, by Attic reduplication for ἤνοθα, is the second perfect of Ἀνέθω, which stands by metathesis for Ἀνθέω.

MARRIAGES.

On the 6th inst., at St. Mary's Church, Putney, by the Rev. C. Kingston, Rector of Sutton St. Edmunds, Wisbeach, HUGO SCHULTZ, of St. Denis, Paris, to ELLEN SOARR, niece of Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, Mus. D., D.C.L.

On the 9th inst., at St. Mary's, Newington, Surrey, by the Rev. W. D. Maclagan, M.A., the Rector, assisted by the Rev. F. R. Blatch, WILLIAM KENAZ, the youngest son of John Marriott, M.D., of Colston Bassett, Bingham, Notts, to MARIA, second surviving daughter of Mr. William Maycock, of 59, Lorrimore Road, Kennington.

On the 9th inst., at Deptford (Kent), ARTHUR WILLIAM GEDGE, Esq., to LINA, daughter of Professor J. W. Glover, of Dublin.

DEATH.

On the 13th inst., at 11, Mansfield Street, FREDERIC, second son of CHARLES HALLE, Esq., aged 23.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 16, 1873.

THERE are many worthy persons, fully prepared to admit that music is all very well in its way, who would stare with astonishment and burst forth into vehement protest, were they informed that it is an absolute requisite of life, and that the composer constitutes as indispensable a unit in the social system as the ploughman, or the merchant, the soldier, the carpenter, or the statesman. In every circumstance of our existence, from the time that we first behold the light, to the moment that, in the darkness of the grave, we are cut off from it for ever, may the composer's influence, more or less direct, be traced. This is not generally acknowledged, because it is not generally known, any more than—to take a case in point from contemporary history—the great mass of Englishmen ever suspected till lately that, underlying the whole question of their prosperity, and of the position England is to hold in the family of nations, is another question, that of—coal. Yet so it is; our eyes are now pretty well open, and we find that coal has as much to do with maintaining the supremacy of "The flag that brav'd a thousand years,

The battle and the breeze,"

as all the British pluck, energy, and perseverance of which we may be so justly proud.

The successful general who adds fresh provinces to his native land; the daring seaman, who discovers a new continent in a far-off sea; the natural genius who, as he mends his fellow-workmen's shoes, is revolving in his stupendous brain the first germs of the plan which is to give the world the locomotive; the patient man of science who thinks out the problem of the electric telegraph, and sees his invention afford us a first notion of what it will afterwards become by arresting the murderer as he steps out of the train by which he fancies he has escaped the reach of justice; the merchant who brings even to the humblest home spices from India, tea from China, and sugar from the Gulf of Mexico, is no doubt a public benefactor, but not one jot more so than the composer, enriching the stores of music we already possess by fresh treasures from his own fancy. And it must be noted that the treasures we owe the composer are not doled out to any particular city, province, or empire; they go to enrich and gladden the whole world, for music soars high above the lines of demarcation drawn by diplomatists, and passes unheedingly over geographical boundaries. Poetry does not possess such a privilege; she is frequently stopt at the frontier, and obliged to change her idiomatic garb, but the language of Music is universal and appeals to all alike.

Who is ignorant of the wondrous effect of what Sir Philip Sydney styles the "well enchanting skill of music?" Truly does Richard Hooker, author of the celebrated treatise on Ecclesiastical Polity and one of the most celebrated prose writers and divines of the latter part of the sixteenth century, discourse of the gentle art—

"So pleasing effects it hath," he tells us, "in that very part of man which is most divine, that some have been thereby induced to think that the soul itself by nature is, or hath in it, harmony; a thing which delighteth all ages, and becometh all states; a thing as seasonable in grief as in joy; as decent, being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action. The reason hereof is an admirable facility which music hath to express and represent to the mind, more inwardly than any other sensible mean, the very standing, rising, and falling, the very steps and inflections every way, the turns and varieties of all passions whereunto the mind is subject; yea, so to imitate them, that, whether it resemble unto us the same state wherein our minds already are, or a clean contrary, we are not more contentedly by the one confirmed, than changed and led away by the other. . . . . We are at the hearing of some more inclined unto sorrow and heaviness, of some more mollified and softened in mind; one kind apter to stay and settle us, another to move and stir our affections; there is that draweth to a marvellous grave and sober mediocrity; there is, also, that carrieth, as it were, into ecstacies, filling the mind with a heavenly joy, and for a time in a manner severing it from the body; so that, although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due sort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is, by a native puissance and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled; apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager; sovereign against melancholy and despair; forcible to draw forth tears of devotion, if the mind be such as can yield them; able both to move and to moderate all affections."

Digitized by Google

But what is too frequently the lot of those whose inspiration produces this "thing which delighteth all ages, and beseemeth all states?" Alas! Poverty could not even erect the simplest stone to mark the spot where the ashes of Mozart are laid, and as for Beethoven—but why multiply instances? "Virtue," they teach us, "is its own reward!" Were this not equally true of music as of virtue, would composers of genius or even talent endure the want and undergo the privations to which they are so often subjected? It is not to gain the miserable pittance for which, in too many cases, they sell their works that they labour. It is the act of creation which recompenses them for their exertions, and they are buoyed up, too, by the consciousness that, long after they shall have passed away themselves, their spirit will live to excite the reverence and call forth the admiration of future generations.

That they are right is a fact demonstrated almost every day. Bonn furnishes us with the latest instance. For the second time within a short period, that pleasant University town on the fair banks of the Rhine will have distinguished itself by a Memorial Festival to a departed musician. A little while ago it was Beethoven; to-day it is Schumann. Of course Schumann cannot be compared to the mighty author of the Ninth Symphony; not even his warmest admirers would assert that he can. Still he is a master to whom we are deeply indebted, and those who assemble to do him honour do honour also to themselves. The list of persons who have signified their intention of being present is, as announced in last week's number of the Musical World, a very long one. It includes names famous in the musical annals of all countries. England is represented most worthily by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, who will meet the genial and accomplished Dr. Ferdinand Hiller, as elegant and polished a writer as he is a scholarly and gifted musician, Herren Johannes Brahms, Waldemar Bargiel, Max Bruch, Gevaert, Verhulst, and a host of others, all, like himself, specially invited by the Festival Committee. Is not such an assemblage pregnant with deep meaning? Does it not prove that Art rises superior to mere territorial divisions and that its nationality is universal? Does it not show that Music, like Freemasonry, has its brotherhood stretching to the utmost corners of the earth? Lastly, does it not say to the striving artist, if nature has gifted him above the usual run of men: Pluck up heart! You shall not be always unknown, for, even though the Present be unjust, Posterity at least shall snatch your name from the envious clutch of Oblivion, and gratefully lay its wreaths of laurel on your tomb! L.

—o—

STEEL BARS VERSUS CHURCH BELLS.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR SIR,—I regret to be unable to reply to the numerous letters addressed to me respecting questions and information about Steel Bars, as they form at present a matter of patent.

It is hoped that before long a specimen of "Dr. Rahles's new improved Bar Bells" will be publicly exhibited.

August 11, 1873. DR. FERDINAND RAHLES.

THE CHEQUE BANK, LIMITED, has been opened for business, and promises to confer a great benefit on the commercial community, especially the retail branch, seeing that "the cheques of the Cheque Bank supply a new, safe, and universally applicable method of paying and transmitting small amounts of £10 and under." The Cheque bank is calculated to supply a want long felt. Subscribers to the Musical World would find the cheques of the Cheque Bank as convenient for paying their subscriptions as we should for receiving them.

SYLIFA.*

(From "Another World.")

Among the children of poor parents taken care of and educated by my orders, there was a beautiful girl named Sylifa, the daughter of a labouring man who worked in the ravines. In the early part of my reign I had been struck with her beauty and intelligence, and directed that she should be brought up and educated in my palace. Her eyes were almond-shaped, large, long, lustrous, and languishing; and might be pictured by fancy as beaming with ethereal flowers, crystalline fountains in all their brightness, painting, sculpture, and poetry. Her lovely mouth never gave utterance to a thought that was not kind and good; indeed, all her features were beautiful, and the soft and luxuriant hair hung down to her feet in graceful curls—the back hair was much longer, and, when unbound, fell to the ground in rich masses. She had a musical, merry laugh which, whether they would or not, could set all present laughing, however seriously inclined. Her talents were many, her versatility great; for she was accomplished in various pursuits, and in most of them excelled. When singing or playing the harp her dreamy eyes were more than earthly, and seemed as though beaming with poetry inspired of Heaven. The beauty of her mind could be read in her face; she looked so heavenly that when grown into womanhood I have, in a moment of enthusiasm, been almost tempted to fold her in my arms; but I never forgot my great mission, even in the most perilous moments.

I took particular care of the lovely girl, and selected for her husband a very handsome man and a great poet, who was chosen in due form by Sylifa at one of our marriage "choice" meetings. The union was happy, though, perhaps, they loved each other too well. The married couple resided in my palace, and Sylifa continued to afford to me and my guests the greatest recreation and amusement. She was very luxurious, and very particular in her habits. I have seen her, while amusing us, suddenly (perhaps designedly) stop short, and direct her attendant to bring the golden salver, telling us at the same time that her hand (and she had exquisite hands) was a little soiled. She would moisten them with the perfumed water, and then resume her task of amusing us, our attention having, in the meantime, been kept in breathless suspense.

In my palace under the sea (for I had a submarine retreat of which I may speak hereafter) there was a large sheet or basin of water, in which she would sport most gracefully, modestly attired, as a nymph of the sea. She always identified herself with the part she sustained. As a sea nymph she could never be induced to speak; but, when we addressed her, she always replied in musical tones, because, according to our legends, mermaids always discoursed in song. In the basin of water there were willows, hung with small lyres, through which Sylifa would show her face, and then, taking one of the lyres, would play and sing exquisitely, always keeping up the illusion.

She was very fond of a lion brought up in my palace, with which, as a cub, she had played when a child. As a woman she had complete mastery over the noble animal. Both as a child and as a woman, she, with the lion, formed the subject of many of the beautiful pictures that adorned my palaces.

For a particular reason we once separated Sylifa from her husband for a day. She refused to eat; neither would she retire to rest. As the day was ending she walked into the room where I sat with my numerous guests. She said. "Do you love Sylifa?" "Yes," was my answer. "Then give me back my Oma. Without him I die; already I droop; to-morrow I shall be no more." When asked to amuse us, she said she could not; her heart was too heavy. We tried to console her, but it was useless; she wept, and her long hair was wet with her tears. After two days, we were obliged to restore Oma to the devoted Sylifa.

Sylifa was enthusiastic in her love of flowers. It was she who suggested that, at the fête of which I have spoken, the cameleopards should be united by wreaths of flowers. She sought and obtained my permission to mount the tallest of the stately animals, and appeared, resplendent in beauty, amongst the beautiful women who graced the fête.

* "Here the soul has illumined its temporary dwelling with rays of light—the gift of Heaven."

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

A WELL-KNOWN New York manager, the happy possessor of a nice little farm, not far distant from the Empire City, has, since the cherries have been ripe, affixed on the hedge round his garden the following notice: "The Free List is entirely suspended."

ACCORDING to report, the following is the origin of Gretry's famous romance in Richard Cœur de Lion, a romance which "it is impossible for anyone to hear without being moved to tears." Grétry threw his whole heart and soul into the composition of his opera. He was accustomed to triumphs, and entertained no doubt of the success of his new score. He felt inspired, and there was an abundance of melodies; one only he sought in vain, the melody for the pathetic romance: "Une fièvre ardente." One day as he was taking a walk, pursued by his one fixed idea, he met Dalayrac. "What is the matter with you," enquired the latter. "What is the meaning of that anxious look of yours?"—"Ah! my dear fellow, I am trying to find a motive, and I can't."—"Pooh! It will be all right in time."—"I hope it may, but meanwhile I am on the rack."—"Is it something so difficult, then?"—"Judge for yourself. I require an air characteristic of the days of chivalry; something simple, moving, ingenuous, and elevating, at the same time."—"Wait a moment," said Dalayrac, "we have in our mountains of Auvergne an old song which the peasants sing; a song so old, that nobody knows its origin. It has been handed down from one generation to another. It might suit your purpose. Listen." With these words he began to hum the air. After he had got through a few bars, Grétry stopped him. "Do not go any further," he said; "that will do; only just repeat what you have already sung."—Dalayrac did so, while Grétry noted down the melody.

"WHAT a wonderful thing is human patience!" exclaims a writer in Il Trovatore, and then proceeds to inform us that Ercole Gedoni, a member of the chorus at the theatre of Forli, has succeeded in teaching a rabit to sing with marvellous accuracy the final air of the tenor in Lucia, and the romance of the baritone in Roberto Devereux. "What a wonderful thing is human gullibility!" the writer in the Trovatore might have added, if he expected anyone to credit his wonderful statement.

IT is said that, to circumvent the Censure, Victor Hugo is about to change the title of his drama Le Roi s'amuse into Le Schah s'amuse, and to lay the scene in Persia instead of in France.

BARNUM'S Combination Show, as it is called, which includes a menagerie, a circus, and a collection of curiosities, is now making the tour of the States. It is insured for 1,500,000 dollars.

A NEPHEW of Meyerbeer's called on Rossini, and played him a funeral march, inspired by the death of the composer of Les Huguenots. When he had concluded, he asked Rossini what he thought of it. "It is very fine," replied the maestro, "but it would have pleased me better had you been the person dead, and your uncle the composer of the march."

ST. PETERSBURG.—The Imperial Russian Society of Music of St. Petersburg has offered a prize for the best setting of an operatic libretto, Vakoula, the Smith, taken from Gogol's novel: Christmas Night. The sum of 1,500 roubles is offered by the Grand-Duchess Helena Pawlowna as the first prize, and 500 roubles, as the second. Competitors will have to send in their works by the 1st August, 1875, and the decision of the judges will be published by the 1st November following, at the latest.

HOMBURG.—The attractions of the last Kurhaus Concert were increased by the appearance of Mdlle. Marianne Brandt from the Royal Operahouse, Berlin. She sang Selika's "Slumber Song," a song by Eckert, one by Schumann, and one by Schubert, and the drinking song from Lucrezia Borgia. The last, in obedience to a tumultuous encore, she had to repeat.

NEW YORK.—The new Fifth Avenue Theatre will be inaugurated by the new and long expected "American comedy," the joint production of Messrs. Dion Boucicault and Bret Harte.—Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream is to be performed at the Grand Operahouse, previously to the commencement of the operatic season.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MISS EMILY TATE'S CONCERT.—The pianoforte performance lately given by Miss Emily Tate has been interesting, as showing the refinement which the persevering practice of the art produces, and the increase of physical as well as mental power which attends the development of musical gifts. The concert given by Miss Emily Tate, in St. George's Hall, last month, was graced with the presence of some of her most aristocratic supporters, amongst whom are names which everywhere receive royal honours, and a numerous clientèle intent upon noticing the progress which is gradually transforming a precocious child into an acknowledged artist. The programme arranged for the concert was well calculated to exhibit the young pianist's talents to advantage, and enabled her to win the esteem of admirers of the clasical as well as romantic schools of musical art. Mendelssohn's "Andante" and "Rondo Capriccioso" were not only brilliantly executed, but phrased in a manner which only true musical feeling would suggest. Handel's variations on the air entitled the "Harmonious Blacksmith" were also performed in a style remarkable for pleasing accentuations and graceful expression, whilst in fantasias by Chopin and Thalberg Miss Tate showed to advantage her command over numerous mechanical difficulties. The concert given was well supported by several popular vocalists, and by Herr Schuberth, the violoncellist.—The Hour.

MR. W. H. HOLMES, one of our most distinguished professors, gave a concert, on Wednesday, July 30, at his residence, 36, Beaumont Street, and introduced to the audience several very clever and promising young pupils. Mr. Holmes's programmes are always interesting, as they include compositions which are new to the general public; and in the one under notice we find several. A sonata, entitled The Maid of Orleans, by Sir W. Sterndale Bennett, was remarkably well played by Miss Jessie Morison, who has already made a most successful début. The composer would have been pleased to have heard his work so well rendered by such young fingers. A Scherzo, from a symphony composed by Sir Julius Benedict for the Norwich Festival last year, and most effectively arranged for two pianofortes, was played by the composer and Mr. Holmes. By general request this clever piece of music was repeated, and we hope it will often be heard again in this form. A young pupil played Mendelssohn's scherzo from The Midsummer Night's Dream exceedingly well, and the same compliment must be paid to Miss Pollon for her performance of the difficult variations, by Brahms, on a theme by Paganini. A clever composition named Meditation, by Mr. Oliver King, was well received. Miss Gilbert played a duet, by Raff, with her master; and Miss Alwyn Field played a Prelude and Fugue in G, by Bach, very well. All Mr. Holmes's pupils give indications of very careful teaching. Several professional friends of Mr. Holmes took part in the proceedings of the day.—Sir Julius Benedict, with his clever Scherzo; Mr. Lazarus, who played a Romance, by Mozart, as well as Mozart could wish to have heard it played; and Herr Lutgen, who gave a very effective solo of his own composition, Souvenir de Pensylvanie, on the violoncello, accompanied by Madame Lutgen. The vocalists were Mr. Alfred Gilbert, who sang "As when the dove" (Handel); Mrs. Gilbert, who sang "The Spirit Song" (Haydn), with much feeling; and Mr. Wilbye Cooper, who sang "Beautecus Daughter" (Beethoven), and a pretty canzonet, "Night and Morning," composed by Mrs. Gilbert. Mr. Frank Holmes gave Mr. T. M. Mudie's descriptive song, "The Dying Gladiator," in a highly effective manner, accompanied by the composer. Mdlle. Alwina Valleria, although announced, we are sorry to say, was unwell, and therefore unable to appear. This pleasant morning's performance was appropriately terminated by Mr. W. H. Holmes playing two Pezze di Bravura, by the late Cipriani Potter, who was Mr. Holmes's master. Being encored, Mr. Holmes played his own adaptation of the overture to Masaniello in a most effective manner. We shall be very glad to hear Mr. W. H. Holmes and his pupils again.

SIGNOR VARGNOT gave a morning concert on Saturday last, at Wornum's Rooms, and, notwithstanding the lateness of the season, he managed to attract a very full audience. Signor Vargnot possesses a high baritone voice, which he fully developed in the songs of "Ragio d'amore," "When other lips" (Balfe), and "There is a flower that bloometh" (Wallace), &c., in all of which he was loudly applauded. Signor Vargnot was assisted by several young artists; amongst others was a Miss Elizabeth Hunter, from Glasgow, who displayed a perfect soprano voice in the Scotch songs, "The Macgregors' gathering," and "Bonnie Prince Charlie." In the song, "Sweet summer gales;" she was loudly encored, and deservedly applauded. Mr. Alfred C. Reynolds, in Ascher's popular romance, "Alice, where art thou?" gained the sympathies of the audience by his unaffected style and the freshness of his voice. He also sang "Come into the garden, Maud." Mr. John Hayden, a pupil of Dr. Z. Buck, of Norwich, gave a song of H. R. Allen's, and, with Mr. C. Bell, the duet of "Flow gently, Deva." Mr. Hayden has been well taught, and sings like an artist. Mr. Bell sang with his usual vigour Kloss' song of "The valiant knight," rendered so popular by Signor Foli. The Misses Frances Lucombe, Celina and Marian Hall, Ida Roslynne, Emily Aylmer, Helen Byron, Shield, with Madame Caponi and Edith Touzeau, sang, with more or less effect, several of the popular morceaux of the day, whilst the infantine pianists, Miss and Master Okey, as well as the Misses Fanny and Alice Calcott (their first appearance), Harriet Prytherch, Mdlle. Berta Barsekoff (a Russian pianist, and a good performer), Nellie and Rose St. George, played pianoforte pieces by Flotow, Benedict, Leybach, Wallace, Weber, Chopin, &c. The concert was under the direction of Mr. G. Lansdowne Cottell, and was a success in every sense of the word.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

LEEDS.—With great pleasure was the announcement received that Dr. Spark was to resume his recitals. During the Assizes these take place on Tuesday evenings instead of in the afternoons. Last week a large audience testified to the pleasure and profit to be derived from these high class musical treats. The programme, of the choicest description, was executed in the admirable manner to be expected from a master. The selection from Mr. J. F. Barnett's new oratorio, The Raising of Lazarus, was no less admirably performed than appreciated. It was never heard in Leeds before, but Dr. Spark is likely to be often requested to insert it in future programmes. If any of our readers have never had the pleasure of listening to one of these recitals, it is our wish that he go and hear for himself. He cannot fail to be thoroughly delighted.—Leeds Times.

LYNDHURST (Hampshire).—A concert was held in this town on the 4th instant, in aid of the Organ Fund, in connection with the Parish Church. It was largely patronized by the clergy, nobility, and gentry of the neighbourhood. Dr. Verrinder and his Christchurch choir, with the assistance of some professional ladies, gave an excellent programme of sacred and secular pieces. "Lord God of Abraham" (Mendelssohn), sung by Mr. Le Messurier; "From mighty Kings" (Handel), by Miss Leonora Braham, and "Bring no more vain oblations," sacred song from Dr. Verrinder's Israel, produced great effect in the first part, as did also the quartett, "God is a Spirit" (Sir W. S. Bennett), sung by Miss Grace Lindo, Messrs. Noble, Wigg, and Le Messurier. The second part provided the opportunity for frequent encores; amongst these may be enumerated "When evening's twilight" (Hatton); a song by Dr. Verrinder, "The tale he told me," sung by Miss Annie Robinson; "The Bazaar" contributed by Mr. Rudkin, R.A.M.; and last, though not least, Schira's scena, "Sognai," which Miss Grace Lindo, by her finished style of singing, rendered doubly attractive. The motets, part-songs, and other concerted music were admirably given by the whole of the artists; and a cordial vote of thanks proposed by the Rector, the Rev. J. Compton, and the Rev. J. Evans, brought rounds of applause and repeated expressions of approval. The Rector entertained the whole of the artists at dinner, and Dr. Verrinder received the oft-repeated assurance that his efforts had been eminently successful. Lady Dickson placed her carriage at his disposal, for the conveyance of himself and friends to the railway station.

LETTER FROM BEETHOVEN TO MOSCHELES.—My dear Moscheles,—I am convinced you will not take it amiss if I trouble you, as well as Sir Smart, for whom I enclose a letter, with a petition. The matter shortly told is this:—Some years ago, the Philharmonic Society in London made me the handsome offer of arranging a concert for my benefit. At that time, thank God, I was not in such a position as to be obliged to make use of their generous offer. Now, however, I am quite in a different position; for nearly three months I have been laid low by a terribly wearisome illness. I am suffering from dropsy. Schindler will give you more details in the letter which I enclose. You know of old my habit of life. You also know how and where I live. As for my writing music, I have long ceased to think of it. Unhappily, therefore, I may be so placed as to be obliged to suffer want. You have not only a wide circle of acquaintance in London, but also important influence with the Philharmonic Society. I beg you, therefore, to use this influence as far as you can, to induce the Philharmonic Society to resuscitate their generous resolution, and carry it out speedily. I enclose a letter to the same effect to Sir Smart, and have sent another already to Herr Stumpff. Please give the letter to Sir Smart, and unite with him and all my friends in London for the furtherance of my object. I am so weak that even the dictation of this letter is a difficulty to me. Remember me to your amiable wife, and be assured that I shall always be your friend, BEETHOVEN.—Answer me soon, so that I may hear if I am to hope for anything."—The Life of Moscheles.

FLORENCE.—The French normal pitch will be adopted next season at the Pergola.

CASSEL.—There is some talk of raising a monument to Louis Spohr here.

A FALSE REPORT.

The Berlin Echo, the Musikalisches Wochenblatt, and various other German musical papers, lately contained a notice to the effect that "Mr. A. W. Thayer, the celebrated Beethoven Biographer, was about to leave Trieste and settle in Berlin. In answer to this, Mr. Thayer, writing to the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung, says: "What can have given rise to the idea that I am about to remove from Trieste to Berlin is an insoluble riddle." Hereupon, the editor of the last-mentioned paper observes: "The rise of such a report is not quite a riddle to us. The expression of a pious wish has—very pardonably—been twisted into the actual realization of that wish. It is very certain that the estimable biographer entertains no more ardent aspiration than to be quit and free of his mind-crippling official functions, in order that he may complete his work, so important for the history of art. Unfortunately, this must long remain a pium desiderium. Very many persons, only superficially acquainted with American affairs, will hear in the title of Consul-General of the United States of North America the mighty sound of the American dollar. But the American Congress pays no office so wretchedly as that of Consul. This is most deeply to be regretted for the sake of our Consul-Musician, for, under the most favourable circumstances, he can occupy himself with literary pursuits only six months in the year. It is consequently not astonishing that his work advances so slowly, though he devotes both his time and his means to its completion. Yet North America and Germany are especially bound to foster the work in every way. But people appear to have entirely lost the spirit of self-sacrifice in something absolutely necessary to art in general. The longer things go on in this style, the more difficult will be Mr. Thayer's task, because that hollow-headed critical scribbler, Ludwig Nohl, will never tire of serving up to his 'fair Beethoven friends' the most absurd twaddle about the great composer, so that the cleansing of this Augean stable by Mr. Thayer must necessarily become more and more difficult and unpleasant every day."

THE LATE HERR DAVID.

Born at Hamburgh, on the 19th June, 1810, the late Concertmeister David displayed at an early age a decided aptitude for music, and, even while a boy, obtained unusual mastery over the violin. Scarcely had he completed his thirteenth year, before he was sent to Cassel, where, under Spohr's guidance, he made rapid progress in his art. As far back as 1825, he undertook a long professional tour, which served to introduce him honourably to the world of music. After then remaining a considerable time as first violinist at the Königstadt Theatre, Berlin, and subsequently at the Theatre in Dorpat, he was appointed Concertmeister in Leipsic, to replace Matthäi, who had died a short time previously. He here enjoyed an opportunity of developing and elevating his peculiar talent more and more. No less valuable, however, was the benefit derived by the Gewandhaus band from his efforts as leader, in which capacity he paid as much attention and intelligence to details, as he insisted on devoting energy and precision to every work as a whole. When his friend Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, who was the cause of his being invited to Leipsic, afterwards set about founding the Conservatory there (1843), David joined him with fiery zeal, and placed his services as a teacher at the disposal of those interested in the new musical nursery, for the benefit of which he subsequently worked without cessation. A large number of violinists have become celebrated under his auspices. From his industry as a teacher sprang a long series, comprising admirable editions of ancient and modern classical Concertstücke, Bach's Violin Sonatas, and other things, but above all his model "Violin School," in which he poured the rich stores of his experience and observation. He came forward, also, as a composer, writing especially for his own instrument many well conceived and effective Concertos, Variations, and Etudes. He entered, too, the sphere of the stage, with his comic opera, Hans Wacht, produced in 1852. Master David was a genuine artist, who faithfully tended, and ruled with a sure hand, the field he selected. He belonged to the circle of choice spirits who constitute the fame and glory of our town, and whom it will be difficult to replace.—Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung.

Digitized by Google

J. S. BACH'S PASSION OF ST. MATTHEW.

The music set by Bach to St. Matthew's history of the Passion is essentially an unveiling of the personal feelings of the composer, his vivid sense of the truth of the incidents it depicts, and his loving devotion to the divine Sufferer, whose relation to himself is shown to be regarded as of the closest intimacy. It displays the facts with the vivacity of an eye-witness, or one, at least, who witnesses them by the second sight of firm belief; and it comments upon them with the affection of a participator in the benefits which have resulted from them, and who feels that his special welfare is due to their enactment.

From primitive times it was the custom of the Church to keep green the memory of the sacred history by a public recitation, on Palm Sunday and Good Friday, of those chapters in one or other of the Gospels which relate the circumstances of the Passion. To give dramatic force to the narration, the several personages who speak in the course of it were represented by different individuals, whereas, he who recites the story was, throughout, the same.

It was the special design of Luther to retain, in the Reformed Church, this primitive usage of the periodical recitation of the Passion. According to his desire, the simple manner of its intonation, by two priests only in his own time, was early amplified; and a German version of the text was printed in 1573, with music for the recitation, and introductory and final choruses. As music advanced, its utmost resources were always appropriated to the illustration, for Church use, of the sacred story.

The German opera was especially flourishing in Hamburg at the beginning of the 18th century, and Keiser, Handel, and other successful writers for the theatre, applied its style to ecclesiastical use, in setting, not the Gospel text, but original poems to the same purport, for Church performance.

When, in 1723, Bach went to Leipzig, as cantor of St. Thomas's School, and musical director of the churches of St. Thomas and St. Nicholas, he found the learned and zealous Solomon Deyling filling an important church office in that city. This eminent divine perceived the extraordinary powers of the musician, and had the happy thought of turning them to the best account in the Church service. The above-named works excited wide interest in the Hamburg celebrations of Easter. Still more was public attention drawn to the Dresden performances of the Roman Service, in which the singers of the renowned Italian opera, under the direction of Hasse, took part. Deyling deemed that it would be for the welfare of the Reformed Church to present in its Service some counter attraction to these popular celebrations of the Mass, and he deemed our Lord's Passion a worthy subject, and the season of its commemoration a fitting period for the fulfilment of his design. He proposed to Bach, therefore, the composition of a Passion in which the texts of scripture should be rigidly preserved, but interspersed with reflective passages, and further interpolated with pertinent Chorals, of which the words with the tunes formed, as they do now, the first step in North German schooling. and of which, therefore, the congregation at large could participate in the performance. Here were to be combined the ecclesiastical, the artistic, and the popular elements; and their concentration in a single work was to be confided to the man of all others, in all times, best qualified for the task, whose competency was proved by the devout habit which fitted him to penetrate and expound the purport of the Gospel text, by the consummate musicianship which enabled him to bring all the appliances of art to bear upon the subject, and by the vast experience in teaching, accompanying, and elaborating the popular hymns, which familiarized him with the sympathies of the people and the capabilities of the tunes.

The present work was performed for the first time at St. Thomas's Church, in Leipzig, at the Evening Service on Good Friday, 1729. After this the Matthew Passion lay in forgetfulness for a hundred years, and seems not to have been performed again until its revival in Berlin, under the youthful Mendelssohn's direction, on the 12th of March, 1829. The success of the Passion, when it was awakened from its hundred years' sleep, led to its frequent repetition in different German towns, where it is said to hold the same popular esteem that Handel's Messiah does in this country.

The Matthew Passion comprises the 26th and 27th chapters of that Evangelist's Gospel. The first part proceeds to the 56th verse of the 26th chapter, and the second part includes from the 75th verse of this to the last verse of the following chapter. The two parts were originally separated by the preaching of a sermon—a point for particular notice, since proving how especially the work was integrated in the Church Service, and showing how strongly the Lutheran divine felt upon a subject upon which there is an unfortunate difference of opinion among English authorities of the present day, namely, the superior fitness of the church to any other edifice for the performance of oratorios. The reflective pieces with which the Gospel text is interspersed, were written, under the pseudonym of Picander, by Christian Friedrich Henrici. The Chorals with which the Gospel text is further interpolated are selected from those in ordinary use in the Lutheran Church, and consist of such as specially illustrate the several points of the story at which they are introduced. These hymns—the verses nor the tunes—can, unfortunately, never produce elsewhere the same effect which they must always have in Germany, where they are intertwined with the fondest and most intimate affections of singers and hearers from childhood. In England, for instance, we can but admire them, as we do those in St. Paul, for their abstract musical beauty, since they are to us divested of all those strong and endearing associations which spring from life-long familiarity, and of that inseparability of words from notes which connects every hymn with its peculiar occasion, and thus makes each awaken the household sympathy of a Teuton, with the incident to whose enforcement it is thus applied.

The work is written for two complete choirs, each consisting of solo voices, chorus, full orchestra, and organ. The Chorals were originally sung by the congregation, that is, the tunes, of course, while the harmony was sustained by the two choruses, accompanied by the two organs, and sometimes other instruments of both orchestras.

In England, Bach is chiefly accredited for his fugues. Wholooks for any of these in the Passion will look vainly; and if he be not disappointed at the absence of fugal element throughout the work, he will be surprised at the poetical beauty of its declamation, the continuity of its melodies, and their truthfulness to the subject they aim to express, at the choral effects as fine as they are unfamiliar, and at the loving tenderness and intense religious feeling that infuse the whole.

The general character and prevalent expression of this oratorio are indicated by its title of the Passion. "He suffered and was buried" is the entire subject of the work, in the embodiment of which no tones but of sadness could appropriately be employed, since no feeling but of grief was to be illustrated. Despair, however, is as remote as jubilation from the purport and the rendering of the text; and thus all powerful means of contrast were beyond the use of the artist, whose sole resource, therefore, in this respect was to vary the accents of one penitential outpouring. Here, then, are no Hallelujahs, no shouts of glory, no ejaculations of great rejoicing, such as diversify the great sacred oratorio of Handel; sorrow in the ceaseless theme, and meekness is the steadfast spirit in which this is uttered.

The number and variety of instruments employed in the course of the Passion are remarkable. Sweetness and roundness of tone appear to have been the composer's object rather than loudness; for in no instance are brass instruments employed, though Bach's frequent use of drums, trumpets, and trombones in other of his orchestral works, proves that these were all at his command.

(To be continued.)

—o—

FRANK MORI.

(To the Editor of the "Daily Post.")

SIR,—Allow me to correct an error in the paragraph referring to the death of my friend, Frank Mori, in to-day's paper. It is said he was married to Miss Louisa Pyne, whereas she is the wife of Mr. Frank Bodda. Frank Mori always enjoyed a joke; one, I well remember, being the stamping of the tickets for his benefit concert with his seal bearing the words "Memento Mori." Many will do so amongst them.—Yours, &c.,

C.

August 11th.

Digitized by Google

MADAME ANNA BISHOP IN CALIFORNIA.

(From the "Oakland Daily Transcript," July 23.)

Brayton Hall was crowded last evening with a delighted and fashionable auditory to listen to a talented troupe of artists. Really Mdme. Anna Bishop is a marvel! How well Barry Cornwall's charming words come in, when looking upon her pleasant face, and listening to her exquisite vocalization:—

"Touch us gently, gentle Time,
As we glide adown thy stream,
Gentle as we sometimes glide,
Through a quiet, quiet dream!"

The singing of this lady is the perfection of art, and in the opening recitative and aria, "Ah! come Rapida," by Meyerbeer, her wonderful execution and magnificent method elicited great applause. Mr. Frank Gilder is the best pianist that has ever visited this coast. With the exception of Rubinstein (whom we heard in New York last season) we place Mr. Gilder in the foremost rank as a pianist. He fairly electrified the audience. Mr. Alfred Wilkie has a charming tenor voice, and gave, with fine effect, "Come into the garden, Maud." Mr. Gottschalk has a superb baritone voice, and sang "The heart bow'd down" with feeling and expression. The duet, "Sunset," by Stephen Massett, a gem, was loudly encored. In this the voices of Mdme. Bishop and Mr. Wilkie blended beautifully, and the audience gave unmistakable tokens of approval. The laughing trio sent every one home in good humour, and the feeling evidently was that Madame Bishop should give another entertainment which we hope she will do. It is the wish of many that Mr. Gilder would give a pianoforte recital, and Madame Bishop a sacred concert. Crowds will go to hear her sing "I know that my Redeemer liveth."

---

CARPIGNANO-SESIA.—A theatre, for which the authorities of the district gave the ground, the timber, and a part of the requisite funds, is nearly approaching completion. It has been built expresely for the representation of a mystery play entitled: Vita, Passione, Morte, e Resurrezione di Gesù Cristo. The proceeds are to go to the erection of a new bell tower for the parish church.

VIENNA.—At the Imperial Operahouse, there is to be a new mise-en-scène of the second act of Herr R. Wagner's Tannhäuser; the grand Hall in the Wartburg, we are informed, is to be entirely re-decorated, and the procession of the Guests marshalled according to Herr R. Wagner's original notion. The important result of this determination on the part of the management is that the members of the chorus will no longer step from the left entrance, as they were taught to do by Herr Dingelstadt, but enter by the grand central door at the back. Might not the management announce a farce under the title of Shakespeare's comedy of Much Ado about Nothing?—Herr Betz will shortly arrive from Berlin, and open as Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger. He will probably sing this part three times. The other characters selected by him are Wolfram in Tannhäuser, and Telramund in Lohengrin.—Mdme. Adelina Patti has appointed Signor Franchi, formerly secretary to Signor Merelli, to represent her in the negociations with the manager of the Theater an der Wien, with regard to her singing there next spring. The lady will, probably, sing also at the new Komische Oper, provided the proprietors can arrange matters with the Municipal Authorities. It appears that the architect carried out the new building on a scale larger than that indicated in his plans. The result is that, just as the Theatre is nearly approaching completion, the conscript fathers of the city have issued an order for its demolition! Let us hope they may relent.

Continued.

Then at length it was plainly made known
How many had lost all they could call their own;
'Twas thought at once they would succeed,
By asking the public for their aid in need.

The Lord Mayor he has quickly sent
Five pounds as a kind compliment,
And then did promise to assist
In opening a subscription list.

The Sydenham Crystal Palace on the hill
Remains the palace of the people still,
And will give a benefit so kind,
Their name will stand in history enshrined.

I hope all sympathisers there will meet,
And take their pleasures in the treat,
And prove to all what good they've done,
By many helping 'tis better than one.

WAIFS.

Madame Balfe is staying at Bognor, on the Sussex coast.

Mr. Charles Lyall has returned from the Engandine (Switzerland).

M. Alexandre Billet has gone to Boulogne-sur-Mer, to pass his vacation.

Mr. Wilhelm Ganz has left town to pass his vacation at Great Yarmouth.

Mr. Santley has returned to London from his tour in Italy and Switzerland.

Mr. Miles Bennett (bass) is announced to make his first appearance in oratorio, in the Creation, at Covent Garden Theatre.

The daughter of Vieuxtemps, the accomplished violinist, was married, on Tuesday last, to M. Radotowski, a Polish Doctor of Medicine.

Miss Emma Busby played Beethoven's Concerto in C minor, at the orchestral and vocal concerts given in the Royal Albert Hall, last week.

The annual gathering of the Lancashire and Yorkshire musicians took place lately at Dunford Bridge. The weather being fine, there was a large attendance. The oratorio performed was Samson, under the leadership of Mr. Cook, of Oldham.

Mr. Oberthür's popular overture, "Rubezahl," which has been played by every important society on the continent, was given at the orchestral concerts in the Royal Albert Hall last week. It was listened to with great interest, and received with marked favour.

The Margate papers speak in high terms of the vocal abilities of Miss Holcroft, a young lady who has been singing at the "Hall-by-the-Sea." This young artist, they write, "who is almost a novice in the profession, has a lovely voice, which has evidently been carefully trained. She also sings with great expression and brilliancy." We hope to hear more of her.

On the close of the season of French plays at the Princess's Theatre, Mons. Goossens, the chef d'orchestre, was presented by the members of the orchestra with a set of diamond studs, as a mark of their esteem. Mr. Benjamin Wells, the flautist, was deputed by the members to express their admiration of his talents as a musician, and to hand him the testimonial.

To-day is the anniversary of the opening of the Brighton Aquarium. The band of the Queen's Bays, the town band, and Mr. Bates's band will play on the occasion; and in the afternoon there is to be a concert, with Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Patey, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Foli as vocalists. Messrs. Lyon and Hall, of Warwick Mansion, have the arrangements.

ORGAN RECITAL.—Mr. Walter Parratt, organist of Magdalen College, Oxford, played the following pieces on the great organ at the Royal Albert Hall, on Friday last:—Sonata in F major (Silas); air with variations in G (Guilmant); toccata and fugue in C major (Bach); allegro marziale (W. T. Best); andante from the fifth quintet (Mozart); and Grand Solemn March (Henry Smart).

Mr. C. J. Bishenden has written to the committee of French operatic vocalists—we learn from a letter addressed to the Courier de l'Europe, by Mr. Bishenden—regretting his being obliged to decline an invitation to a grand banquet, offered by them to him "as the principal advocate of the adoption of the Diapason Normal in England." Mr. Bishenden says he is not by any means the only musician in London who has taken a deep interest in the subject, and cites Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Barnby, and others, as being first on the list, and therefore deserving the honour offered to him.

The death of Mr. Frank Mori was announced in our obituary last week. He was a son of M. Mori, partner in the late firm of Mori and Lavenue, music publishers, formerly in Bond Street. M. Mori was also a famed violinist, long connected with the King's Theatre when Spagnoletti was the conductor. Mr. Frank Mori was the composer of several popular songs, cantatas, &c., and was a well known accompanist for the concert-room in town and country. Mr. Frank Mori was attacked with paralysis some two years since, but he rallied sufficiently to attend to his duties as one of the professors of singing at the Crystal Palace till recently.

WEBER'S DEATH.—Early this morning I was summoned in all haste to Sir G. Smart's. At eleven o'clock last night Fürstenau had conducted Weber to his bed-room; his friends went to the door at an early hour, but found it locked inside, contrary to Weber's promise. To do this, he must have got up during the night. It was in vain to knock or call for admission; no answer came. So Sir George sent to me and other friends, and the door was broken open in our presence. The noise did not disturb the sleeper; it was the sleep of death. His head, resting on his left arm, was lying quietly on the pillow . . . Any attempt to describe the depth of my sorrow would be profanation. I thought Weber a composer quite sui generis; one who had the imperishable glory of leading back to our German music a public vacillating between Mozart, Beethoven, and Rossini.—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

Mdlle. Lillie Albrecht, the young and talented pianist, whose successful début at the Hanover Square Rooms, in June last, may be remembered, has been engaged by M. Rivière for his promenade concerts. Mdlle. Albrecht is one of Mr. Ignace Gibsone's most talented pupils.

Messrs. Hutchings & Romer are about to publish all the posthumous compositions of Rossini. The "Song of the Titans," a "National Hymn," an "Ave Maria," and a "Cantemus," which are to be given at the Birmingham Festival the week after next, will be the first brought out by the spirited publishers. The posthumous works of "The Swan of Pesaro" consist of one hundred and sixty compositions of various characters.

"Mr. Duvivier's 'Symphonic Fantasia,' founded on themes from his opera, The Highland Widow, will be"—writes The Observer—"a valuable addition to orchestral repertories, its skillfully-varied orchestration and solid harmonies being such as to satisfy professional critics, while its abundance of melody and picturesque character ensure its popularity with the general public. The work commences with an 'Introduction,' followed by a 'Rustic chorus.' This leads to the scene of the 'Magic Mirror,' with solo passages for the clarionet, admirably played by Mr. Snelling. The next scene, 'The Village merrymaking,' is full of animation; and the different elements of the crowd are well typified in the distribution of the score. Next comes 'The Highland Piper,' with a duet for oboe (Mr. Malsch) and cor-anglais (Mr. G. Horton). Both instruments were excellently played. One of the most interesting portions of the work was the succeeding scene, descriptive of the 'Rising of the Moon,' and the 'Calm of Night.' This was really a piece of fine 'tone painting,' and a mysterious effect was given by the occasional reiteration of a single note, played pianissimo, on the large drum, while violins and tenors were giving forth a dreamy, soft melody. Then came a sudden trumpet-call, followed by sounds of combat, a few bars of prayer music, and the final 'Triumphal Chorus.' The work was frequently interrupted by applause, and the composer was called on to the platform for a special tribute of cheering."

PADUA.—In consequence of her dread of the cholera, Signora Galletti has left the town, and will not sing at the theatre as expected.

MADRID.—A two-act comic opera, El Processo del Can-Can, has been successfully produced at the theatre in the Buen Retiro Gardens.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

CLARENDON PRESS (Oxford).—"A Music Primer for Schools," by the Rev. John Troutbeck, M.A., and Rev. Reginald F. Dale, M.A., Mus. B.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

MIGNON.

Opera, in Three Acts,

BY

AMBROISE THOMAS.

The Opera complete, for Voice and Piano, with Italian and French words, net 20s.

All the following Songs, Duets, &c., can be obtained at HALF the marked PRICES, either with Italian or with French Words:—

| | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1. | STANZE (Basso)—"Fuggitivo e tremante" ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 2. | ARIA (Tenore)—"Si, solingo ognor pel mondo" ... | 6 | 0 |
| 3. | ROMANZA (Mezzo Soprano)—"Non conosci il bel suol" ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 4. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Tenore)—"Leggiadre rondinelle" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 5. | TRIO—"Riconoscente amore, se nel cor" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 6. | STROFE (Soprano)—"Chi m'ama or venga meco" | 4 | 6 |
| 7. | MADRIGALE—"Bella Diva, per pieta" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 8. | DUETTO (Soprano e Tenore)—"Non darti alcun pensier" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 9. | VALZA DEL DUETTO—"Gai complimenti, plausi e sospir" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 6 | 0 |
| 10. | STIRIANA (Mezzo Soprano)—"Io conosco un garzoncel" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 11. | MELODIA (Tenore)—"Addio Mignon fa core" ... | 5 | 0 |
| 12. | RECIT. (Cantabile) (Mezzo Soprano)—"Ella e la presso a lui" ... ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 13. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Basso)—"Sofferto hai tu? conosci il duol?" ... ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 14. | POLACCA (Soprano)—"Io son Titania la bionda" | 6 | 0 |
| 15. | CORO—"Or—sù sciogliam le vele" ... ... | 5 | 0 |
| 16. | NINNA-NANNA (Basso)—"Del suo cor calmai le pene" ... ... ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 17. | ROMANZA (Tenore)—"Ah non crede a l'afflitta nel vergin suo candore" ... ... ... ... ... | 4 | 0 |
| 18. | DUETTO (Mezzo Soprano e Tenore)—"Ah! son felice! io son rapita" ... ... ... ... | 7 | 6 |
| 19. | PREGHIERA (Mezzo Soprano)—"O vergin Maria il Signore sta conte" ... ... ... ... ... | 3 | 0 |
| 20. | FORLANA (Soprano)—"Finche resti al prato un fior" | 6 | 0 |
| 21. | ARIA (Soprano)—"A meraviglia, a meraviglia" ... | 6 | 0 |
| 22. | RONDO GAVOTTA (Mezzo Soprano)—"In veder l'amata stanza d'alle" ... ... ... ... | 5 | 0 |

N.B.—All the above Songs are published in different Keys, to suit all Voices.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

Arrangements for the Pianoforte of the above Opera, by the best Composers, can be obtained from the Publishers.

Digitized by Google

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

ROSE-LEAVES.

MORCEAU ÉLÉGANT.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

Played by the Composer at his concert with great success.

LES TROMPETTES DE LA GUERRE.

MORCEAU MILITAIRE.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LA TRAVIATA.

FANTASIA ON VERDI'S OPERA.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

SOUVENIR DE LA MADELEINE.

MORCEAU SUR LES OFFERTOIRES DE LEFÉBURE-WELY.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

WALTER MAYNARD'S SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION.

MUSIC COPY BOOKS,

Nos. 1 to 6, Price 6d. each.

TRANSPARENT MUSIC SLATE.

Price 3s.

A knowledge of the construction of Music is acquired in the readiest and most simple manner by this method of teaching.

No attempt is made to introduce a new theory, either in the Copy Books or Transparent Slate.

Music being acknowledged as a universal language, its orthodox notation, rules, and signs, are explained and illustrated according to a plan which any novice can understand, and by which they cannot fail to become indelibly impressed upon the memory.

The system, although but recently published, is already approved and encouraged by every reliable authority upon the subject of musical education.

To beginners its simplicity renders it invaluable; to those who have acquired certain mechanical or vocal facility, but who are deficient in musical knowledge, it has proved more useful than any other method of education, owing to the facilities it offers of self-help.

The Music Copy Books contain a progressive course of instruction in music, leading up to some of the most advanced branches of harmony.

SEQUEL TO THE ABOVE—Price 6d.
KEY TO THE SEQUEL—Price 6d.

The following quotations from the Press show the favourable reception with which the new system has met from the most influential Art Critics of the day:—

"Mr. Walter Maynard makes a very novel application of a very familiar help to knowledge. The system is of manifest value. It impresses 'hard facts' upon the mind in a fashion not less easy than agreeable."—Daily Telegraph.

"Mr. Walter Maynard makes the study of music a pleasing amusement, and the early tasks of students delightful. He has cleared away a great deal of difficulty in their paths, and made intelligible much that would otherwise be dark and obscure."—News of the World.

"We could wish to see this excellent system of Mr. Maynard's followed in the public schools of the country The necessity of teaching music seems to us palpable, and the necessity once admitted, can there be a better mode of instructing it than by the system which Mr. Maynard has originated? The instructions are simple and easy to retain in the mind. Mr. Maynard smooths every difficulty that can be smoothed."—Lloyd's.

"The means of obtaining knowledge are interesting and agreeable, and the knowledge thus obtained will be solid and lasting. Time and labour are recognized, thought and intention are inculcated, encouraged and rewarded."—Orchestra.

"To schools and teachers the system will be invaluable, and for classes it offers advantages that no other system possesses."—Weekly Times.

"That part of the work devoted to harmony will be especially welcome to all teachers who, while anxious to give their pupils some intelligent notion of what music really is, have found great difficulty in finding suitable instructions."—Echo.

"The observations of the author, and his instructions for the pianoforte, harmony, and vocalization, are admirable. Assuredly, we wish him success in this, his new scheme of teaching music."—Evening Standard.

"Calculated largely to facilitate the task of popular musical education. The plan is a novel one, the chief principle of which is the exercise of the pupil's memory by first copying the exercise at the head of one page, and then writing it entirely from recollection."—Daily News.

"We consider it an easy and excellent way of obtaining a complete knowledge of music, with comparatively little trouble."—Dispatch.

"These books may be regarded in a two-fold capacity—first, as books of ordinary instruction; second, as making an extraordinary application of a familiar educational device. Their value in both respects is manifest. The lessons are comprehensive and clearly expressed, so that the student finds all that it is necessary for him to know in the early stage of his career. We, therefore, strongly recommend these books, both for home and school use."—Musical World.

"We have no doubt that Mr. Maynard's work will be adopted by teachers, whose labour it will be found to simplify very greatly, while it will materially aid the student."—Manchester Guardian.

"It will probably form a greater help to the acquisition of music than any educational work with the same object that has yet been published."—Leeds Mercury.

"Mr. Walter Maynard has done a good service to the students of music."—Leamington Courier.

"Particularly suited to those disposed to the practice of self-help, as well as to those who can afford the aid of a professor."—Liverpool Daily Courier.

"We highly recommend these books to the attention of music teachers, and those who wish to learn music easily, cheaply, and thoroughly. No such cheap and able class books have been before seen by us."—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

"A very useful idea, that will lighten the drudgery of music."—Malvern News.

"It is impossible to praise too highly this series of Copy Books. If anything will induce a young pupil to prosecute a progressive study of music, these Copy Books may be relied upon to do so."—Glasgow Daily Herald.

"The plan is excellent, the labour imposed is very trifling, and if the exercises are carefully written they will be a great help in enabling the pupil to remember what has been previously learned."—Birmingham Morning News.

"The Copy Book feature, which requires the learner to transcribe what is put before him, and to commit to paper numerous and valuable exercises, is an advantage apparent at first sight, especially with regard to the studies in notation and harmony."—Sunday Times.

MAY BE HAD OF

CHAPPELL & CO., 50, New Bond St., London,

Or of any Musicseller in Town or Country.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, to be performed for the first time at the approaching Festival, are in the Press:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans,

National Hymn,

Ave Maria,

AND

Cantemus.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 16, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 34. SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1873. Price { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE—EXTRA PERFORMANCE of OPERAS in ENGLISH, being the LAST THIS SEASON.—THIS DAY, SATURDAY, at Three, repetition of Bellini's Grand Opera, "NORMA." Messrs. Maas (his last appearance previous to his departure for America), Walsh, and Henry Corri; Miss Alice Barth, Mrs. Sharp, and Madame Ida Gilliess-Corri. Full orchestra and chorus. Conductor, Mr. Manns. New scenery, dresses, and appointments.—Numbered reserved stalls, Half-a-Crown; unnumbered reserved seats, One Shilling. Subscribers holding serial stalls will be admitted to this performance. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

"JUST AS OF OLD."—MR. W. H. CUMMINGS' New Song (the Poetry by F. E. WEATHERLY, B.A.) will be sung by the Composer at the BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL, AUGUST 27th. Published in B flat and D flat. Post free for 24 stamps. Lamborn Cock, 63, New Bond Street, and to be had of all the principal musicsellers in Birmingham.

Le Carneval de Venise.

MISS ROSE HERSEE will sing Sir Julius Benedict's Variations on "LE CARNEVAL DE VENISE," at Rivière's Concerts, at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, THIS EVENING.

MISS BLANCHE RIEVES will sing Balfe's popular song, "KILLARNEY," August 27, St. George's Hall; September 4, Belvedere: Sept. 29, Harrogate.

"PEACEFULLY SLUMBER."

MADAME PATEY will sing Randegger's admired Song, "PEACEFULLY SLUMBER," at the Birmingham Festival.

THE KIBBLE CRYSTAL ART PALACE, ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, Glasgow.—The Treasurer will be happy to hear from first-class Vocalists, Instrumentalists, and Concert touring parties, stating terms and dates vacant, for Engagements in Glasgow. Apply to Mr. Robert Downie, 131, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

HENRY W. GOODBAN'S "GIRLS AND BOYS' OWN BOOK FOR THE PIANOFORTE." An easy, concise, and complete Tutor. Post free for 32 Stamps. "Among the many instruction books for pianoforte playing which have come under our notice, we have never met with one so easily intelligible to youthful students. Teachers and parents will find this a most valuable acquisition."—Observer. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

QUACK-QUACK.—The immensely exciting WILD DUCK GALOP, introduced nightly in the comic opera of the "Wonderful Duck," at the Opera-Comique, and vociferously encored. Can be sung as well as played. 18 Stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS' NEW PART-SONG, "Let the hills resound," was magnificently sung by 500 members of the South Wales Choir, on the Lawn at Marlborough House, in the presence of Royalty. Class copy, four stamps. As a song, 3s.; and piano solo, 4s.

W. T. WRIGHTON'S BEST SONGS—"Thy voice is near," 4s.; "Her bright smile," 4s.; "Only one to bless and cheer me," 4s.; "The wishing cap," 4s.; "The liquid gem," 4s.; "O, would I were a fairy queen," 3s.; "Be happy and never despair," 3s.; "What though thy sun be clouded," 3s.—London: Robert Cocks & Co., New Burlington Street. All post-free at half price in stamps. Order everywhere.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

These Instruments are now acknowledged to be the best for use in Church, Chapel, School-room, or Drawing-room. See Testimonials from Sir Julius Benedict, and other eminent Musicians.

PRICES, 20 TO 200 GUINEAS.

Illustrated Lists Gratis and Post Free.

Sole Agents:
METZLER & CO., 37, GREAT MARLBOROUGH STREET, LONDON, W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., D.C.L.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY, the 22nd September, and will terminate on Saturday the 20th of December.
Candidates of admission can be examined at the Institution on THURSDAY, the 18th September, at eleven o'clock, and every following Thursday at the same hour.
By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

Just Published.

"DREAM ON,"
SONG,
Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"
"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"
("Connais tu le pays.")
Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,
In the Opera of "MIGNON."
The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W

"THE PET LINNET,"
BALLAD,
Sung with great applause by Miss LINA GLOVER at the Royal Albert Hall.
Composed by J. W. GLOVER.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co, 244, Regent Street, W.

MONS. FAURE'S NEW SONGS.
"VALSE DES FEUILLES" .. .. .. .. .. Price, net, 2s. 6d.
"LE PRESSOIR" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. " 2s. 6d.
Composed and Sung by J. FAURE.
(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE VALLON NATAL,"
MELODIE.
De Mdme. WILLY DE ROTHSCHILD.
Price 2s. 6d. net.
(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

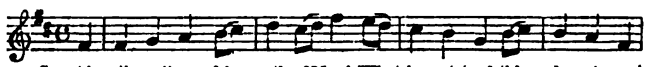
Digitized by Google

Just Published,

"SWEET HAWTHORN TIME."

WORDS BY (SONG.) MUSIC BY

WM. HENDERSON. EMILE BERGER.



Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May! What joys at-tend thine ad-vent gay!

Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May!
What joys attend thine advent gay!
On every tree the birdies sing,
From hill and dale glad echoes ring;
The lark, inspir'd, to Heav'n ascends,
The gurgling brook in beauty wends
By mossy bank and grassy brae,
Where violets bloom and lambkins play.
Delightful Spring—sweet month of May
What joys attend thine advent gay!

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"A pleasing song, entitled 'Sweet Hawthorn Time,' . . . . . would be a trump card' in the hands of any amateur able to do it justice."—Daily Telegraph.

Just Published.

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG.

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"OUR DARLING,"

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

NEW SONG BY SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

"LOVE AT SEA,"

Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Composed by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE RAT DE VILLE,"

ET

"LE RAT DES CHAMPS,"

(FABLE DE LAFONTAINE,)

Chantée par JULES LEFORT.

Musique de ETIENNE REY.

Price 4s.

(Edition de L. Escudier, Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ST. PATRICK AT TARA,"

CANTATA,

With characteristic words from Ossian, Moore, Clarence, Mangan, &c.

Composed, and dedicated by express permission, to

His Royal Highness PRINCE ARTHUR PATRICK

By J. W. GLOVER.

Price 5s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANO MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.

WEDDING WALTZ. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

LA CAPRICIEUSE. Morceau de Salon. By GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

VALSE DE BRAVOURE. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

STAR OF THE CIRQUE. Lancers. (Illustrated Title). Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

BEFORE THE WIND. Galop. Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

MARCHE BRESILLIENNE. Composed by IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

STELLA. Grande Valse de Concert. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

BIANCA. Mazurka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 2s.

HAIDÉE. Polka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 3s.

NEW SONGS.

UN DESIO. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

LA VISIONE. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

IO LA VIDI. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

ROW, GONDOLIER, Barcarolle. Sung by Miss José SHERRINGTON. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

M'HA LASCIATO, Stornello. Cantata da Madame CONNEAU. Composto dal Cavaliere FABIO CAMPANA. Price 3s.

THE MELTING OF THE SNOW. Duet. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE and Madame PATEY, at the London Ballad Concerts. Composed by HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

MID THE SCENTED CLOVER. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

AH! WELL A-DAY. Song. Composed by JESSICA RANKIN. Price 3s.

LA BACCANTE. Canzone. Cantata da Madame SINICO. Composto dal ETTORE FIORI. Price 4s. (With a portrait of Madame Sinico).

THE BIRD'S LOVE SONG (with Clarionet Obbligato). By HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

THE MARINER. Sung by Signor FOLI. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

J. S. BACH'S PASSION OF ST. MATTHEW.

(Continued from page 560.)

The consideration of this wonderful work naturally assumes a threefold division. Thus it will be, to speak separately, (I.) of the narrative portions set to Scriptural text; (II.) of the choral tunes employed to connect these most intimately with the people's sympathy; and (III.) of the reflective passages, which may be accepted as the composer's comment on the sacred story.

1. The Gospel text is set throughout as recitative, wherein the part of the Evangelist or Narrator is assigned to a tenor, and those of the persons incidentally introduced are respectively allotted to different singers—these never having to repeat a single word, and scarcely ever having to sing a rhythmical phrase, far less a distinct movement. The incidental choruses are indeed somewhat more extended, but the length of these is limited by dramatic propriety, and never exceeds what may well be supposed to be the duration of the embodied action; and where the words are reiterated in such extension, it is for the sake of increasing the vitality of the scene rather than for that of completing the musical idea. A happy instance of this is where, at the Last Supper, when Jesus has declared that one of the twelve will betray him, they everyone say, "Lord, is it I?" The astonishment of all at what they regard less as a suspicion than a prophecy, the anxious distrust of some in their own weakness, the steadfast confidence of others in the devotion they feel for their divine Master, the loving eagerness of each to avert from himself the imputation and the possibility of fulfilling it—such is the various expression given to the heartfelt question as it passes from lip to lip, but is not more often uttered than it may have been on the actual occasion.

There needs some amount of reverence, on the part of the auditor, for the work, and still more for the subject, to secure him against any feeling of strangeness in the singer's rising to utter a single ejaculation perhaps, or a complete sentence at most, which if uprightly regarded may be supposed to interrupt rather than to continue and vivify the narrative. An auditor of the present day, hearing the oratorio, not in a church but in a concert-room, and habituated to the forms as much as the freedoms of such a locality, may be liable to so misconceive the author's purpose and its fulfilment; but in this case the custom of the whole Christian era would testify against him, for it has been the Church's wont from primitive times to set forth the relation after this particular manner, and Bach's treatment of the text differs only from long-established precedent in the admirable truthfulness and the heart-searching expression with which it declaims the whole, as distinguished from the bald chanting of Roman use and the scarcely more impressive recitative of earlier Lutheran musicians.

The single bass line with figures indicates the silence of the orchestra throughout this portion of the work, a device for giving full freedom to the singer's recitation and the utmost clearness to his enunciation. Be it not supposed, however, that the composer's purpose or the effect of the original performance would be in any way represented by the English practice of accompanying recitative on a violoncello and a double bass, and assigning the articulation of the harmony more particularly to the former. It must have been Bach's habit, as it certainly was Handel's, to accompany recitative upon the harpsichord—or, perhaps, occasionally upon a very soft stop of the organ—and to allow the bowed instruments to support the bass notes only. The words spoken by Jesus throughout the narrative, and these words only, are accompanied by all the stringed instruments, and mostly in long-sustained widely dispersed chords.

II. It is to speak now of the Choral tunes intended to be sung by the congregation. The character of harmony applied is not that, we may presume, which the author would generally have employed in writing for popular use, when the tunes are sung in the ordinary Service. On the contrary, instead of giving the broadest expression in the harmonization which might be applicable to each entire hymn, the aim here has obviously been to paint the purport of the particular verse that is selected, and to make this, so far as possible, an illustration of the point of the narrative at which it is inserted. It must have had a peculiar effect upon the singers when they found the character and expression of their well-known tunes qualified by the accompanying harmony, and found these tunes, with the selected verse of the hymns, thus specially appropriated to the situations where they are introduced.

One tune occurs four times in the course of the Oratorio.* As "O Lord, Thy love's unbounded," it follows the promise of Jesus, to go before His disciples into Galilee, when He shall be risen again; and to the words, "O Thou whose head was wounded," it is sequent upon the mockery of the soldiers, when they strike their enrobed prisoner. This repeated use of the tune may have been because of the pertinence of the words associated with it to the several situations of its introduction; may have been because of the beauty and the susceptibility of various treatment of the tune itself; and may have been because of the tune's remarkable popularity. Bach has wonderfully diversified its character by his different harmonization, fitting it thus to the various situations.

Another tune is twice employed. It is assigned to the congregation, with the words, "O blessed Jesus," when its plaintive strains bespeak our sorrow at the Saviour's first announcement that his crucifixion will follow the Feast of the Passover—our sorrow, because we who sing and we who hear are assumed to lament his sufferings as much as repent the sin for which they were borne. It occurs again, but there for the select choir only, interspersing the infinitely pathetic tenor solo, "O grief," which reflects upon the agony in Gethsemane.

III. It is, lastly, to speak of the reflective passages which constitute, abstractly as music, to the general hearer, and for ex-ecclesiastical performance, the most attractive, and, perhaps, most interesting, portions of the work.

The oratorio opens with a double chorus, in which one choir represents Zion exhorting believers to weep for the sins of the world, and the other choir represents the faithful responding to the summons. A singularly effective application of the antiphonal form is felicitously appropriated to the distinction of these two individualities. The exclamations, "Behold him, the Bridegroom, like a lamb!" of the first choir are broken by the interrogations of the second, "Whom, how?" and these separate syllables stand out with distinct prominence. An independent melodic figure for the instruments is a background to the vocal phrases; and all these very diverse musical characters are as the pillars of a mighty building, while the dome they support is the choral "O Thou begotten Son," which constitutes a ninth vocal part, and peers above the grand harmonic structure as its crowning glory.

The recitative, "Thou blessed Saviour," and aria for contralto, "Grief for sin," follow the incident of the woman anointing the feet of Jesus. The lasting pain of a bruised heart is laid bare in this most pathetic piece—for the two movements constitute but one whole—which must bring such relief as tears afford, on its earnest utterance.

Far more piercing is the anguish of the aria for soprano, "Break and die, thou dearest heart," which occurs when Judas accepts the bribe for his treachery. In the piece last named is shown the heaviness of woe, but this pictures its acutest pangs.

Of a completely different character are the recitative, "Although mine eyes," and aria for soprano, "Jesus, Saviour, I am Thine," which follow the dispensation of the wine at the Last Supper. Sweetness and tenderness are here the elements of expression, and loving hope the tranquil feeling they reveal. It is too often said by those who but superficially know the author, that Bach's music is deficient in melodious interest. Let them hear this song, which is perfectly a tune from beginning to end, definite in its rhythm and charming in its phrases, and their false apprehension will melt away. The close of the recitative signally exemplifies Bach's mastery of expression, and his most delicate perception of the full meaning of the words he set; the purport of the German sentence is—for the English version follows it not exactly—that the Saviour can never mean unkindly to his own, so dearly does he love them to the end; and in the music to this, the pertinence of the dissonant harmony on the word "böse" (unkindly), and the heavenly sweetness of the change of key for the final phrase, attest the subtlest power of the artist.

(To be continued.)

* Twice it is omitted in performance.

Digitized by Google

SCHUBERT'S UNFINISHED SYMPHONY.

The first performance of this very original and remarkable composition took place on the 6th of April, 1867. The musical critic of the Times welcomed the work two days later as follows:—

"These movements, an allegro moderato in B minor, and an andante con moto in E major, are—with the exception of a scherzo, only composed, as the German expression is, zum Theil, and which, unhappily (and foolishly), is not included in the published score of Spina—all that exist of the symphony. But that all, though only half the conventional whole of a work of the kind, is worth a thousand ordinary symphonies, with each of the four movements elaborately worked out. We cannot but believe that when Schubert began writing the symphony in B minor he must have been in a very depressed state of mind—a state, by the way, rather normal than abnormal with him, but here in an exceptional degree. The sadness of the allegro moderato is infectious. It seems absurd to call that allegro which is not only pensieroso, but gloomily pensieroso; and to style that moderato which, in its outward expression of what must have been the inward mental condition of its author, is immoderate. The delicious second theme, in the major key of G, is, it seems to us, a mockery. We can only liken it to the innocent prattle of a child, in the midst of a chamber of sickness, of the signification of which the child is ignorant, although by the surroundings it is unconsciously influenced. There is not, to our knowledge, a more spontaneously lovely melodic phrase in music; and it is a pity that it should be so brief and evanescent—although, at the same time, if longer, it would have been out of sorts with the context, of which, by sheer force of sympathy, it is speedily forced to adopt the sombre complexion. About the andante con moto it is difficult to speak. To be more melodiously engaging would be difficult, if not impossible; to be more artlessly ingenuous, as to plan or development, no less so. Whether to admire most, or rather most to love, the first theme, so simple, so unadorned—and (we are glad to quote the hackneyed phrase for once, in a sense opposite to that which ordinarily suggests a reference to it) so anything rather than simplex munditiis; or the second, given out by a single clarinet in one key, then by a single oboe, through an enharmonic transition in another, the order, or recurrence being reversed, the accompaniment each time being limited to "syncopated" harmony for the string quartet (without double bass), it is impossible to decide until each phrase has been heard over and over again. And then we are forced to give the palm to each. It is melancholy to reflect that a symphony thus begun should, under any circumstances, have stopped short of completion. . . . Schubert did not live to hear any of his orchestral masterpieces played in public, nor even to know that any beyond his intimate circle of friends believed there was merit in them. The audience on Saturday, thoroughly entering into the beauties of this new example of a genius in fertility (Schubert died at 31) almost without precedent, applauded at the end with such heartiness that Herr Manns might safely have repeated the last movement."

THE EMPRESS MARIA THERÉSA AT PRINCE ESTERHAZY'S.*

By C. F. Pohl.

(Continued from page 552.)

The three storeys of the Château contain, besides the rooms already mentioned, one hundred and twenty-six apartments, richly gilt, adorned with fresco paintings, and lined with Japanese or Indian paneling. In each of them the eye is surprised by a countless multitude of ornamental objects of every kind, displaying in their selection and arrangement the most refined taste. Besides the Curiosity Room, filled with specimens of artistic workmanship, the Château boasts of a well-stocked plate-room; an interesting armoury; a cabinet filled with exceedingly costly Chinese and Japanese vessels; a library, then containing, it is true, only seven thousand books, but those of a choice kind, with manuscripts, relating chiefly to Hungarian history, rare copper-plate engravings, drawings, maps, and globes; and, lastly, a picture gallery, principally of works by Italian and Netherlandish masters, and the Prince's cabinet-painter, Grundmann.

Quite as remarkable and costly, in their way, are the garden and pleasure-wood (Lustwald), formed according to a plan of the Prince, which took advantage of the original wood. Nature and art here mutually assisted each other. To enable the noble visitors to find their way in the labyrinth of paths, they were supplied with fans on which was a ground-plan. The visitor steps from the hall on the ground floor immediately into the garden, here consisting of extensive lawns and flower beds, decorated with antique statues, vases, and numerous wire-work flower baskets. In the paths intersecting one another in all directions, summer-houses, arbours, grottos, cascades, and statues, charm the eye by turns. On the edge of an avenue of horse chestnut trees, on the right hand behind the Château, stood the Operahouse, since removed. Its façade was adorned with Roman semi-pilasters, and a balcony resting upon Ionic columns. The upper part was ornamented with vases, festoons of flowers, and a group of angels playing music. The interior was fitted up with the greatest delicacy and elegance. The Prince's box rested upon Roman columns of red marble, richly gilt; on each side ran the gallery, part being occupied by boxes for the gentlemen, while at the back were cabinets furnished in a costly manner. The pit, to which there were three entrances, accommodated about four hundred spectators. The stage was both broad and deep. During the summer months, as well as in the spring and towards the end of autumn, serious and comic opera, drama and farce, were played here alternately, the performances beginning at six o'clock, and the admission being free. The Prince attended most of the performances. In addition to the members of the Italian Opera, who were frequently engaged for several years, the services were now and then secured of some strolling dramatic company, such, for instance, as that of Währ, Diwald, Passer, Hellmann and Koberwein, Pauli and Mayer, Lasser, and Berner with his company of children. No theatrical event in the capital passed unobserved; the Prince's audiences met Shakespeare, Lessing, and Goethe, as they did Gluck and all contemporary composers. The Vienna farce, likewise, furnished its contribution to the entertainment. Near the theatre there was a coffee-house, the rendezvous of the theatrical artists, of the members of the orchestra, and of the persons in the Prince's service. Opposite the Operahouse still stands the Marionettes Theatre, now employed for other purposes. Decked out, as it then was, with variegated stones, crustaceæ, snail-shells, and mussel-shells, it resembled outwardly and inwardly a grotto, and afforded an unusual spectacle, especially when lighted up. The scenery and machinery were admirable, while the movable figures, artistically made, richly dressed, and of large size, were something surprising.

Connected with this miniature theatre were the Orangery and the other forcing houses. At the entrance of the Pleasure Garden, on each side of the principal walk, there is a colossal cascade. And now we reach at once the extensive pleasure-wood, full of magnificent trees and luxuriant stretches of sward. Splendidly furnished buildings adorned the open spaces; such were the Temple of the Sun, the Temple of Diana, the Hermitage, the Chinese Pleasure Houses (called Bagatelle), and, near the entrance to the Preserves, the Temple of Fortune and the Temple of Venus. The Preserves, swarming with deer, as well as the Pheasant Garden, form a continuation of the Pleasure Wood, and stretch in a southerly direction nearly to the small village of Szerdahely. Lower down lies St. Niklo (Fertöasz-Miklos), and still further in the same direction the Prince's charming Hunting Château of Monbijou, backed by a forest of oaks, serving as a preserve, and especially rich in bucks.

Being now acquainted with the place which is about to receive the Sovereign, we will advance to meet her in person.

On the 31st August, 1773, the ladies and gentlemen of the Court (thirty in number), who had received orders to that effect from the Empress Maria Theresa, started for Esterhaz, where they arrived in the evening. The next morning, Wednesday, September 1st, Prince Nicholas drove to Oedenburg, for the purpose of greeting her Majesty. In the Imperial suite were the Archduke Maximilian, the Archduchesses Maria Anna and Elizabeth, and Albert Duke of Saxe-Teschen (royal Hungarian Stadtholder), with his wife, the Archduchess Christine. At half-past ten in the morning, the Imperial party reached Esterhaz. Far down on the road towards Szeplak, the crowd, high and low, awaited the arrival of the monarch. The peasants, especially, in their becoming national costume, had flocked to the spot from far and near, and, as soon as the first carriages were visible, loud cheers issued from a thousand throats in honour of the still distant sovereign. On her arrival in the courtyard of the Château,

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

Digitized by Google

the Prince accompanied her into the hall set aside for the purpose, and introduced to her the members of the aristocracy present. Hereupon the Empress withdrew, to dine with a select circle, into her apartments, which were always magnificent, but which on this occasion had been re-furnished with truly anxious care. Her suite dined at a table laid for thirty-four in the great hall. At four o'clock, all the noble visitors proceeded into the garden. The Imperial party had taken their places in fifteen carriages, with the Prince himself at their head in a calèche, as guide. Numerous residents and visitors followed on foot. The procession moved forward only slowly, for the Empress, at the very first spellbound, as it were, by the sight of so rich and tasteful a show of flowers, gave orders to stop every moment. She was still more surprised by the numerous garden edifices already mentioned, especially by the Temple of the Sun (ornamented, in accordance with its denomination, with a representation of the Sun), the interior of which was decorated with gold, with wainscoating and with ornamental objects of Carrara marble and Chinese porcelain; by the Temple of Diana (so-called from the statue of the Goddess erected upon the pediment of the building), which was quite as richly adorned; and by the Hermitage, faithfully representing by its simplicity the abode of a hermit.

Towards evening the Operahouse received the distinguished guests. The programme consisted of a two-act burletta, L'Infedeltà delusa, set to music by the Prince's chapelmaster, Joseph Haydn. The piece was not composed expressly for this festivity, having been previously performed on the 26th July, to celebrate the name-day of the Princess Maria Anna Louise, née Marchioness of Lunati, and widow of Prince Paul Anton. As on the first, so on the second, occasion, the singers were members of the Opera, Magdelena Friberth and her husband, Karl*, Barbara Dichtler and her husband, Leopold, and Christian Specht, the basso.

Haydn's opera never rises to any importance; the hurried handwriting alone suffices to show that Haydn (pressed, perhaps, by other things as well) was, in all probability, not highly edified by the words or the plot. His better operas were not written till later. Immediately after the opera, the Empress was treated with the motley spectacle of a masquerade, and then the Prince conducted her to the Chinese Pleasure House, the mirrors with which the walls were lined reflecting and multiplying the light of numerous chandeliers and lampions, so that the interior appeared bathed in flames. The members of the Prince's musical establishment, having taken their places upon a raised platform, played several pieces of music, among which may have been the so-called "Maria Theresa Symphony," published the same year. The Prince's musical establishment (Capelle) was, at that period, far less numerous than might be supposed. We may, therefore, fairly presume that, from time to time, and especially on such a festive occasion as the present, the aid of other musicians was temporarily called in. This year, the Capelle did not boast of more than fifteen members, though these certainly included some first-rate men, such as Alois Tomasini, Haydn's favourite (violin), Andreas Lidl (barytone), Xaverius Marteau (violoncello), Zaccharias Pohl (hautbois), Caspar Peczival (bassoon), and, among five French-horn players, Karl Franz (also barytonist), Joseph Oliva, and Franz Pauer. It was not till October, the same year, that a harpist, Johann Baptist Krumpholtz, was engaged. The French-horn was, by the bye, well represented at this time. From 1762 to 1772, Thadäus Steinmüller was engaged; his three sons gave concerts in Germany, and were everywhere successful. In later years, the brothers Anton and Michael Prinster (uncles of the celebrated Fanny Elssler) were distinguished members of the Capelle. It is by the condition of the latter at this period that we must judge Haydn's contemporaneous symphonies. People make, therefore, a great mistake in executing these works, and even many dating between 1780 and 1790, with a thundering orchestra, having a volume of sound for which they were not calculated. The Empress stayed an hour and a half in the Pleasure House, and then supped in her apartments. At a later hour, Arch-Duke Maximilian, and Duke Albert, with their retinue, proceeded, this time masked, to the masquerade, which was now in full swing and did not end till daybreak.

(To be continued.)

* Karl Friberth (Dittersdorf calls him Joseph), a schoolmaster's son, was born at Wullersdorf, in Lower Austria, on the 7th June, 1736. He was instructed in singing by Bonno, and in composition by Gassmann. Joseph Friedrich, Duke of Saxe-Hildburghausen, engaged him as tenor in his chapel, and so, at the fêtes given by the Duke on his estate of Schlosshof, in 1754, to their Imperial Majesties, we find Friberth singing, with Madame Vittoria Tesi, Therese Heinisch, and Katharina Starzer, in various works, and, among others, in Gluck's opera, Le Chinesi, composed for the occasion. On the 1st January, 1759, Friberth entered upon an engagement with Prince Esterhazy (Paul Anton) at Eisenstadt. He there made the acquaintance of Haydn, and the two became most intimate friends. He subsequently went, at the Prince's expense, to Italy, and, "in consequence of his merits as a musician," the Order of the Golden Spur was conferred upon him in the year 1796 by Pope Pius VI. He married Maria Magdalena Spangler, also a singer engaged on the Prince's establishment. In May, 1776, both threw up their engagements and went to Vienna. The lady died there on the 29th August, 1794, aged forty-four. Friberth became Chapelmaster of the Parochial Court Church, and of the University Church. He died on the 6th August, 1816. He was one of the earliest and most active members of the Tonkünstler-Societät (now the Haydn-Verein), appearing, also, as a solo player at its concerts. After having been for years assessor, secretary, and auditor, he requested, in 1812, that he might be relieved from the annual subscription, offering at the same time to continue in the discharge of his duties. Both requests of the old gentleman, then 76 years of age, were granted him, for the Society, recognising his services, considered it an honour "to be able to retain so honourable a man as an honorary member after so many years."

MILAN.—People here think at present of nothing but the heat, and speak of nothing but the heat. The Theatres which are open are pretty nearly as empty and deserted as those which are closed. The only exception occurred lately at the Teatro dal Verme, where the performance of Linda di Chamounix attracted a tolerable audience. The performance was satisfactory, and the applause frequent, general, and hearty. The largest share fell to the lot of the protagonista, Signora Marty Gemat, a novice. Some assert her to be an American, and others a Spaniard, pur sang. All, however, agree in saying that her voice, though not very powerful, is extensive in range, pleasing in character, and exceedingly well-trained. She is pretty, young, animated, and graceful; to sum up: a success. La Favorita is to be the next novelty with Signora Galletti as the heroine.—Signor Petrella's opera, Giovanna di Napoli, and the ballet of Il Figliuol prodigo, are in active rehearsal at the Scala. Giovanna di Napoli will be followed by Signor Luigi Chessi's Contessa di Medina, another novelty for this city.

GENOA.—Signora Virginia Cortesi, wishing to prove in some way her gratitude for the hospitality afforded him during his lifetime, and the honours rendered him after his death by this city, has given the Corporation the conducting stick of her brother, the late Signor Mariani. The relict will be kept by the side of Paganini's violin.—During a recent performance at the Teatro Balilla, one of the gas pipes burst. There was, at first, some alarm, and dread of fire. But the pipe was soon mended, and the performance proceeded as though nothing had occurred.

TO LUCCA.

(From the "New York Weekly Review.")

We know the lark in leafy throng
Will sing up heaven's throne,
And know thee an embodied song
Ere either breathes a tone.
Already silent music fills
Thine every grace and wile,
And all the sweetness it distills
Is garnered in thy smile.

What gives day's glory to thine eyes
That are as dark as night?
What makes them dart like death's surprise,
Yet thrill as life's delight?
Why is delight thy willing slave,
And pensiveness as well,
Transported both upon the wave
Of thy melodious spell?

How comes that world of melody
In beauty so petite?
What brings all friends of harmony
To worship at thy feet?
I'll tell thee where the secret lies
Of all thou canst and art:
'Tis this—thy soul is in thine eyes,
Thy music in thy heart!—Z. W.

Digitized by Google

THE GREAT ORGAN OF BOSTON.

During my visit to Boston in January last, I attended at one of the "Harvard Symphony Concerts" in the Boston Music Hall, where stands the greatest of American organs. The following particulars may interest many of your readers, if you think them worthy of insertion. On the evening of November 20th, 1852, a concert was held in the Music Hall, the proceeds of which were to be applied as the nucleus of a fund to provide the hall with a suitable organ. This entertainment yielded nearly £1,000. The fund gradually grew by private subscriptions and appropriations by the stockholders, and, in 1856, £5,000 being in hand, or pledged, a contract was made with a noted builder, Herr E. Fr. Walcker, of Ludwigsburg, Germany, to undertake the proposed instrument. The work was commenced soon after, and completed in 1863. The opening of the instrument taking place on the evening of November 2nd in that year.

The case of the great organ is nearly fifty feet in width, averages fifteen in depth, and is, from the base to the summit of the "towers," sixty feet high. Two towers project in front, leaving between them a recessed place in which the keyboards are located, and from the outer side it falls away, forming two ways. Huge Caryatids, Atlas-like, support the towers; the panels are everywhere filled with rich carvings and sculptures in wood; and the upper parts are crowned with appropriate ornaments.

The instrument is subdivided into five instruments, the Great, the Choir, the Swell, the Solo, and the Pedal organs, each with a separate key-board. The compass of the four manuals is four and three-quarter octaves (58 notes), the compass of the Pedal organ two and one half (30 notes).

First Manual (Great Organ).—1, Principal (Double Diapason), Tone, 16 ft.; 2, Tibia Major (Flute), 16 ft; 3, Viola, 16 ft.; 4, Bassoon, 16 ft.; 5, Ophicleide (Serpent), 8 ft.; 6, Principal (Open Diapason), 8 ft; 7, Flute, 8 ft.; 8, Gems-horn, 8 ft; 9. Viola di Gamba, 8 ft.; 10, Gedekt (Stopped Diapason), 8 ft.; 11, Trombone, 8 ft.; 12, Trumpet, 4 ft.; 13, Octave, 4 ft.; 14, Fugara, 4 ft.; 15, Hohlflote (Hollow-toned Flute), 4 ft.; 16, Flute d'Amour, 4 ft.; 17, Clarion, 4 ft.; 18, Waldflote (Shepherd's Flute), 2 ft.; 19, Quint (Fifth), 5 1-3 ft.; 20, Tertz (Tenth), 3 1-5 ft.; 21, Quint (Twelfth), 2 2-3 ft.; 22, Octave, 2 ft.; 23, Cornet (5 Ranks), 5 1-3 ft.; 24, Mixture (6 ranks), 2 2-3 ft.; 25, Scharff (4 Ranks), 1 1-3 ft.

Second Manual (Swell Organ).—1, Bourdon (Double Stop Diapason), 16 ft.; 2, Principal, 8 ft.; 3, Salicional, 8 ft.; 4, Dulcina, 8 ft.; 5, Quintatoen, 8 ft.; 6, Gedekt (Stopped Diapason), 8 ft.; 7, Trombone, 8 ft.; 8, Trumpet, 4 ft.; 9, Bassoon, 8 ft; 10, Oboe, 4 ft.; 11, Principal, Octave, 4 ft.; 12, Rohrflote (Reed Flute), 4 ft.; 13, Traverse Flute, 4 ft.; 14, Cornettino, 4 ft.; 15, Quintflote (Fifth Flute), 4 ft.; 16, Nasard (Twelfth), 2 2-3 ft.; 17, Octave, 2 ft.; 18, Mixture (5 Ranks), 2 ft.

Third Manual (Choir Organ).—1, Gedekt, 16 ft.; 2, Principal Flute, 8 ft.; 3, Spitzflote (Shrill-toned Flute), 8 ft.; 4, Bifra, (2 Ranks), 8 and 4 ft.; 5, Gedekt, 8 ft.; 6, Clarion Bass, 8 ft.; 7, Clarion Treble, 4 ft.; 8, Viola, 8 ft.; 9, Physharmonica, 8 ft.; 10, Hohlpfeife (Hollow-toned Fife), 4 ft.; 11, Principal Flute, 4 ft.; 12, Dolce, 4 ft.; 13, Flautino, 2 ft.; 14, Super Octave, 1 ft.; 15, Sesquialtera (2 Ranks), 2 2-3 and 1 3-5 ft.

Fourth Manual (Solo Organ).—1, Bourdon, 16 ft.; 2, Geigen Principal (violin), 8 ft.; 3, Æoline, 8 ft.; 4, Conzert Flote, 8 ft.; 5, Corno Bassetto, 8 ft.; 6. Vox Humana, 8 ft.; 7, Gems-horn, 4 ft.; 8, Piffaro (2 Ranks), 4 and 2 ft.; 9, Vox Angelica, 4 ft.; 10, Quint, 2 2-3 ft.; 11, Piccolo, 2 ft.

Pedal Organ (Forte Division).—1, Principal Bass (Double-Double Diapason), 32 ft.; 2, Grand Bourdon (5 ranks), 32 ft.; 3, Bombardon, 32 ft.; 4, Octave Bass, 16 ft.; 5, Sub-Bass, 16 ft.; 6, Trombone, 16 ft.; 7, Contra-Violin, 16 ft.; 8, Octave-Bass, 8 ft.; 9, Hohlflote-Bass, 8 ft.; 10, Violoncello, 8 ft.; 11, Trumpet, 8 ft.; 12, Corno-Basso, 4 ft.; 13, Octave, 4 ft.; 14, Cornettino, 2 ft. Piano Division.—15, Bourdon, 16 ft.; 16, Viola, 8 ft.; 17, Flute, 8 ft.; 18, Flute, 4 ft.; 19, Waldflote, 2 ft.; 20, Bassoon, 16 ft.

The number of complete registers in the whole organ is 84, and the whole number of pipes, 5,474.

The lovers of the organ will find their favourite stops well represented, and others new acquaintances. The mechanical arrangements for connecting one keyboard with another, and for producing the swell and other effects, are complete, and place the organ fully at command of the performer. Everything throughout the organ is finished in the most perfect style. The flute stops are of the choicest woods; the pipes of the traverse flute are near imitations of the instrument from which they are named; the trumpets &c. are of brass, and of shape and polish like those used in the orchestra. The total cost of the instrument was something over £10,000.

The ceremonies of the inauguration of the great organ (November 2nd, 1863) consisted in the recitation by Miss Charlotte Cushman, of an original ode written by Mrs. Fields, after which, the organ being opened by Herr Friedrich Walcker, son of the builder, a programme selected from the works of Bach, Handel, and other masters was given by various eminent organists of the day. W. B. H.

Punch's Musical Sermon.

(With Two Texts.)

Mr. Punch has not had much to say about Music lately, and for a reason sufficing to himself, and therefore sufficient for mankind. For when Punch is content the world is at peace. The fact is that the Music-Crops have been bad this year, and the yield next to nothing. The Shah prevented the production of Balfe's Opera, Il Talismano, and thus deferred another victory for Admirable Nilsson; but we trust that, like her namesake, Admiral Nelson, she will defeat the combined forces of the Continent next season, and win new glories for the British flag. Tietjens and Patti have been singing like—Tietjens and Patti; none but themselves can be their parallels; which quotation doesn't hold, because parallels never meet, and those ladies have met very often, to their mutual delight. M. Faure has done everything like the true artist that he is, and we praise Apollo for him. Madame Arabella Goddard has gone to see the Southern Cross—let the enchanted Australians give her one in diamonds. Lesser lights have shone their brightest. But we have had no novelty, and Mr. Punch has no space to tell a hundred times told tales. There are two matters, however, to which he proposes to invite attention. And, first, he begs, or rather takes leave to ask a question. Where is your English Mozart, Weber, Meddelsome (as Mrs. Malaprop calls him), Back (as Mrs. Malaprop spells him), and Auber? If we paused for a reply, we should wait some time. But it may be that we should not have to wait so long, if England bestowed more pains on the musical education of her children. Latent genius might be developed. Very well, go to. That is, go to the Treasurers for two most excellent projects which be now in hand. Go to the Bank of England, Western branch, and pay in a donation to the Mendelssohn Scholarships Foundation, which has been doing exceeding good work, but which, we regret to hear from Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, is much crippled for want of funds. This is simply a shame, for Mendelssohn's music commends itself to those whose gold makes merry music in their pockets. "Heaven save the Foundation!" as Dogberry observes, and let us help in the process. Why, Arthur Sullivan was the very first scholar elected by this Institution, and if that fact be not reason for encouraging and supporting it, we know nothing about facts or reasons either. Well, hand in your money. Then write a letter to a Lady who has most honourably distinguished herself by her services to Music; we mean Lady Jenkinson, of Eastwood Park, Gloucestershire, and enclose your cheque, or your P.O.O., towards another Foundation, that of a Thalberg Scholarship, to be attached to the Royal Academy (not our dear friends the Painters; they roll in gold, and might give us more dinners), but of Music. This Scholarship is to be the reward of "the best executant of the best sort of Music." Now, don't be absurd. If England is to be a musical nation, it will not be by gushing, or by merely paying vast sums to finished artists, but by educating her own musical youth. There is sound sense in both these efforts, or Mr. Punch would not have devoted his precious intellect to eulogising them. Having obeyed his commands, enjoy your holidays. But, if you neglect the mandate, may the pianofortes in the houses right and left of you be bumped from morning to night by the most stupid and unteachable girls that ever banged a key-board. Punch.

Bonn.—The following was to be the programme of the Schumann Festival. On the first day, Symphony No. IV., in D minor; Paradies und die Peri. On the second day, Overture to Manfred; Pianoforte Concerto in A minor (played by Madame Clara Schumann); "Nachtlied for Chorus and Orchestra;" Symphony No. II., in C major; Scenes from Goethe's Faust (Third Part). On the third day there was to be a Matinée of Chamber-Music, the said music including Stringed Quartet, No. III., in A major; Songs; Andante and Variations for two Pianos; Songs; and Pianoforte Quintet in E flat major. All the above works are the composition of Schumann. The conductors were to be Professor Joseph Joachim and Herr J. von Wasielewsky Town Musical Director; the soloists: Madame Clara Schumann, Madame Marie Wilt (from Vienna), Mdme. Amalie Joachim; Mdlle. M. Sartorius (from Cologne), Herren Diener (tenor, from Berlin), Julius Stockhausen (bass), A. Schulze (from Berlin), L. Strauss (from London), O. von Königslöw (from Cologne), A. Lindner (from Hamburgh), and W. Müller (from Berlin). The chorus and band together were to include five hundred persons.

Digitized by Google

"AMANG YE, TAKIN' NOTES."

Our provincial friends of the Press will be good enough to remember that Punch has now a little time to look about him, that as he reposes sub tegmine, the local paper comes under his keen eye, and that a blue pencil (if he may mention such a thing without Contempt of Court) is usually in his waistcoat pocket, for the marking of any matter that may seem to him facetious. In proof whereof he subjoins a Blue passage from a late Leamington Chronicle. A certain concert was described, and this tribute was borne to the talents of Miss Edith Wynne, who, 'deed truth, deserves all sorts of laudation.

"Miss Edith Wynne is the Tietjens of the saloon, and sang with her clear notes reaching the circumference of the audible in the silence of attentive appreciation; and interspersing the programme with the Orpheus Glee Union, who sang without accompaniment with a roll of tone and precision of time that show what can be done by high cultivation brought to bear on the melodies that have won the reputation of melodious for all time."

We do not say that this is bad musical criticism, as times go, but on the whole we should prefer a somewhat "nicer derangement of epitaphs."

Punch.

MR. SIMS REEVES AND THE FESTIVAL.

(To the Editor of the "Daily Post.")

SIR,—Will you kindly find space for the letter enclosed, addressed to Mr. Richard Peyton, in reference to the raising of the pitch of the Festival Organ, and oblige,

Your faithful servant, J. SIMS REEVES.

Grange Mount, Beulah Spa, Upper Norwood, August 18, 1873.

"DEAR SIR,—It is with extreme regret that I find myself driven to protest against the recent raising of the pitch of the Birmingham grand organ. There is no public for which I have a higher esteem than that of Birmingham, and my long connection with the Festivals of that city is one of my proudest memories. But you are aware—as the public is aware—that I have waged war for the last four years against our present unreasonable musical pitch. No one can be more disposed than I to vindicate the claims to musical taste and feeling of this country, but I cannot arrogate to it the monopoly of wisdom. It is a simple matter of fact that the normal diapason accepted at Vienna, Paris, Berlin, Brussels, Naples, Florence, &c., is one and the same, and considerably lower than the British. Mademoiselle Patti—or should I rather say, Madame la Marquise de Caux—declined a re-engagement at Covent Garden last season, save on the express condition that the general musical standard of the world, with one or two exceptions, should be adopted. Her wish was complied with, and all the instruments were modified accordingly.

"Just before the Birmingham Festival comes off I learn, accidentally, from a newspaper paragraph, that—instead of moving in the right direction, to a compromise, even that of Leipsic, which I have professed myself willing to accept, for one—the organ has just been raised, at a considerable cost, another quarter of a tone; so that the change which was declined on the score of expense, in order to conform to the rise of the most musical countries, has actually been incurred to increase the existing difference. I might well say that this looks almost like a hint to me that my services may not be really wished for; but, assuming that no such intention exists, I am satisfied that the public will agree with their humble servant that a course has been taken against which it is my simple duty to protest.

"The argument put forward to prevent the adoption of the normal pitch has always been that such a course would involve the manufacture of new instruments, &c. This seems to be quite forgotten when the change is to be made in the wrong direction. Again, it has been alleged that with a lower pitch than the present military bands could not be employed. It would be a pity to impair the brilliancy of the famous Austrian bands, or of our own, for which a certain martial character is highly desirable, by restricting them to the pitch of the Viennese Conservatoire; but it would be surely a still greater mistake to make the grand orchestras of the world, or the organs, the humble followers of the military bands, in order to obtain a very occasional advantage. I know that almost all artists of note think with me in this matter, and see too plainly that unless a stand is made the present evil state of things will be perpetuated, or even heightened, for many years to come. I have the honour to be, dear sir, your faithful servant,

"To Richard Peyton, Esq., Orchestral Steward, Birmingham Musical Festival." "J. SIMS REEVES.

[Mr. Sims Reeves has probably not seen an explanatory paragraph in reference to the raising of the organ pitch, which appeared in our issue of Saturday. It was stated there, to prevent the very misconception that Mr. Sims Reeves appears to have fallen into, that no raising of the normal pitch of the instrument was intended, but simply such a rectification as is needed to repair the loss of tone that has taken place since the previous tuning. For want of this precaution at the last Festival, great difficulty was experienced in bringing organ and band into tune, and even after the wind instruments had been lowered to the utmost practicable limit, the organ was relatively flat. The pitch adopted here is not higher than that prevailing in the London orchestras; and it could not be lower, without causing a vast disturbance of the wind instrument department.—ED. D. P.]

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

August 20th, 1873.

La Muette, Mignon, and Charles VI., have been repeated at the opera during the past week with the same caste as before. La Favorite was also repeated, but not with the same artists; M. Budant taking the rôle of Alphonse, in place of M. Ytrac, and Mdlle. Holmberg (cantatrice suedoise) that of the heroine, in place of Mdlle. Peyret. Mdlle. Holmberg I have already noticed favourably in your columns as a concert singer, and also the fact that she had appeared once or twice on the operatic stage in Brussels. She can sing, and does so, accurately and well. She did so last night, but, on the "boards," acting MUST be combined with a fine voice to make an artist; and of acting she has no idea. In fact, with the exception of M. Larrivée, who took the part of Balthazar, and who has a fine bass voice, last night's performance was the worst of the present season. In a place like Boulogne, at this time of the year, when it is filled with so many amateurs from London and Paris, would it not be better for the management to procure first-rate artists with formed voices, to be able to carry out the much-varied programme it puts forth, instead of having resource to half-trained ones, who cannot do the work required of them? La Fille de Madame Angot on Saturday, Mdlle. Celine Mey in the title rôle, is announced.

On Saturday last Herr Dulcken's Grande Fête d'Enfants took place at the Etablissement. It began with a concert given by children. After a performance by ten juvenile violinists, pupils of M. Vivier, professor of the Academy of Music of Boulogne, two young ladies, aged ten and eleven, elicited an encore for their singing in a duo by Concone. Another young lady of nine summers also sang two songs, well. A still younger demoiselle—whose age was seven when the programmes were printed, but who informed me behind the scenes that it was her eighth birthday that very day—played with such a nice touch, and with such brilliancy, a fantasia by Sydney Smith, that every one was astonished. Her name I must give you; it is Mdlle. Eugénie Benard, whose father is well-known in London as a painter and professor of drawing. Lastly came Haydn's "Toy Symphony," Herr Dulcken having drilled 40 youngters to play the various toys, such as drums, mirlitons, cuckoos, etc. It was a perfect success. After the concert there was a ball, during which a distribution of bon-bons and bouquets took place. There were nearly 1,500 persons present.

The Daily Concerts "go" as usual. Last week there was a special feature in the shape of the Andante movement from Beethoven's No. 1 Symphony in C.

On Sunday last there was a Messe Pontificale, the Bishop of Arras being present. It was the splendid mass of Guilmant's (No. 3), and well rendered by the band and whole troupe of the opera, augmented by some amateurs. The processions to Notre Dame de Boulogne wake us up at 6 every morning. They come from all parts. On Sunday, at 4 p.m., a procession, composed of the six parishes of Boulogne, together with people from as far as Paris and elsewhere, and which took 55 minutes to pass my house, proceeded to the Cathedral to "dedicate la France to the très Sainte Vierge." A hymn, or rather Cantique du Sacré Cœur, is sung by the procession every day. I cannot refrain from giving you the refrain:—

"Dieu de Clémence,
O Dieu vainqueur,
Sauvez Rome et la France
Par votre Sacré-Cœur."

Each verse commences with: "Pitie mon Dieu!" and the whole has reference to the state of "la France." The tune is suggestive of "Cheer, boys, cheer." S. C.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

FIGTREE.—Horace's lines—

"Pallida mors æquo pulsat pede pauperum tabernas,
"Regumque turres," have been pleasantly Gallicised in language and local colouring thus—

"Le Pauvre en sa cabane, où le chaume le couvre
"Est sujet à ses lois,
"Et la garde qui veille aux barrières du Louvre
"N'en défend pas nos rois."

'A ses lois," i.e., "aux lois de la Mort."

CAPER.—It was in 1796 that Dr. Boyce wrote the music to David's Lamentation over Saul and Jonathan.

F. W.—Henry Logier, son of J. B. Logier, the author of Logier's System, died on the 15th May, 1870, at Londonderry.

FERNANDO.—You are in error. Signor Mario was accompanied on the farewell tour to which you refer, through the chief towns of the United Kingdom, by Mdlles. Liebhart and Enriquez, as vocalists, by Signor Sivori as violinist, and by the Chevalier de Kontski as pianist.

CONSTANT READER.—The number of persons taking part as performers in the Ober-Ammergau Passion Play was rather more than five hundred. Despite all that has been said to the contrary, the villagers are not quite as simple as they appear.

WHISKERS.—At the time of the first Roman Invasion, the Britons, like the Highlanders of a more recent period, did not patronise trowsers, though they wore coats—of paint.

DR. PULSE.—Certainly not. That Mendelssohn was born at Hamburgh, in 1809, is true; but in all other particulars Dr. Pulse has been misinformed.

ACTION FOR LIBEL.—Too late for this week;—will appear in our next number.

TWENTYMAN RULES.—Enquire of Mr. Wentmore Hare. Mr. Copley Sibbing is ignorant of the matter; and so, we must protest, is Mr. Geaton Eagles. Méhul, not Dalayrac, was the man in question.

DEATH.

On the 2nd inst., at his residence, West Street, Hertford, Mr. C. Bridgeman, organist of All Saint's Church, in his 95th year. He was born the 29th August, 1778.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 23, 1873.

TRAVELLERS see strange things. They always have done so, and they always will. From the times of Sir John Mandeville downwards, so universally has this been acknowledged, and so eager is mankind to taste the honey of new facts collected by these wandering human bees, that a traveller has invariably proved a good social lion. The words uttered by Falconbridge:

"Now your traveller,
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess;
And when my knightly stomach is sufficed,
Why then I suck my teeth and catechise
My picked man of countries," prove that your traveller was as much run after, and no less sure of being invited out to dinner, in those days than he is now. There certainly is one great difference. The "picked man of countries" mentioned by Falconbridge seems to have been somewhat modest. Perhaps he was an exception. He required a deal of pressing before he would launch out about

"The Alps and Apennines,
The Pyrenean and the River Po;"

whereas no sooner has his successor of modern days returned from his trip to Norway, his exploration of Africa, his circumnavigation of the globe, or his excursion to the Isle of Thanet, than he rushes off in pursuit of a publisher as madly as Indians ever chased the buffalo in the plains of Mexico; and, as speedily as possible after lassooing a specimen, favours the public with as many volumes as he can manage to get accepted of his reminiscences.

There can be no doubt that books of travel are mostly very popular, and the reason is clear. Those written by a man's fellow-countryman concerning foreign nations tell him much that would otherwise have remained unknown; while those penned by foreigners of a man's own native land are also calculated, not merely to increase most unexpectedly his stock of information, but, at the same time, to excite his wonder in no ordinary degree. We Englishmen are especially fortunate in the latter class of book. It is perfectly marvellous what extraordinary beings, and what extraordinary things there are to be seen in this country were we only gifted with the amount of vision requisite to perceive them. But it appears we are singularly deficient in this respect; and it is to intelligent foreigners that an Englishman is often indebted for learning facts connected with English life, and of which he would otherwise have remained in ignorance, to adopt the phraseology of the celebrated Vicar of Bray, who displayed in his principles that quality which has procured for india rubber and gutta percha so high a position in the regard of City men.

"Until his dying day, sir,"

Let me take an instance of what I mean. M. Roger, who formerly occupied a leading position in the company of the Opéra-Comique, Paris, made a professional tour through Scotland in September, 1848, and I trust he did not find it unprofitable. Writing about it to the Paris Figaro in May, 1872, M. Roger informs his readers that he paid a visit to Frederick Lablache at Edinburgh, and that on Saturday, September 30, just as they were finishing breakfast, a Scottish nobleman, who took singing lessons of the great Basso's son, dropped in on them. I blush to own it, but I am somewhat ignorant of aristocratic pedigrees, and not so well up in the pages of Debrett and Burke, not so deeply versed in griffins couchants, chevrons, gules, and fields of the first, as I ought to be. It is, therefore, hardly surprising that I was previously unacquainted with the title, Lord Kilmarnoch, of young Signor Lablache's visitor. However, that is neither here nor there. Lord Kilmarnoch, as M. Roger goes on, with charming frankness, to inform, confidentially, of course, the readers of the Paris Figaro, was a raving melomaniac, with tastes nearly approaching madness (son goût touche à la folie). By the way, I do not well see how it is that, if his Lordship was, as stated, a raving maniac, no matter whether in regard to music, or aught else, his tastes can be said merely to "approach" madness. This again is, however, parenthetical. Signor Lablache and his guest made his Lordship sing in the large dining-room. He reminded M. Roger of a poor old woman, Mélanie Dumont by name, who was mad for music and the drama, and had procured M. Roger and Hector Berlioz many screaming evenings' entertainment, or soirées désopilantes. His Lordship indulged in certain irresistibly comic peculiarities. For instance, if, after he had commenced an air, his voice would not come out well, he pulled up the left side of his trowsers, and fixed his braces a hole higher. Having done this, he began the air again. From the fact of his pulling up the left side of his trowsers and fixing his braces a hole higher, we gather incidentally that Lord Kilmarnoch did not wear the national garb of the Celt, and was probably a Lowlander.

Digitized by Google

On reaching the difficult passage once more with the same result, his Lordship passed to the left hand brace. He was still unsuccessful. It was now the turn of his garters. As to how his Lordship got at them, M. Roger is silent. As his Lordship did not sport the kilt, he must either have pulled up the legs of his trowsers, or his trowsers, to speak more Hibernico, must have been knee-breeches. Well, he pulled his garters, first to the right and then to the left, as frantically, we are told, as Amphion would have thrummed away on his lyre, had he found the beasts resisted him. After the above little classical allusion, M. Roger adds that Lord Kilmarnoch did all this with the greatest possible gravity. M. Roger then bursts forth into the following profound series of reflections: "What a powerful element of comicality; what seriousness. This is what renders monkeys and learned dogs superior to our buffoons, and secures for these genial artists so high a place in art. Nature has refused their countenances the faculty of laughter; they are comic, without knowing it, and, above all, without endeavouring to appear so. Well, his Lordship is a pupil not destined to do Lablache much honour. I strongly suspect the Professor keeps up his connection with such a monomaniac in the interest of gentle gaiety and of an easy digestion—in the hope of doing

"'Comme le roy Saladin
Qui s'amusait le matin.'"

Having thus enlightened us as to the Scotch Lord, M. Roger darts of at a tangent to another case of eccentricity. He abruptly leaves his host sole autocrat of the breakfast-table and rushes on to an incident in which Lablache père is involved. This time, however, while announcing generally the nationality of the individual concerned, he is reticent as to the individual's rank, name, and title. We know only that a "rich Englishman," in ecstacies with the manner in which Lablache, senr., used to sing the air: "Non più andrai, farfallone amoroso," asked the great artist to teach it him, observing it would not require more than a month to do so, as he was quick at learning. Lablache, who had neither leisure nor time to throw away, by no means relished the proposal, and replied that his price was five guineas for an hour's lesson. "Very good, Signor Lablache, very good! I do not care about the price," replied the "rich Englishman." "As I want to get on very quickly, I will take lessons—eight lessons—every day."

"Think of that!" again moralizes M. Roger. "For a month! Poor Lablache! What a fine opportunity for getting thin."

It was, indeed, a fine opportunity; a very pleasant and lucrative system of Bantingising, but it evidently proved unavailing in the case of the famous Italian buffo, who to the last much resembled

"Three single gentlemen roll'd into one."

Of course, both these anecdotes, strange though they be, are entirely devoid of exaggeration. But perhaps the most remarkable fact connected with them, as I have suggested already, is that they and others of the same class always remain unknown to ourselves till some clever traveller—as often as not a Frenchman—discovers and preserves them for our delectation. Shakespeare, who had nearly as sharp an eye, as keen a nose, and as ready an ear as M. Roger himself, makes Hamlet truly observe:

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

All honour to those who, after the manner of M. Roger, discover some of these mysteries for the benefit of their fellow men. If all M. Roger's narrative resembles the two episodes quoted, it must be not only highly amusing, but exceedingly instructive, and calculated to impress every unprejudiced person with feelings of deep respect for French patience of research, and with sentiments of unalloyed admiration for French accuracy of detail.

L.

—o—

THE following artistes have, by marriage, entered the circle of nobility, from the French, German, Italian, and English stage:—

Mdlle. Clairon became Souverain Princess; Mdlle. Contat married the Chevalier de Parny; Mdlle. Sontag became Countess Rossi; Mdlle. Taglioni married the Count Gilbert des Voisins; Mdlle. Sala was made Countess de Fuentes; Mdlle. Alboni, Countess Pepoli; Mdlle. Ristori married the Marquis Capricana del Grillo; Mdlle. Sophie Cruvelli became Baroness Vigier; Mdlle. Birnbarem (Pear Face), Princess of Haran; Mdlle. Sophie Loewe married the Prince of Lichtenstein; Mdlle. Gossman (the German "Cricket"). became Baroness Prokesch-Ostew, Louise Newman, Countess Schoenfeld; Mdlle. Brossler, Baroness von Bruck; Mdlle. Marie Taglioni, Princess Windischgraetz; and Mdme. Scheller, married Methua de Gonzafa of old Spanish noble blood.

The following famous singers have married titled husbands:—

Pauline Lucca married Count de Rhaden; Eliza Hensler, the King of Portugal; M. Eher, contralto, an Archduke of Austria; Nathalie Freusini, Prince de Wurtemberg, brother of the King; Ada Winan, Prince de Trubotke; N. Visconti, Count Belgiojoso; Amelia Retorcci, Berenaggio; Francilla Pixis, Marquis de la Cicilia; N. Farelli, Marquis Visconte Ajani; Giulia Grisi, Viscount de Melcy; Giudita Grisi, Count Barni; Adelaide Tassi, Count Ludiesi; Henrietta Werlier, Count Malcari; G. Boschetti, danseuse. Marquis Spinola; Marietta Gazzaniga, Marquis Malaspini; Victoire Balfe, Duc de Frias; Anna Lagrange, Count de Santowick.

Eight actresses of the English stage have been elevated to the peerage, and, in every instance, by their domestic virtue and social charm, lent grace and dignity to the order. They were:—

Lavinia Fenton, Duchess of Bolton; Anastasia Robinson, Countess of Peterborough; Louisa Brunton, Countess of Craven; Miss Farren, Countess of Derby; Mary Bolton, Baroness Thurlow; Harriett Mellon, Duchess of St. Albans; Maria Foote, Countess of Harrington; Catherine Stephens, Countess of Essex. Adelina Patti married the Marquis of Caux; Miss O'Neil and Mrs. Nisbett married baronets, the one Sir Wrixon Beecher, the other Sir William Boothby. H.

[This list might be considerably enlarged. How, for example, about Clara Novello?—Ed. M. W.]

Times for Music.

THE OLD COUNTRY STILE.*

I.

Ah! that dear old stile, I love it well,
With its sturdy rough-hewn bars,
Deep down in a cool and mossy dell,
All covered with time-worn scars.
The loveliest spot on earth it is,
And I like to think awhile
Of the dear old days so full of bliss,
While sitting on that old stile.

II.

In a bygone summer, when I, a youth,
Was walking my fav'rite dell,
A maiden I spied whose (to speak truth)
Beauty I can't fairly tell.
Going to market, all laden she,
Her baskets made quite a pile—
Deep buried in thought, seeming to be Unable to mount the stile.

III.

A gipsy bonnet sheltered her face
From the summer sun's bold glance.
Waiting for help in this quiet place—
Though 'twere but a sorry chance.
But beholding me, how glad was she,
Her face lit up with a smile;
Blushingly modest, quoth she to me:
"Please, help me over the stile."

IV.

Her glossy black hair is now turned gray,
Though her eye is as full of light
As the bright morn of that happy day
Both 'greed life's battles to fight.
Over and over again we've felt
Affliction or life-sore trial,
But how of, we each other have helped
O'er many a rude rough stile.

ERNEST HOUGHTON.

* Copyright reserved.

Digitized by Google

HEALTH IN THE STAR CITY.

(From "Another World.")

In Montalluyah everything conducive to health is attended to: the supply of water to every part of the city is unlimited, and in each house, whether of rich or poor, is a bath, for sea and for fresh water.

All the large bridges are covered with houses and gardens, which at a distance seem air-suspended cities, hanging without support over rivers, cataracts, large towns, and aggregations of houses.

We have "violet streams," which run for miles over beds of violets, white and blue. The water of these is preserved in tanks erected at the end of the streams, trenches being cut to assist the flow. It has a delicious flavour, and is used for various beverages, but not for culinary purposes, since, when mixed with certain things, it turns black and loses its fragrance.

Trees, plants, and flowers perfume the air with their fragrance; whilst birds of endless variety and richest plumage have their nests in the tall and wide-spreading trees of varied-coloured foliage, and fill the air with their music. In the trees are placed artificial nests to entice the birds; these invite others, which build their nests spontaneously. The trees are large, their branches and rich foliage spread themselves in graceful lines to a long distance on every side and afford pleasing shade, their gauzy leaves subduing the light and producing the effect of soft rainbow tints. The trees also emit perfume.

The music of the birds harmonizes with the refreshing sounds of the running waters, cascades, and fountains; and that the effect on the mind of these beautiful harmonies may not be disturbed, the wheels of our chariots, as well as the horses' hoofs, are bound with a peculiar hide which, besides possessing great toughness and durability, has the property of deadening sound. Thus none but the most agreeable sounds reach the ear, whilst the senses are charmed with aromatic odours, and the eye is pleased with beauty of every kind.

Arched galleries and passages through the hills and mountains, partly perforated by the sea or electric fire, and enlarged by the industry of man, have a subdued light, and make an impression of another kind, the red light in these perforated roads answering to the red shade of the outer world. These galleries and openings in the rocks are used to shorten distances from one side of a mountain to another.

The whole city is full of animation. The illuminated sky, the variegated plumage of the birds, the moving myriads of human beings, clad in rich costumes of divers colours; horses, elephants, camels, and cameleopards, richly caparisoned; carriages gorgeously decorated, the golden domes of the houses, the many-coloured rocks reflecting themselves in the waters and in the brilliant skies, with their own aerial peaks and mountains brilliant and bright with our powerful sunlight—all these combine to produce a gorgeous spectacle. Moreover, the constantly recurring undulations and tortuousness of the ground are so great that it is difficult to proceed for a few minutes without meeting an entire change of scenery, as though one had reached a new city.

At one moment are seen mountain peaks rising almost perpendicularly to the skies in varying height; then a little turn brings the spectator on forests of houses, with ornamental gilded domes and hives of human beings.

Overhanging rock and mountain-forms of varied colours, the skies now scarcely seen, now reflecting their gorgeous tints in the sparkling rivers, cascades, and upheaving masses of water, these and much more form a picture of which words of fire would fail to convey a sufficient idea to those accustomed to the sober, though beautifully subdued tints of your skies.

Signor Enrico Serazzi, a young Italian, from the San Carlo, Naples, arrived in town on Tuesday, to join Messrs. Gunn's Italian troop in Dublin, as principal tenor.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

The members of the Royal Family of England have long been famous for their love of music. Queen Elizabeth was an excellent musician, being especially skilled on the virginals, and delighting to play the pieces composed by Bird, Orlando Lasso, and Luca Marenzio, for her especial delectation on that now obsolete instrument. Handel and his contemporaries were appreciated and patronised by George III. and the aristocracy of the period, and Rossini was the idol of the Prince Regent, afterwards George IV. The late Duke of Cambridge was fanatico per la musica, and took the second violin part in the quartets of Mozart and Haydn very creditably. Prince Albert, as we all know, had a talent for composition. The Queen, a pupil of the great Lablache, used to be an admirable singer, and is still a thorough judge and warm admirer of the great masters. The Crown-Princess of Prussia plays the organ and harmonium; the Princess Alice is an excellent musician, and the Duke of Edinburgh holds a prominent place in the Amateur Society at Albert Hall.

It appears the Hungarian National Stage is, like Touchstone's friend, the shepherd Corin, "in a parlous state." Béla Bercsenyi, writing to the Hon, complains bitterly. He says that the provincial theatres of Hungary, with their operettas and farces, are not conducted in a national spirit, and the majority of actors, especially the younger ones, are utterly destitute of anything like polished education, being scarcely able to do more than read and write. The fair sex are even more at fault than the men. To ameliorate this deplorable state of things, he proposes that ten thousand persons shall, for the space of ten years, subscribe five florins each, to be expended in bringing about the regeneration of the national drama of Hungary. Hungarian patriotism, we know, is a great feature in Hungarian history. It will cause Hungarians to shed their blood freely for the liberation of their country, but we do not think it will induce any ten thousand of them to subscribe fifty thousand florins a year for the regeneration of the National Stage. Confound it, we must draw the line somewhere. Charles Dickens's hero draws it at bakers. We should not be surprised were the readers of the Hon and their fellow countrymen to draw it at the Hungarian Drama.

Explosion by Music.—Galignani says:—Our readers may recollect that some years ago Count Schaffgotsch and Prof. Tyndall published a number of curious experiments on "sensitive" or "singing" flames, resulting from the observation that the gas-lights in a drawing-room seemed to keep time with the music. The vibrations excited by sound in the atmosphere naturally influence the flame which rises or sinks in proportion to the strokes it receives from the ambient air. This explanation is self-evident, but the fact reveals itself in many startling ways, duly investigated by the above mentioned philosophers. Not long ago Mr. Abel announced another case of vibratory influence in explosive substances, showing that they would in most cases preserve their stability unless their particles were excited to motion in a peculiar way. MM. Champion and Pellett have now gone a step further, and endeavoured to prove that heat alone would not be sufficient to cause an explosion if it did not cause vibration. Starting from this proposition they arrived at the conclusion that there must be some musical note able of itself to produce the explosion without the assistance of heat. This deduction they have confirmed by fact. Iodine of nitrogen is a detonating substance, which may be handled freely so long as it is moist.. Our experimentalist put small portions of it in this state into little bags made of goldbeaters skin, which they hung to the strings of a bass viol. When all was dry, the bow was applied to each chord in succession, and it was found that while the low notes produced no effect whatever, the highest one did, causing an explosion at the very outset. From successive experiments it was ascertained that at least sixty vibrations per second were necessary to lead to the result. Another trial was as follows: Two parabolic mirrors being placed opposite to each other at a distance of eight feet, a drop of nitro-glycerine was put into one of the foci, and a bag of iodine into the other. The former being made to explode, the vibrations thus caused were reflected from one mirror to the other, and led to the explosion of the iodine.

Digitized by Google

It was eleven years ago, on the 21st of last July, that Count Walewski, then Minister of State, laid the first stone of the New Grand Operahouse, Paris, and the building is yet far from being completed. The re-erection, too, of the Théâtre Lyrique is proceeding at a snail's pace only. The Municipality have taken the work in hand, but cannot afford to expend more than 200,000 francs a year upon it; therefore, before the doors are thrown open to the public, three years must elapse, as the estimated cost amounts to 539,000 francs, a sum which architects, contractors, and masons will, of course, swell up to 600,000.

May a person, not possessing, like Mr. R. Crusoe, an uninhabited island of his or her own, play the piano every day from 8 a.m. till midnight, without according a moment's respite to the unfortunate neighbours? Such is the question to which the French judges recently returned a negative answer in the case of a gentleman living on the Boulevard Haussmann, Paris, who complained of a young lady named Mdlle. Chaisses. The Court decreed that the fair offender should not commence before 10 a.m., nor continue after 10 p.m. She was also ordered to discontinue her practice two hours in the course of the day. In the columns of a paper so universally read by pianists, both old and young, we will not go so far as to uphold the sentence of the Court, but we do not mind confessing that nothing should ever induce us to rent apartments either in the house in which Mdlle. Chaisses resides, or even in any house near it.

The Albany (New York) Evening Journal publishes a letter, from Mrs. Pruyn, now on a visit to Professor Clark in Japan, giving an account of a musical performance got up for her entertainment by the wife of one of the young men under the instruction of the Professor. Mrs. Pruyn says:—"About 7 o'clock the gentleman came with five ladies, having sent their instruments before. The wife was a little, sprightly, child-like woman, and thoroughly accomplished, but the others were plain and middle-aged. They were all perfect mistresses of the art, and played and sang their parts with great skill. I wish I could picture the scene as it appeared to us. Seated on the floor in a semicircle before us, with their strange instruments, which are all stringed (one called a koto, being 6ft. long and lying flat on the floor), and singing in the low, nasal tone peculiar to their music; there was more in their picturesque dress, attitudes, and the oddity of their style to please and amuse than in the music itself. The little wife, with the peculiar bright ornamentations in her hair and the richness of her obi or girdle, with her bright eyes and graceful movements, sweeping her fingers (protected at the ends by ornamental ivory shields) skilfully over the strings of the koto, would have been a beautiful object but for the hideous blackened teeth—a custom I cannot find otherwise than disgusting. They played and sang several pieces, but there was little variety in them; and then the young wife danced for us. She danced two pieces, each of about fifteen minutes in length, one of the others playing on the samisen, a sort of guitar, and another singing the story, which the dance was designed to illustrate, of love and adventure."

Bayreuth.—A large concourse assembled on the evening of the 2nd inst., to celebrate the ceremony of roofing in Herr R. Wagner's National Festival-Stage-Play-Theatre. Under the framework of the roof were the band of the regiment of Chevaux-légers quartered here, the Abbate Franz Liszt and Madame Cosima Wagner. About half-past six, Herr Richard Wagner, accompanied by the various masters of the works and the members of the local Wagner Association, ascended to the same elevated position. Herr Hofmann, one of the foremen, spoke a copy of verses referring to the occasion, with cheers for German spirit, for the architects, and for the building, at the end of the different stanzas. Hereupon the band played the choral: "Nün danket Alle Gott!" in which those present took part vocally. Herr R. Wagner then made a speech in rhyme, which, while striving after simplicity, certainly in many passages attained to the childishness of bathos or the bathos of childishness. After the Musician of the Future came the president of the local Wagner Association with a prose speech. Cheers were given for Herr R. W., and the meeting dispersed. It is reported, by the way, that the Khedive has forwarded 12,000 francs towards the building-fund of the National-Festival-Stage-Play-Theatre.

Boston (U. S.).—The Handel and Haydn Society of this place will hold their Triennial Musical Festival at the beginning of next May, when they will perform a grand classical oratorio.

PROVINCIAL.

Malvern.—The "London Opera Company," under the direction of Mr. Isidore de Solla, have been performing in the Concert-hall to delighted audiences. It is one of the best companies in the provinces; and, as this is the third visit they have paid to Malvern, it shows their efforts are appreciated. The singing and acting of Madame Isidore de Solla are very effective. Miss Ella Collins possesses a fine voice, and she knows how to use it. The acting of Miss Jenny Beauclerc captivates the audience. Mr. Glover and Mr. B. de Solla as baritones, Mr. Swarbreck, as tenor, give immense satisfaction, and Mr. I. de Solla is a clever conductor.

Blackburn.—Richard Coddington, Esq., of Westbank, Blackburn, a distinguished amateur organist, has contributed the sum of £350, towards improving the organ in St. Peter's Church, Blackburn. The instrument, built by Willis, cost altogether nearly £2,000. The additions have just been completed. The re-opening took place on Monday before a large audience. Dr. Spark of Leeds was specially engaged to perform the following programme selected by Mr. Coddington:—

"Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth," Handel; Adagio con grand espressione, Beethoven; Aria (bass), "He layeth the beams," Handel; Postlude—Allegro Maestoso (D major), Henry Smart; Andante con espressione (G minor), Sir Wm. Sterndale Bennett; Extemporaneous Introduction and Grand Fugue in A minor, J. S. Bach; Aria, "Agnus Dei," Mozart; Air with Variations and Fugue, Wm. Spark.

In the evening there was full choral service, comprising a new anthem by Dr. Spark, "Unto Thee, O Lord," prepared for the occasion.

Brussels.—The "Prize of Rome" at the Conservatory, has been awarded to François Servais, son of the well-known violoncellist.

Spohr in London.—The arrival of Spohr, the king of violinists, created a considerable sensation in London, where his great artistic gifts met with a very wide-spread recognition. The musical societies in London vied with each other in welcoming the great musician. His Macbeth, his Weihe der Töne, and the oratorio, The Fall of Babylon, were performed under his own direction.... "We artists, making up a party of ninety, gave him a grand dinner at Greenwich; I was placed next to him to interpret the proceedings and numerous speeches; I also accompanied him in three of his manuscript duets. In my improvisation at a later period of the evening I endeavoured to be completely 'Spohrish,' and worked up themes out of his Symphony, The Consecration of Sound. A grand party in his honour was given by Moscheles, and another by Mr. Alsager. The music was Spohr throughout, and Moscheles played his quintett. He says.... 'You know our friend is not demonstrative, but after the first movement he came to the piano to shake hands with me. Hallé turned over the leaves, whilst all the native and foreign pianists in London formed the audience.'"—The Life of Moscheles.

Times for Music.

PATRICK'S WOOING.*

As I came home from milking one morn,
Who should meet me but Patrick O'Shay,
Says he, "Nora, my jewel, I'm 'lorn,
And from you shure I can't keep away.

"And its waking I am when I'm slaping,
And draming I am when I wake,
And becase o' the silence I'm kaping,
Its dying I am for your sake."

But says I, "Pat, all men are decayvers,
Wi' blarney you'll never woo me,
For tho' women are 'asy belayers,
Its truth you're not telling, I see."

But that evening came Patrick once more,
And his eyes had been crying all day,
Says he, "Good-bye, dear Nora Asthore,
I'm just going to drown in the say."

Then my heart like a drum took to bating,
And, says I, "Patrick dear, don't you see
In the dark, all the time I was chating,
That tould you, you'd never woo me."

And its now I've a new satin gown,
And Pat sitting beside me so gay,
Never talking of going to drown,
As he told me, that night, in the say.

Louisa Gray.

* Copyright.

Digitized by Google

LOOKING OUT FOR "STARS."

(From an Occasional Correspondent.)

The astronomers at Greenwich are not more anxious in scanning the heavens in search of stray comets and new orbs, whose light takes thousands of years to reach us, than are the impresarios of our opera-houses in their eagerness to add new "stars" to the musical firmament. Season after season new lights are discovered, some of which grow into planets of the first magnitude, and become fixed in public favour, while others prove to be as erratic and short-lived as comets, or, like rockets, end in a complete "fizzle." Still, the caterers for the insatiable British public must continue their operatico-astronomical observations, and now and then a really brilliant and permanent planet rewards their assiduity. The Italian skies furnish the most promising objects for the managerial telescope, and it is not surprising, therefore, to find Manager Mapleson, the moment he has closed the doors of Drury Lane, hurrying off to the milky way of Milan, with the view of selecting from the throng of small luminaries some two or three that may burst upon the musical world in all the glory of first-class stars.

The indefatigable impresario has carried out here the "happy thought," which, it appears, he conceived recently in London, of giving the numerous aspirants for operatic fame the chance of a fair trial on the stage, the only audience being the company of already established artists, while the chairman of the judging committee is, of course, the manager himself. These après-midis, or whatever they may be best called, have been held at the Teatro Regio, Turin, and at La Scala, Milan. I had the pleasure to be present at the last one of these at our great theatre, when upwards of forty young ladies and gentlemen, aspiring to future operatic honours, underwent the ordeal of a hearing by the English impresario. Mr. Mapleson took his seat in the centre of the stalls precisely at four in the afternoon, and was surrounded by several of the leading Italian dilettanti.

First of all appeared a very promising soprano with a lovely voice, but the stolid manager showed no signs of approbation, although two privileged professional critics were wild with delight at her singing. Then followed a baritone, and next a buffo. The impresario remained immovable. Then came another soprano with a pleasing voice and style, and after her a tenor, who certainly aroused the Jupiter of Drury Lane, for he applauded him heartily, begged of him to sing again, and then his name—Camero—was at once eagerly written down by the impresario. A third soprano followed and sang an aria very brilliantly; but as this lady (Mdlle. Rizarelli) had been heard in England during the winter opera season, she was allowed to pass.

Then came on the stage a basso profondo with one of the finest voices possible. He had been eagerly sought for by many managers, and the La Scala director, after hearing him display his fine organ and style, was at once "on." Mr. Mapleson, however, managed to place himself between the Italians and the coveted prize, and, giving the singer an intimation that he had an important matter to communicate, hastily led him away to a contiguous café, where an engagement was at once signed by the delighted aspirant for seven years, the name appended to the document being "Giulio Perkins." The "Perkins" alarmed the impresario, but, after all, "what's in a name," when the grand voice is there? Giulio Perkins, I may safely say, has one of the deepest and most flexible bass voices I ever heard, and the English public will have, I suppose, an early opportunity of judging whether my estimate of his powers is overdrawn. The tenor, Camero, was also engaged for seven years, and within an hour afterwards the impresario was offered by a Mexican opera-house director £4,000 to cede his bargain, but it need hardly be added that his offer was "declined with thanks." Drury Lane is, therefore, destined to be the sky in which these new stars are to shine upon the operatic world.

Milan, August 4.

---

CAIRO.—The French Theatre here seems to be managed in a rather peculiar fashion, to say the least. One evening, M. Sardou's Fernande was stopt, in the middle, by superior order, and a cancan of an alarming description interpolated before the other half. On another occasion, the artists had to give La Grande Duchesse in plain clothes. On a third occasion, the last act of Orphée aux Enfers was being performed, when the Khedive arrived. He was in high spirits and wanted to see the piece in its integrity. The artists at first resisted, but eventually yielded to an irresistible argument, 21,000 francs. They re-commenced the performance, and by the middle of the first act the Khedive—was fast asleep.

AN ACTRESS SENT TO PRISON.—A woman who gave her name as Lydia Thompson, and describing herself as an actress, was recently sent to the London House of Correction for one month, for being drunk and disorderly. There is only one known Lydia Thompson on the stage, and that lady is now in America with her company. It is but justice to state this fact, so that the public may not confound the acts of a drunken woman with the name of the popular and favourite actress.

WAIFS.

Sir Julius Benedict will attend at the Birmingham Festival, to hear the new oratorio of Mr. A. Sullivan.

CABINET NEWS.—The only Ministers who are on speaking terms are the Premier and the Chancellor of the Exchequer.—Punch.

Signor Gustave Garcia and Madame Martorelli Garcia are the vocalists engaged at the Brighton Aquarium promenade concerts to-day.

We are glad to learn that Dr. White's confinement to his chamber for so many weeks has terminated. It will be remembered that some weeks ago he was bitten by a dog.

A fire took place at Messrs. Weippert's, the music publishers of Regent Street, on Thursday evening, about 9 o'clock, and completely destroyed their warehouse. The upper part of the premises suffered but small damage.

We understand, upon the very best authority, that a building fund will be immediately started by the Committee and friends of the Royal Academy of Music, to provide handsome and suitable accommodation for the fast increasing wants of the Institution.

It is a most difficult matter to decide in which character Mdme. Pauline Lucca is seen at her best. In L'Africaine she is without a rival; in Fra Diavolo equally good; as Zerlina, in Don Giovanni, who can truly describe her excellencies?; while as Marguerite, in Faust, she makes us forget the fair-haired Gretchens of old, and gives us a creation at once natural and charming, as widely different from the dreamy girl, Marguerite, as day is from night. Mdme. Lucca instils warmth and love into the part, not dreaminess and vapid resignation, and we are at first astonished, and then delighted, with her impersonation.—Leslie's Illustrated.

MEMORIAL CUP.—A richly chased silver cup, to be presented to the South Wales Choral Union by the London Committee of the Welsh Choir Prize Fund, to commemorate their success at the National Musical Competition meeting in July, 1872, is now being exhibited for a short time at Mr. Streeter's, 37, Conduit Street, Bond Street, W. The cover is surmounted by a model of the ancient Welsh harp, bearing a motto signifying "The Soul of Music." On the shield are engraven the arms of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales; on the reverse the arms of North and South Wales and the Royal Princes of Wales. The engravings are beautifully finished.—The Times, Aug. 15.

Lord Clarence Paget, C.B., recently presided at a National Welsh Festival, or Eisteddfod, at Menai Bridge. In his inaugural address his Lordship said he had been requested by the Prince of Wales to take the earliest opportunity of making public the announcement of a great national scheme for the foundation of a School of Music; he had told his Royal Highness that he thought the Welsh were worthy of having the first official intimation of this scheme. It is proposed to establish in London; in connection with the Royal Albert Hall, a National Training School for the cultivation of music among all classes, under the immediate Presidency of the Prince of Wales. The central depôt will be in London; but it is hoped in time to extend branches into the country in the same manner as Schools of Art. The proposed scholarships are of two kinds—one giving free instruction in music, and the other, in addition to free instruction, a maintenance allowance. Free instruction will be provided for 300 scholars. A private gentleman, Mr. Freak, has munificently undertaken, at his own cost, to provide the necessary Class and Lecture Rooms. The Committee of Management consists of the Duke of Edinburgh, Lord Clarence Paget, Major Eardley Wilmot, Mr. Henry Cole, Major Donnelly, and Sir Henry Anderson.

THE ORIGIN OF "AULD ROBIN GRAY."—The authors of the "Songstresses of Scotland" tell the story in this way:—There was an old Scotch air (not, however, to which the song is now sung, for that we owe to an English clergyman,) of which Lady Anne Bernard was very fond, and which Soph Johnson was in the habit of singing to words that were far from choice. It struck Lady Anne that she could supply the air with a tale of virtuous distress in humble life with which all could sympathise. Robin Gray was the name of a shepherd at Balcarres, who was familiar with the children of the house. He had once arrested them in their flight to an indulgent neighbour's. Lady Anne revenged this arrest by seizing the old man's name, and preventing it from passing into forgetfulness. While she was in the act of heaping misfortunes on the heroine, Jeanie, her sister Elizabeth, twelve or thirteen years her junior, strayed into the little room, and saw "Sister Anne" at her escritoire. "I have been writing a ballad, my dear," the frank elder sister told her little confidante; "and I am oppressing my heroines with many misfortunes. I have already sent her Jamie to sea, broken her father's arm, and made her mother fall sick and given her auld Robin for a lover, but I wish to load her with a fifth sorrow in the four lines. Help me to one, I pray." "Steal the cow, Sister Anne," said the little Elizabeth. The cow was immediately lifted and the song completed.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Ignace Gibsone has left town to pass his vacation at Dover.

A thief was lately caught breaking into a song. He had already got through the first two bars when a policeman came up and hit him with a stave.

A musical contemporary (American) says :—"The man who thought he could do business without advertising has been compelled to give in. His first advertisement was headed 'Sheriff's sale.'"

Ole Bull, the great Norwegian cat-gut scraper, has two pets which he loves passing well—his fiddle and his dog. The former is more useful than ornamental, and the latter is more ornamental than useful. The dog is a small white poodle, covered with a fleece as soft as that of Mary's little lamb. Yesterday morning, as Ole Bull was walking along Fourth Street, followed by his little dog, a squad of dog-catchers espied the canine, and, noticing that Fido was not provided with a ticket-of-leave from Collector Wright, in the shape of a three-dollar brass medal, they marked him as a foe worthy of their steel wire. One of the boys, carrying a wire noose behind his back, slipped cautiously up to Fido, and with a dexterous turn of the wrist lassoed him. A distressing "yawp!" from the dog attracted the attention of the musician, and, looking around, he saw his favourite in the hands of the Philistines. Then ensued a scene at once ludicrous and tragical. Ole Bull exclaimed, "Mein Gott! vot you do wiz mine little dog!" "He ain't got no 'C. T. P.' on," replied the dog-catcher, "and we's goin' to impound him." "I will pound you if you let him not go," said the fiddler, taking hold of the dog and freeing him from the noose. The dog ran for life, the dog-catchers pursued, half a dozen newsboys followed, and Ole Bull brought up the rear. The dog was now put to his trumps. Several times the catcher threw out his noose, which the dog cunningly dodged. Ole Bull was greatly agitated, and was no doubt angry enough to annihilate every dog-catcher in the city. Being unable, however, to keep up with the chase, he resorted to strategy. Taking a position in an open door on Chestnut Street, he whistled to the dog, and the sagacious animal ran in, and bounding up the stairs, was soon safe from pursuit. Ole Bull then secured him, and the fiends of the dog-pound were cheated out of a victim.—St. Louis Democrat.

The report of Mr. John Hullah on the results of his first year's musical inspection of the training colleges throughout the country, which is included in the appendix to the annual report of the Committee of Council on Education just issued, is receiving very general criticism at the hands of the Tonic Sol-faists, who, as the advocates of a system to which Mr. Hullah is known to be opposed, naturally regard his proceedings with some jealousy. They have at length embodied their views in a memorial, signed by Mr. John Curwen, as President of the Tonic Sol-fa College, and this document, which is of considerable length, has been presented to the Committee of Council. After reciting the fact that the Committee had promised that the Tonic Sol-fa notation and method should be received on the same terms as the old notation in all examinations, and stating that a large number of the training colleges adopt the Tonic Sol-fa method, the memorialists proceed to express their regret that the tests in copying music by ear, which had been employed for many years, were abandoned by Mr. Hullah in his visits to normal schools, and they pray that these may be resumed. Having heard that the inspector intends to reintroduce the subject of harmony in his examinations next Christmas, the memorialists pray that their method may be used in respect to it. In regard to the sight-singing tests presented to students by the inspector in his visitations of the colleges, it is submitted that the same piece of music may in future be used in both notations, and that equal marks be given for each, although the memorialists have no objection to the allotment of extra marks to students who can read from both. They also urge that the marks for sight-singing should be published separately from those for voice, ear, and style. The memorialists state that at the Christmas examination by Mr. Hullah, the Tonic Sol-fa students were, for the first time, required to answer questions on the staff notation, a proceeding in which, they argue, he was acting in opposition to their lordships' letter of the 10th of August, 1869. This action of the inspector has, it is said, discouraged the study of the method in various parts of the kingdom. Pointing to the exercises in musical notation which are appended to Mr. Hullah's report, the memorialists charge him with having given to the Tonic Sol-faists a test "translated in a manner so foreign to their habits and practice, and printed with such uneven 'pulses,' or 'beats,' and such inaccurate octave marks, as rendered it simply impossible to be sung." There are, they allege, more than twenty errors of the press in the piece of music given to the Tonic Sol-faists, any one of which must confuse a sight-singer; and in proof of their assertion they supply a list of the errors. The memorialists conclude by submitting that they have shown cause to justify them, under present circumstances, in asking for such re-arrangements as will remedy the difficulties they have pointed out, and secure the fitness and thoroughness of Tonic Sol-fa examinations.

MENDELSSOHN'S VISIT TO THE QUEEN.—Mendelssohn gave us an account of his visit to the Queen. She had received him very graciously, and he was much pleased with her rendering of some of his songs, which he had accompanied; he had also played to the Queen and the Prince. She must have been pleased, for, when he rose to depart, she thanked him, and said, "You have given me so much pleasure, now, what can I do to give you pleasure?" Mendelssohn deprecating, she insisted, so he candidly admitted that he had a wish that only Her Majesty could fulfil. He, himself the head of a household, felt mightily interested in the Queen's domestic arrangements; in short, might he see the Royal children in their Royal nurseries? The Queen at once entered into the spirit of his request, and in her most winning way conducted him herself through the nurseries, all the while comparing notes with him on the homely subjects that had a special attraction for both.—The Life of Moscheles.

HE IS LATE.

She watches at the porch,
The sun is nearly down;
What keeps her truant lord?
He should be back from town.
One short, sweet year ago
He never made her wait—
As much too early then,
As now he is too late.

Had heaven bestowed on me
That little lady there,
Whom love has made so sad,
And sadness made so fair—
Her hand, her cheek, her mouth
Should not for kisses wait:
Were that sweet armful mine,
I never could be late.

R. H. STODDARD.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

ROBERT COCKS & Co.—"Reminiscences of Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony," by G. F. West; "Let the hills resound," part-song, and also for pianoforte solo, by Brinley Richards; "Be happy and never despair," song, by W. T. Wrighton; "My old mate and me," song, by Miss M. Lindsay; "The open window," song, by Alfred Scott Gatty.

ADAMS & BERESFORD (Birmingham).—"Love in the olden time," song, by Hildegard.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS.—"A Relic," for the pianoforte, by Mozart.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.
New Edition, Revised and Improved, of
A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR
THE VOICE,
By T. A. WALLWORTH.
A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.
Full Music size, price 7s.
London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM

Musical Festival,

1873.

CHAPPELL & CO.

HAVE MUCH PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING THAT

SIG. RANDEGGER'S

NEW DRAMATIC CANTATA,

FRIDOLIN,

OR

THE MESSAGE TO THE FORGE,

TO BE PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME ON THURSDAY, AUGUST 28TH,

WILL BE PUBLISHED ON

MONDAY, AUGUST 25TH,

And may be had of all Musicsellers in Town or Country.

PRICE—Paper Covers, 6s.; Cloth Boards, 8s.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

SYDNEY SMITH'S FOUR NEW PIECES.

ROSE-LEAVES.

MORCEAU ÉLÉGANT.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

Played by the Composer at his concert with great success.

LES TROMPETTES DE LA GUERRE.

MORCEAU MILITAIRE.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LA TRAVIATA.

FANTASIA ON VERDI'S OPERA.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

SOUVENIR DE LA MADELEINE.

MORCEAU SUR LES OFFERTOIRES DE LEFÉBURE-WELY.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, to be performed for the first time at the approaching Festival, are in the Press:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans,

National Hymn,

Ave Maria,

AND

Cantemus.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

GEO. WOODS & CO.'S

AMERICAN MADE

PARLOR & CHAPEL ORGANS

Are unequalled for Purity and Beauty of Tone. Their peculiar and interior arrangements give them extraordinary power. Their Solo Stops are more varied and charming in their effects than any organ now made, and their facilities for combination are boundless.

Their Cases are of the most graceful design and perfect finish, and constructed in the most thorough and durable manner.

These Organs have received the most flattering encomiums from all who have examined them, and are pronounced by all the best musicians who have tested them to be the finest organs ever offered in this country.

The Profession and Public generally are earnestly invited to examine these beautiful instruments at our own or agents' warerooms, and compare them with other instruments of their class.

Our Illustrated Circular, containing Choice Music, and full particulars of the Organs, will be sent post free to any address.

The latest and most valuable invention in Musical Instruments, the "PIANO ORGAN," a combination of Pianoforte and Organ in one instrument. The greatest novelty in the world.

MANUFACTORY: CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS., U.S.A.

A GREAT VARIETY OF ORGANS ARE ON EXHIBITION AT

THE LONDON SHOW ROOMS,

33, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON BRIDGE,

And at BOOSEY & CO.'S, 24, HOLLES ST., OXFORD ST., W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 23, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 35. SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE, This Day (SATURDAY), August 30, Goldsmith's Comedy, "SHE STOOPS TO CONQUER," compressed into three acts, supported by the following powerful cast: Messrs. W. H. Stephens, W. H. Vernon, G. Temple, H. J. Turner, and Lionel Brough; Mdme. E Bufton and Miss Fanny Hughes.—Numbered reserved stalls, Half-a-Crown; unnumbered reserved seats, One Shilling. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL, SEPTEMBER 9, 10, 11, and 12, 1873.

MORNING.

TUESDAY, "ELIJAH."
WEDNESDAY, "JEPHTHAH," and Rossini's "STABAT MATER."
THURSDAY, Sir F. Ouseley's "HAGAR," Dr. Wesley's NEW WORK, and Spohr's "CHRISTIAN'S PRAYER," &c.
FRIDAY, "MESSIAH."

EVENING.

TUESDAY, CONCERT, SHIRE HALL.
WEDNESDAY, "ST. PAUL," CATHEDRAL.
THURSDAY, CONCERT, SHIRE HALL.
FRIDAY, CHAMBER CONCERT, SHIRE HALL.

MISS BLANCHE RIEVES will sing Balfe's popular song, "KILLARNEY," September 4, Belvedere; Sept. 29, Harrogate.

THE KIBBLE CRYSTAL ART PALACE, ROYAL BOTANIC GARDENS, Glasgow.—The Treasurer will be happy to hear from first-class Vocalists, Instrumentalists, and Concert touring parties, stating terms and dates vacant, for Engagements in Glasgow. Apply to Mr. Robert Downie, 131, West Regent Street, Glasgow.

MR. E. ADAMS, Operatic Comedian, Manager and Author, General Entrepreneur and Director for Comic Opera, Burlesque and First-Class Musical Entertainments, for London and the Provinces.
Complete Tuition for the Stage, with every facility to eligible aspirants.
Foreign Productions Translated and Adapted for English representation.
Personal interviews, from 12 to 3, at Mr. Boosey's, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRY W. GOODBAN'S "GIRLS AND BOYS' OWN BOOK FOR THE PIANOFORTE." An easy, concise, and complete Tutor. Post free for 32 Stamps. "Among the many instruction books for pianoforte playing which have come under our notice, we have never met with one so easily intelligible to youthful students. Teachers and parents will find this a most valuable acquisition."—Observer. STANLEY LUCAS, WEBER & Co., 84, New Bond Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' New Sacred Part-Song, for a full choir, "SOUND THE TRUMPET IN ZION." Post free for 18 stamps.

HOME TREASURES.—Twenty-five admired Melodies. Arranged and Fingered for the Pianoforte by WILLIAM SMALLWOOD. 2s. 6d. each; Free by post at half-price in stamps.

HOME TREASURES.—Twelve of the most Favourite Melodies of that Popular Series. Arranged as Pianoforte Duets by WILLIAM SMALLWOOD. 3s. each; post-free at half-price in stamps. London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.
FOUR NEW STYLES.

STYLE P.—Two Sets of Reeds, with Three Pedals. .. .. .. 22 Guineas.
STYLE Q.—Two Sets of Reeds. Resonant Case. Three Pedals. .. 25 Guineas.
STYLE S.—Seven Stops; with Sub-Bass and Octave Coupler. Resonant Case .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 38 Guineas.
STYLE T.—Five Stops. Improved Vox Humana. Resonant Case .. 28 Guineas.
Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, London.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., D.C.L.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY, the 22nd September, and will terminate on Saturday the 20th of December.
Candidates of admission can be examined at the Institution on THURSDAY, the 18th September, at eleven o'clock, and every following Thursday at the same hour.
By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

"ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. Sung by Madame Patey .. 4s.
"THE KING AND I" .. .. Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. 4s.
"THE CROSS ROADS" .. .. Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. 4s.
"SYMPATHY" .. .. .. Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. 4s.
"NOTHING" .. .. .. Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. 4s.
E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

"SINCE BABY LEFT US" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s.
"REQUITED" .. .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"A MODERN STORY" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"WRITING TO WILLIE" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"MY MORNING DREAM" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

QUACK-QUACK.—The immensely exciting WILD DUCK GALOP, introduced nightly in the comic opera of the "Wonderful Duck," at the Opera-Comique, and vociferously encored. Can be sung as well as played. 18 Stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

"THE PET LINNET,"
BALLAD,
Sung with great applause by Miss LINA GLOVER at the Royal Albert Hall.
Composed by J. W. GLOVER.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"ST. PATRICK AT TARA,"
CANTATA,
With characteristic words from Ossian, Moore, Clarence, Mangan, &c.
Composed, and dedicated by express permission, to
His Royal Highness PRINCE ARTHUR PATRICK
By J. W. GLOVER.
Price 5s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"
"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"
("Connais tu le pays.")
Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,
In the Opera of "MIGNON."
The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From "The Times.")

Birmingham, August 25th, 1873.

The Birmingham Festival (31st anniversary) begins to-morrow. The origin and history of these celebrated triennial gatherings have been so amply and so often described that it would be a waste of time and space to dwell upon them again. An extract from the accustomed preliminary notice of the directors will answer all purposes, referring, as it does, to the Birmingham General Hospital, in aid of the funds of which the Festival was originally instituted, and has now for upwards of a century been carried on:—

"The Birmingham General Hospital is one of the oldest and largest charities of its kind in the Provinces. It was projected and partly founded in 1766, and was enlarged from time to time as the increasing demands of population required. In 1865, the arrangement of the building was thoroughly re-modelled, and large extensions were made to afford greater space for patients and better accommodation for the medical and nursing staff. For this purpose the main building was altered, and two new wings were added to it. The Hospital now contains 252 beds for in-patients, a separate building for fever patients, extensive kitchens and domestic offices, and healthy sleeping-rooms for officers and nurses. The total cost of the new buildings and restorations was upwards of £24,000. The work of the charity may be estimated from the fact that, from June 1871 to June 1872, not fewer than 2,655 in-patients, and 24,896 out-patients were received—making a total of 27,551. Of these, 1,596 in-patients, and 14,454 out-patients were admitted free—a large proportion of both kinds being accidents or urgent medical cases. Since the opening of the Hospital, a total of nearly 825,000 patients have been received and treated by the staff—a number which represents an enormous mass of suffering among the poor, for whose benefit the charity is conducted. As indicating the completeness of the scale on which the hospital is planned it may be mentioned that a considerable number of special cases are sent annually to the convalescent institutions—the Birmingham Sanatorium, and the seaside institutions at Rhyl and New Brighton, the cost being defrayed by the charity. The annual expenditure of the charity is about £11,000. Of this a small proportion is derived from endowments, the rest being supplied by annual subscriptions, by various triennial collections in the churches and chapels, and by the produce of the Musical Festivals. The Musical Festivals in aid of the Hospital were commenced in 1768, realizing the sum of £299. From that period until 1796 seven Festivals were held. In 1799 the scale of these celebrations was enlarged, and since then the meetings (with one exception) have been held triennially. The last three Festivals (the most brilliant of the series) yielded respectively a very large income to the Hospital—the Festival of 1864 having produced a net return of £5,256, and that for 1867 the still higher amount of £5,541, while the amount realized by the Festival of 1870 reached a sum of £6,195, being the largest amount since the commencement of the series a century ago. Since their foundation the Festivals have yielded a grand total of £100,000, the whole of which has been paid over to the Hospital. In addition to this amount the noble organ in the Town Hall (valued at more than £5,000) and an extensive musical library are the property of the Hospital, the cost having been defrayed out of the Festival receipts."

Following upon this the directors insist with justifiable pride on the benefits which the Birmingham Festival has indirectly conferred upon the art of music:—

"During the period of upwards of a century over which the Festivals have now extended, they have given the public the choice masterpieces of great composers, interpreted by the most eminent artists, vocal and instrumental. Since 1834—the period of reorganization—the Festivals have obtained a European celebrity, and have been frequently distinguished by the production of new works of the highest rank. Among these may be mentioned the St. Paul and the Lobgesang of Mendelssohn, given in 1837 and 1840; and the immortal Elijah, specially written for Birmingham, and produced at the Festival of 1846 under the conductorship of Mendelssohn himself. In 1855 and 1864, respectively, the oratorios of Eli and Naaman, by Sir Michael Costa, were written for, and produced at, Birmingham; and 1,867 witnessed the production of the sacred cantata, The Woman of Samaria, specially composed for that occasion by Professor Sterndale Bennett; while in 1870 the first performance took place of Sir Julius Benedict's St. Peter. Among the many secular compositions originally produced at these Festivals may be mentioned the cantata of Kenilworth by Mr. A. S. Sullivan, and The Bride of Dunkerron by Mr. Henry Smart; The Ancient Mariner and Paradise and the Peri by Mr. J. F. Barnett; and Nala and Damayanti by Dr. Ferdinand Hiller."

To which (poor Chevalier Neukomm's sacred music—once the pride of Birmingham, having apparently been forgotten) might be added Mr. Macfarren's Leonora, Mr. Howard Glover's Tam O'Shanter, &c.

The arrangements for the actual Festival look well upon paper. The Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot is the President of the meeting, with upwards of 100 Vice Presidents, headed by the Mayor and Recorder of Birmingham, and including dukes, marquises, earls, lords, "right honourables," &c.—saying nothing of bishops and deans—to support him.

The whole of the musical arrangements are, as they have been since 1849, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa—a giant in his way, as all the musical community well know. This is the ninth Birmingham Festival Sir Michael Costa has conducted. He succeeded Moscheles, who was associated with Mendelssohn in the never-to-be-forgotten meeting when Elijah was produced (1846), and has so ably fulfilled the duties entrusted to him that it is to be hoped he may continue in office for a long time to come. He has not merely directed the performances at Birmingham for all these years, but has composed important works for it, such as his oratorios of Eli and Naaman, coming out with equal credit from both ordeals. Sir Michael has engaged the following distinguished artists as principal singers:—Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and Mdlle. Albani (sopranos); Madame Patey and Madame Trebelli-Bettini (contraltos); Messrs. Sims Reeves, Vernon Rigby, and W. H. Cummings (tenors); and Mr. Santley and Signor Foli (baritone and bass).

He has also secured an orchestra, as of old, one of the most complete in all departments, comprising 28 first violins (principal, M. Saintos); 26 second violins (principal, Mr. Willy); 20 violas (principal, Mr. Doyle); 17 violoncellos (principal, M. Laserre); 16 "double basses"—as at Exeter Hall, Sacred Harmonic Society—(principal, Mr. Howell); 4 flutes, 4 oboes, 4 clarinets, and 4 bassoons (principals, respectively, Messrs. Radcliffe, Barret, Lazarus, and Hutchins), with Mr. Thomas Harper as chief trumpeter, Mr. Charles Harper as principal horn, Mr. Hawkes at the head of the three trombones, Mr. Hughes at the ophecleide, Mr. Hawes at the contrafagotto (for Beethoven's C minor symphony, no doubt), and competent performers like Messrs. J. A. Smith, Orchard, Middleditch, Lockwood, and Davis at the double drums, side drum (with triangle), bass drum, and harps—as magnificent an army of orchestral executants as could possibly be dreamt of. True, that many amateurs would like to have seen our young English violoncellist, Mr. Edward Howell, as chief of the department, which—Signor Piatti (who disdains to play in orchestras) alone excepted—he is fitted, by natural talent no less than by assiduous study, to represent as efficiently as any foreign artist with whom we are acquainted; and, true, that others, whose tastes lie in a different direction, would have very much liked to see Mr. Phasey with his harmonious euphonium. But we cannot have all that we may wish, and should be thankful to Sir Michael Costa for what he has vouchsafed us.

To speak of the Birmingham Festival Choir is unnecessary. It has long been recognized as matchless in this country, more particularly where sacred music has to be dealt with. Nor do the valuable services of Mr. W. C. Stockley, conductor of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and Mr. J. A. Sutton, conductor of the Birmingham Amateur Association, so many of whose members afford gratuitous assistance at the Festival, need more than a passing reference. Nearly 100 sopranos, nearly 50 contraltos, nearly 50 altos, nearly 100 tenors, and between 80 and 90 baritones and basses make up an imposing force of choristers, with such voices as they possess not easy to equal much less to surpass. So that both in the orchestral and choral departments, the Birmingham Festival, as has been the case for some half a century past, is still unrivalled.

The programme of the week has already been published in The Times. A passing reference will therefore suffice. A Birmingham Festival without Mendelssohn's Elijah would be no Birmingham Festival, and on this occasion Elijah happens to be selected for the opening day—a circumstance the more interesting on account of that great masterpiece having been first heard in public at the Festival of 1846, on the 26th of August. In the evening the chief feature of the concert will be the Lord of Burleigh, a "pastoral cantata," words by Mr. Desmond Ryan, music by Signor Schira; the second part of the programme beginning with the Leonora overture (No. 3) of Beethoven, and terminating with the overture to Cherubini's Anacreon. Wednesday morning is devoted to Mr. Arthur Sullivan's new oratorio, The Light of the World, about which the highest expectations are raised, not merely because this theme is almost identical with that of portions of the Messiah, and with what Mendelssohn has adapted for his unfinished Christus, but because it is the composition of Mr. Sullivan, from whom musical England at this time reasonably expects so much. Report speaks highly of the music, and, we can well believe, on good foundation. The evening concert includes among other things a manuscript "Hymn of Praise" by Rossini, Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, and Mr. Macfarren's overture to his oratorio John the Baptist, shortly to be presented at the Bristol Festival. On Thursday morning the perennial Messiah will speak for itself. The conspicuous feature of the evening programme is Signor Alberto Randegger's cantata, entitled Fridolin; or, the Message to the Forge, also expressly composed for the Festival. On Friday morning a selection of sacred music, including a Cantata by Spohr, the "Imperial Mass" (No. 4) of Haydn, an "Ave Maria" and "Double Chorus" by Rossini, together with selections from Israel in Egypt, are in the programme. In the evening Handel's Judas Maccabæus (an excellent substitute for the traditional "dress ball") will wind up the Festival. All the performances, sacred and secular, are, as usual, to be given in the Town Hall, a monument of which, for more than one reason, Birmingham has a fair right to be proud.

Digitized by Google

August 26th.

The performance to-day of Mendelssohn's Elijah, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, was, on the whole, perhaps, excepting alone that memorable one of 1855, the finest ever heard at Birmingham—which is equivalent to saying, one of the finest that could possibly be heard anywhere. The town-hall was crowded in every part, so much so that not a vacant place could be seen. A more successful first day is hardly to be remembered in the annals of the Birmingham Festival. It was successful alike in an artistic and a pecuniary sense, and promises well for the results of the week. The pride of the Birmingham people in Elijah—composed expressly for them, and their own legitimate property—is easily understood; and a performance of this greatest of modern sacred works, under advantageous circumstances, invariably brings together a large audience. The circumstances to-day were doubly advantageous, for, in addition to the splendid phalanx of executants, vocal and instrumental, to whom every phrase of Elijah is familiar, there was the unfailing attraction of Royalty. The Duke of Edinburgh, true, as always, to his promise, honoured the performance with his presence, as a guest of the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, staying at the Queen's Hotel. His Royal Highness, attended by a special body-guard of Rifles, reached the Town-hall with a punctuality to be commended. He was loudly cheered all the way from the hotel to the hall by a dense multitude, which, with the indispensable precaution of barricades, lined both sides of the great thoroughfare (New Street). On his arrival, the cheering was renewed inside the building, and "God save the Queen," the audience standing, appropriately inaugurated the Festival. The arrangement of the National Anthem was, as of old, the very effective one of Sir Michael Costa, for chorus and orchestra, the first verse being allotted to sopranos, the second to contraltos, and the ensemble to the whole body of performers, That Sir Michael Costa was received with enthusiasm it is scarcely necessary to state; and by the admirable manner in which he directed the performance of an oratorio, known to be one of his especial favourites, he maintained his claim to the hearty recognition awarded to him. After Mr. Santley, to whom the music of the Prophet was exclusively assigned, had, in his own emphatic way, uttered the solemn prophecy which opens the oratorio, the orchestra played the so-called "overture" magnificently; the grand chorus, "Help Lord, wilt thou quite destroy us?" into which it leads, being no less magnificently delivered. This was a beginning which warranted expectations of something out of the common way, and seldom has expectation been more fully carried out. The times of all the choruses were indicated by Sir Michael Costa to a nicety, and rarely have the injunctions of an orchestral commander been more rigidly and scrupulously obeyed. The perfection of discipline could no further go. We need not, for the twentieth time, descant upon the choruses of Elijah. It may suffice to add that scarcely in a single instance was a chance offered for critical objection. Not only the grand choruses—including the one already named, "Be not afraid," the pæans of the Baalite priests, and last and grandest of all, "Thanks be to God," the overpowering climax to Part I.—but those more ethereal inspirations, "Blessed are the men who fear him," "He watching over Israel," "He that shall endure to the end," &c., were sung with such precision and strict observance to the most delicate transition, that no fault could be found. Never have the famed Birmingham singers more honourably distinguished themselves; never was a verdict more unanimous about their excellence pronounced than that which followed the sublime "Amen" peroration to "And then shall your light break forth," which brings the oratorio so nobly to an end.

It is enough to name the principal singers to whom the vocal solo parts were assigned. In the first part the chief soprano was Madame Lemmens-Sherrington; the chief contralto, Madame Trebelli-Bettini; and the chief tenor, Mr. Vernon Rigby. In the second part, the chief soprano was Mdlle. Tietjens; the chief contralto, Madame Patey; and the chief tenor, Mr. Sims Reeves. Mr. Santley, as bass, stood alone in his glory. Mrs. Sutton, Messrs. J. A. Smith, W. T. Briggs, and Smythson afforded efficient aid in some of the concerted pieces—such, for example, as the quartet, "Cast thy burden on the Lord," the superb Sanctus, "Holy, holy, holy is God the Lord," and the double quartet, "He shall give His angels charge," not often thoroughly well-rendered, but on the occasion under notice almost irreproachable. How the artists sing the music allotted to them in Elijah is so well known to London readers that to dwell upon their various merits would be superfluous. All did their very best, and the performance generally would have more than satisfied Mendelssohn himself. While the final chorus was proceeding, the Vice-President's gallery was being rapidly emptied of its occupants, but the Duke of Edinburgh, setting an example well worthy imitation, remained to the last note. Nothing could move his Royal Highness until the "Amen" was over. On leaving the Town Hall he was cheered inside and outside, just as he had been cheered before the commencement of the oratorio. Among the distinguished persons present, besides the Duke of Edinburgh, were:—"The Earl of Shrewsbury (President) and party; the Mayor of Birmingham and party; Lord and Lady Hatherton and party; Lord and Lady Folkestone and party; Lord Willoughby de Broke and party; Lady Victoria Evans-Luke and party; Lady Heywood and party; Marquis of Hertford; Lord and Lady William Seymour; Lord Ernest Seymour, Lady Georgina Seymour; the Hon. Spencer Lyttelton and party; Lady Charles Paulet and party; Sir R. Hamilton and party; the Bishop of Rochester and party; Lady Ward and party; Lord and Lady John Manners; Lord Newry; the Right Hon. Sir Charles B. Adderley and party; Lady Isham and party; the Dean of Lichfield and party; Major-General the Hon. A. C. Legge and party; the Hon. Mr. Gage; Colonel Middlemore and party; Lieutenant-Colonel and the Hon. Mrs. Lloyd Lindsay; Colonel Stephenson, C.B.; Mr. N. N. Newdegate, M.P., and party; Mr. John Hardy, M.P., and party; Mr. George Dixon, M.P., and party; Hon. Mrs. Edward Talbot, Mrs. Dugdale, of Blyth, and party; Mrs. and Miss Wise and party; the Archdeacon of Coventry and party; Mrs. James Chance and party; Mr. H. B. Leigh and party; Mr. George Newdegate and party, &c.

At the first evening miscellaneous concert to-night, the new cantata entitled The Lord of Burleigh, words by Mr. Desmond L. Ryan, music by Signor Schira, was performed with great success, under the direction of its composer. Two pieces—an unaccompanied trio for soprano, contralto, and tenor, and a quartet with chorus, were encored and repeated. Signor Schira was unanimously called back after leaving the orchestra. The principal singers were Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley. The Duke of Edinburgh was present. Mr. Arthur Sullivan's new oratorio, The Light of the World, will be given to-morrow, when his Royal Highness will again attend the performance.

Digitized by Google

August 27.

The Duke of Edinburgh returned to Ingestre to-day, after the performance of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, at which he was present from first to last. The impression left by this short visit of His Royal Highness has been most favourable. Wherever he was seen he was cheered with real enthusiasm. The doors of the Queen's Hotel, over the roof of which the Union Jack and the Russian flag are flying, were besieged from morning to night by crowds of people anxious to obtain a glimpse of him, coming out or going in. This day the scene was almost indescribable. In the morning there was a great deal of rain; but before the Duke left the hotel on his way to the Town Hall "the rain was over and gone," and sunshine took its place. The great thoroughfares were even more densely thronged than yesterday; and but for the careful and efficient police arrangements, passage to and fro would have been impracticable for those who went on foot. Cheers and counter-cheers resounded from all sides as the Royal carriage slowly reached its destination. This is, we believe, the first Royal visit on such an occasion, to Birmingham, and it will be long remembered. Such mutual cordiality has seldom been witnessed.

Precisely at half-past 11, the hour announced for beginning, the Duke of Edinburgh, the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, and their friends arrived. Then there was another burst of cheering, to echo the cheers still heard outside the building. The hall was filled in every part, and as had been the case the day before, when Elijah was given, standing room could not be obtained for love or money after the oratorio had begun.

To-day was a proud day for Mr. Sullivan, who, to judge by the hearty and unanimous greeting that welcomed his appearance on the platform, is a great favourite in this town, where other works from his pen have obtained well-merited success. The last outgrowth of his genius, however, leaves far behind all that has preceded it. To compose an oratorio is, under any circumstances, a heavy, laborious, and responsible task; but to be able to compose a good oratorio is within the power of a very small minority. Mr. Sullivan has not only composed a good oratorio, but in many respects a great one. That The Light of the World is a work destined to live we feel convinced. The Birmingham Festival has been lucky in its oratorios—from Mendelssohn's Elijah (1846), to Sir Julius Benedict's St. Peter (1870)—with the Eli and Naaman of Sir Michael Costa (1855 and 1864) to separate the two. Another decided hit, if the genuine demonstration of this afternoon may be taken into account, has been achieved. Mr. Sullivan has selected a very difficult theme to treat. Handel dealt with it in the Messiah, and Mendelssohn touched upon it in the fragments of his oratorio, Christus. Nevertheless, the work, as it stands, bears little resemblance to either of these masterpieces—the finished or the unfinished; and as the composer alone, if we are rightly informed, is answerable for the arrangement of the materials of which he has made use, it is but just that he should be allowed to speak for himself. Here, then, is the "argument":—

"In this oratorio the intention has not been to convey the spiritual idea of the Saviour, as in the Messiah, or to recount the sufferings of Christ, as in the Passionsmusik, but to set forth the human aspect of the life of our Lord on earth, exemplifying it by some of the actual incidents in his career, which bear specially upon His attributes of Preacher, Healer, and Prophet. For this purpose, and to give it dramatic force, the work has been laid out in 'scenes' dealing respectively in the first part with the 'nativity,' 'preaching,' 'healing,' and 'prophesying' of our Lord, ending with the triumphant entry into Jerusalem; and in the second part with the utterances which, containing the avowal of Himself as the Son of Man, excited to the utmost the wrath of His enemies, and led the rulers to conspire for His betrayal and death; the solemn recital of the chorus of His sufferings and the belief in His final reward; the grief of Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre; and the consolation and triumph of the disciples at the resurrection of their Lord and Master. After a prophetic introduction taken from Isaiah—the 'Evangelical Prophet'—the first scene is laid at Bethlehem.

"The shepherds watch their flocks by night, when an angel appears to them, and brings 'good tidings' of the birth of the promised Saviour. They go to Bethlehem, reflecting on the fulfilment of the prophecy concerning Christ. The Virgin Mary, in answer to their salutations, pours forth her gratitude to the Almighty for His favour, and they depart glorifying God. The rest of the scene embraces the warning by the angel to the parents of Jesus of Herod's design, the lament and consoling of Rachel in Rama, and the promise of God's blessing upon the Child."

The succeeding scenes are disposed as follows:—

"Nazareth.—Our Lord appears in the Synagogue, and, after reading from Isaiah, presents Himself to His listeners as the object of the prophecy. Upon their expressed amazement and incredulity, He reproaches them with their continued unbelief, and, goaded to rage by His numerous instances of God's favour to those whom they looked upon with contempt, they drive Him out of the Synagogue. Left alone with His disciples, who proclaim their faith in Him, He exhorts them to bear their persecutions with meekness, and to judge not that they be not judged, relying on God's unfailing justice.

"Lazarus.—Being told that Lazarus is sick, Christ expresses His determination to go to him. A disciple endeavours to dissuade Him from going again to a place where He has but lately escaped further persecution; but, undeterred by this, our Lord persists in His resolve; and the disciples, after being told plainly that Lazarus is dead, accompany Him. The sad journey, and the arrival at Bethany, where the kindred and friends are endeavouring to comfort the bereaved sisters, are depicted in the music.

"The Way to Jerusalem.—Although warned by a disciple that the chief priests and scribes, alarmed at the numbers who believed on Him, were resolved upon His destruction, Christ pronounces His intention of going up to Jerusalem, indicating His foreknowledge of the fate awaiting Him by saying that no prophet could perish out of Jerusalem. Men, women, and children all welcome Him as a King—the Son of David—and after prophesying and lamenting the fate of the city, our Lord enters amid the triumphant hosannas of the crowd.

"The scenes of the second part are laid entirely at Jerusalem. After the overture, which is intended to indicate the angry feelings and dissensions caused by our Lord's presence in the city, it opens with the discourse containing the parable of the sheep and the goats. The people hearing it wonder at its boldness, and express their belief that 'this is the Christ.' A ruler argues with them, and contemptuously asks if Christ shall come out of Galilee; the people are still unconvinced; and, Nicodemus striving to reason with, him, the ruler retorts angrily. The women, seeing that the end is at hand, come weeping and bewailing to Christ, who bids them not weep for Him, but to be of good cheer—'I have overcome the world' are His last words The chorus describes His sufferings and death, and the next scene opens at the sepulchre in the early morning. The grief of Mary Magdalene is soothed by the angel, who tells her that Christ is risen; and, reminding her how He had foretold His death and resurrection while He was yet in Galilee, comforts her with the words 'God shall wipe away all tears.' The disciples acknowledge that Christ has risen, and that God has caused the light to shine in their hearts, making all things new; and after an earnest exhortation from one of them to follow in their Master's steps and fight the good fight of faith, they glorify God for the triumphant close of their Lord and Master's earthly labours."

We reserve what we have to say in detail about the music—the magnum opus of its author—a credit both to himself and the great meeting for which it was expressly written. The execution to-day, under Mr. Sullivan's own direction, was, for a first essay with a long elaborate, and difficult composition, remarkable even for the Birmingham chorus singers and the splendid orchestra usually assembled at the triennial Festivals. Three pieces were encored; and between the first and second parts the President rose to offer some explanation why several more were not called for again. Lord Shrewsbury's observations were much to the point, and may, perhaps, lead to the ultimate abandonment of a system which, under all aspects, is a nuisance. The principal singers in The Light of the World were Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Briggs, and Santley. At the end, after another tribute paid to the Duke of Edinburgh, the composer was enthusiastically called for. The oratorio took nearly three hours and a half in performance.

---

COPENHAGEN.—The members of Herr Strakosch's Concert Company, including Mdlle. Carlotta Patti, Herr Theodor Ritter, and M. Brassin, were to appear at Tivoli on the 17th inst. Some astonishment has been expressed at this, as Tivoli is not a particularly fashionable locality, and a still greater amount of the same sentiment—astonishment, to wit—has been evoked by the small charge, ten shillings (Danish, not English), for admission. Local artists declare they would not sing at such a tarif. The little comedy summed up by Lafontaine in the lines—

"Ils sont trop verts, dit-il, et bons pour des goujats," and which Phædrus expresses thus—

"Discedans ait:
"Nondum matura est,"

is a little comedy very frequently still played on the stage of life.—The theatrical season re-commences on the 1st September. There is some talk of reviving Guillaume Tell.—The erection of the new Theatre is being rapidly pushed forward, but there is not much chance of the edifice being finished by the stipulated date—September, 1874.

Digitized by Google

M. RIVIÈRE'S PROMENADE CONCERTS.

M. Rivière has again come forward with an attractive entertainment for those among the music-loving public who are unable to leave London during the summer and autumn months. As what he produces is excellent in its kind and so judiciously varied as to suit all tastes, his undertaking is a real boon, and merits encouragement. That his exertions are appreciated is clear. Crowds flock, night after night, to Covent Garden Theatre, which, allowing for the requisite arrangements in the pit, the towering orchestra erected on the stage, after the well-remembered fashion of that greatest of all "public amusers," Jullien, the dress circle centre, and the promenades and refreshment department in the rear, presents much the same appearance as during the season of Italian Opera. We need not describe the decorations, which, though handsome, and, indeed, all that can be desired, are for the most part very similar to those on former occasions. The "fanciful interior of an Eastern Palace," the "Ferneries Fountains," the perfumes of Rimmel, and the recollections of the Shah in the form of chandeliers, &c., may be left to the imagination of our readers. A few words about the music and the musical performers, vocal and instrumental, are all that is necessary.

M. Rivière has engaged an orchestra of some 100 players, including the military band of the Royal Artillery; a chorus of some 50 singers, with Mr. Hamilton Clarke as pianoforte accompanist, Mr. Pittman as organist, and Mr. W. H. Eayres as "leader" and solo violin. All the "business arrangements" are confided to the acting manager, Mr. John Russell, than whom one more experienced and better fitted for the task could hardly be named.

The concerts already given have been eminently successful. On one night, "popular selections;" on another, "operatic selections;" on another, "classical selections" (first part); on another, "ballad selections"—after the model of Mr. John Boosey's "London Ballad Concerts;" on another, "sacred music;" and on another, a "miscellaneous and national selection," have brought together audiences of various kinds, always numerous and attentive, and each attracted by a programme devoted chiefly to a special sort of music. A detailed account of these divers and diverse entertainments will not be expected, and, in fact, would answer no purpose. That the concerts, notwithstanding the distinct characteristics of certain portions of them, are invariably more or less what it is the custom to style "miscellaneous," may be taken for granted. The first "classical" evening comprised, among other things, a selection from Mendelssohn. The programme included the overture to Ruy Blas; the Italian Symphony; the pianoforte concerto in G minor; "Hear ye Israel;" and the "Wedding March" from A Midsummer Night's Dream, in which the Royal Artillery band joined the regular orchestra. The conductor was Mr. J. Barnby, who, as a promoter of music that is good, whether sacred or secular, vocal or orchestral, has of late years worked so earnestly and successfully. M. Rivière, who directs those parts of the concerts which do not come under the category of "classical," could not have made a better choice. The Italian Symphony, now among the most universally admired and popular of Mendelssohn's compositions, was given with spirit and precision, and riveted attention from beginning to end. Madame Carreno Sauret, who displayed brilliant and vigorous execution in her delivery of the pianoforte part in the "Munich concerto" (so called by Mendelssohn himself), was carefully accompanied by the orchestra, and unanimously called back to the platform at the conclusion of her performance. To Mr. Melbourne, a baritone, who has promise, but as yet lacks experience, was allotted one of the "Autumn Songs;" while the great soprano air from Elijah was undertaken by Miss Blanche Cole, who acquitted herself to the unqualified satisfaction of connoisseurs. In the second (miscellaneous) part of this concert, M. Emile Sauret, accompanied on the pianoforte by Madame Carreno Sauret, played Wieniawski's "Airs Russes" on the violin, and was called upon to repeat the last movement. M. Sauret, our musical readers need hardly be informed, is a violinist of more than ordinary skill. Miss Blanche Cole sang "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls;" and a new singer, Mdlle. de Grandville, in a valse by A. Mey, though evidently very nervous, produced a favourable impression. The opening section of the first sacred concert was taken up with the excerpts from the Messiah, under the direction of Mr. W. Carter. In this the principal solos were assigned to Miss Blanche Cole (soprano), Mr. and Madame Patey (bass and contralto), and Mr. Vernon Rigby (tenor)—all proficients in the music of Handel.

A fair specimen of the "miscellaneous" concerts was that on Saturday evening, when Miss Rose Hersee made her first appearance in London since her successful tour in the United States. This gifted lady's return is welcome. We can ill spare so true an artist. Miss Hersee's share in Saturday's programme was limited to Sir Julius Benedict's elaborate variations on the "Carnaval de Venise" and the melodious air, "Scenes that are brightest," from Vincent Wallace's Maritana. The first she executed with unerring fluency, the last with simple and unaffected feeling. She was unanimously encored in both—substituting for the one, "Comin' thro' the Rye," and for the other the "Laughing Song" from Auber's Manon L'Escaut. A more flattering reception could not have been awarded to an established favourite—for such, though young, Miss Hersee has a just right to be denominated.

M. Rivière has not neglected those features which, time out of mind, have been looked for by a large number of the frequenters of "Promenade Concerts." He has produced a "grand fantasia" of his own concoction, built upon the most popular tunes and episodes in Babil and Bijou, in which the "Spring Song" is given by the same choir of boys who made so striking an effect when the piece of Messrs. Boucicault and Planché was first brought out. In this fantasia, orchestra, chorus and military band are all employed; and, though too much spun out, it is effective all the same. On Saturday night the concert—a "miscellaneous" concert in the strictest sense of the word—contained another fantasia ("serio-comic") called the "United Service," founded upon popular English airs, naval and military, the names of which it would be superfluous to enumerate. The return from Russia of Mr. Levy, the well-known performer on the cornet-à-piston was naturally taken advantage of by M. Rivière, and the unique performances of this gentleman have nightly invoked the loudest applause, with repeated recalls and encores. The pianoforte display on Saturday was a fantasia upon airs from Faust, composed and performed by Mdlle. Marie Secretain, a pianist of considerable facility and skill, who was also encored. Lastly, there were a polka-mazurka, by Bonnisseau, with flageolet obbligato played by M. St. Jacome, in his way a revival of Jullien's still remembered Collinet; a new waltz by M. Rivière, dedicated to Mdlle. Carlotta Patti, and entitled "Carlotta," containing an independent cornet part for Mr. Levy; and a solo on that peculiar instrument called the "Xylophone," given, with his accustomed cleverness and success, by Master Bonnay. Much more might be written about these concerts; but enough has been said to convey a tolerable notion of their pretensions. That Mr. H. Pearson, one of our rising young tenors, would please M. Rivière's patrons might have been taken for granted; and on the occasion under notice his singing of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's "Once Again," and Balfe's still popular "Come into the Garden, Maud," of which he was compelled to repeat the last verse, justified the impression his performances have elsewhere created.

The performances during the week have been, an "Ode March" for orchestra, military band, harps, and chorus, in memory of Prince Albert (Monday); a "Rossini night" (Tuesday); a "Beethoven night" (Wednesday); an "English ballad night" (Thursday); and Haydn's Creation (Friday).

---

MILAN.—A Signor Sigelli has been engaged to sing the part of Fernando, in La Favorita, at the Teatro dal Verme.

STETTIN.—Last March a decree was issued by the Police ordering that public dancing-places should be opened only one day in every week. The landlords of these localities were, however, allowed to choose their own day, which might be either Sunday or a week-day. The landlords appealed against the edict to the Government. The latter declines to stir in the matter, observing that the course pursued by the Police was based on good and sufficient grounds, the principal one being that "it had become more and more apparent that, as a general rule, the public dancing-places encouraged drunkenness and immorality in a very lamentable manner, and were often only a rendezvous for abandoned females and foolish young men." At a meeting of the landlords it was determined to carry the appeal to the Minister of the Interior.

Digitized by Google

THE WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD AT MOLD.

On Monday night all arrangements that could be made by the committee to ensure a successful meeting were completed, and every one was filled with expectations of a brilliant inauguration on the morrow, for the Premier was to deliver the opening speech of the Eisteddfod. Unfortunately much of the preparations was marred and pleasure destroyed by bad weather. Early on Tuesday morning the very heavens seemed to open, and rain fell in perfect torrents upon the town. The flags, so crisp and bright, in a moment were sodden and dull; the band of music struggled heavily with "The March of the Men of Harlech," but the well known strains were diluted by water getting into the bugles and horns, and by the soaking of the parchment of the drums' heads. The Bards in flowing robes were piteous to behold as they wended their way to the Gorsedd; the fire of inspiration was entirely put out. The tent, or pavilion, though large and well built, could be but leaky, for nothing short of Noah's Ark could be kept water tight in such a flood. When the storm had for a short time passed off, the town filled with steamy vapours as thick as the smoke of a bombardment. Everything steamed; clothes and their wearers; houses, outside and in; and town and country were wrapped in muggy exhalations. Welshmen, however, cared little for the discomforts of mud and wet; they bravely plodded through the driving, soaking rain, and they met with their reward by hearing a speech delivered by one of the greatest orators living, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone. There had been some doubts of his ability to fulfil the promise made to his neighbours; and surely, if multiplicity of occupations could justify disappointment, the Premier could claim such indulgence. The Eisteddfod committee previously had suffered by the inability of the Prince of Wales to attend their festival; and if they had also been deprived of the active patronage and aid of such a prince of men as the veteran statesman ever has proved, their loss would, indeed, have been great. The orator was received with prolonged and enthusiastic applause: the first sentence that fell from his lips rang through the pavilion with that fullness and clearness peculiar to his voice and utterance: the fervour of his glowing language kindled the ardour of his impassioned and sympathetic listeners, so that speaker and hearers were one in heart and feeling. The burthen of his address could not be but congenial to Welshmen. He spoke of their fidelity to their beloved native tongue, and the want of tact even in the clumsy endeavours of many English governments to eradicate this sentiment and destroy the Celtic language: no word was uttered likely to arouse the keen susceptibilities of Welshmen, or calculated to excite that jealousy often so manifest at Eisteddfod for the maintenance of their native tongue. The extent and grandeur of the English language, its nobility and extensive use and adoption amongst the peoples of the earth, were but gently and gracefully mentioned. The speech will be treasured up by the habitués of Eisteddfods for many generations, and wherever and whenever it be read by Welshmen its burning words and tender sentiments will find heartfelt response. Immediately after the right hon. gentleman had concluded his address, he left by special train for Balmoral, and then the glory of the morning meeting had gone. Mr. Scott Banks subsequently took the chair, and humbly hinted at the unenviable position he occupied in taking the reins from the hands of such a skilled charioteer of thought and speech. Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., also took up the burden, and spoke with his usual force and ability; but one speech and one speaker filled the minds of the audience, and, after the announced trials of skill and the distribution of prizes, the meeting dissolved. The evening concert commenced at the early hour of six o'clock, when a varied and interesting programme was presented to a very large and delighted audience. The Mold Choir, some three hundred strong, showed that they not only possessed good voices but also that power and vigour of expression which has of late made the Welsh choirs remarkable. They were ably conducted by Mr. Allen Jones, a local artist with a good command over his singers and a just appreciation of the compositions they rendered. They gave selections of Welsh music composed and arranged by Mr. Brinley Richards and Mr. John Thomas; they were encored in "The March of the Men of Harlech," the national song of Wales; they sang with a verve that seemed to animate both performers and auditors. Attention also was paid to their dress and appearance which gave a charm of colour to the orchestra. Great strides have been made during the last few years in the choral singing at the Eisteddfods. Perhaps their répertoire is still too limited; they keep by far too much to their own time and pieces. In this respect they have much to learn before they become so efficient as English choirs; but they have all the means and ardour to render them in every way equal to their neighbours, who have had greater opportunities of cultivating their knowledge of the great masters. Handel has made the English proficient in the highest class of choral music, and this wide field of art is still, to a very great extent, unexplored by the Welsh. Artists both of local and national distinction sang and played at the concert. Miss Edith Wynne felt she was on her native heath, and that her name was Eos Cymri. She sang with even more abandon than usual. She is a great favourite, an idol even, with the people of her own country. Mrs. Megan Watts also is received at all times by them with especial favour; and Miss Mary Davis, a pupil of Mr. Brinley Richards, indicates that she has that peculiar gift of song so cherished by the Welsh. Eos Morlais, a native, with a robust and penetrating voice, is worthily conspicuous in their esteem as a manly and vigorous songster. Mr. Allen Jones, the conductor of the choir, has a sweet voice, and sings with just expression. Mr. W. H. Cummings added to the entertainment that charm which culture alone can give. His efforts were not lost upon the audience in spite of his being Sassenach. Mr. Hughes trolled out a Welsh song with gusto and just accent. Mr. Lewis Thomas sang "Largo al Factotum" as glibly as could be expected from the throat of one who owned such a Cambrian cognomen. The pianists were Miss Waugh, Mr. Skeaf, Mr. Harris, and Mr. Brinley Richards. The latter gentleman is the ruling Pencerdd of the Festival. Mynddog must also be mentioned for his quaintness, which has with it no smack of vulgarity; he conducted, also, the morning meeting with geniality and consummate tact.

—o—

MR. SIMS REEVES AND THE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(To the Editor of the "Daily Post.")

Sir,—Nothing but my extreme desire to oblige the public induces me on this occasion to accept "the high authority" referred to. You speak of a universal pitch, and overlook the plain fact that the Metropolis has taken the lead in the reform desired by so many artists as well as by myself. The orchestra of Covent Garden has adopted the normal pitch of the Continent. I did not then ask you to lead, but to follow in this matter; nor can I adopt the rather low view you appear disposed to take with regard to the small right to influence Art in this matter of the Birmingham Musical Festival. One cannot help asking why should any unknown "Authority" exercise so vast an influence?

I do venture to think that the appearance or non-appearance of an old friend and favourite is of some consequence to the Birmingham public, for which I entertain the highest esteem, and therefore, and therefore only, I am prepared to yield on this occasion. I must distinctly state, however, that the organ has been tuned to the pitch of the only orchestra in the world that has so high a pitch, that of the Drury Lane Italian opera, and I cannot see why the voices of all singers should be sacrificed to the exigences of one particular band.—I have the honour to be, your faithful servant, J. Sims Reeves.

Grange Mount, Beulah Spa, Upper Norwood, August 22, 1873.

[Every one will rejoice to learn that Mr. Sims Reeves does not intend to let so small a matter as the tuning of the Town Hall organ to its ordinary or normal pitch stand between him and his Birmingham friends. His desire to lower the diapason in general use in this country to a standard less exacting to the human voice is a very natural and legitimate one, and we wish his endeavours every success; but until he has succeeded in converting the great body of English instrumentalists to his views, it is surely a little unreasonable to fall foul of the Birmingham Town Hall organist—the only "high authority" concerned in the matter—for desiring to have his instrument in tune with the rest of the orchestra. For our own part, we should be very glad to see the musical pitch of this country reduced to the so called "normal diapason" of Paris, Brussels, Berlin, and Vienna; but even if Birmingham were the proper place in which to initiate the reform, the eve of our Musical Festival would hardly be the proper time.—Ed. D. P.]

Ravenna.—The Municipality have decided on calling a street the Via Mariani, in memory of the lamented conductor of that name.

Digitized by Google

THE SCHUMANN FESTIVAL AT BONN.

The following letter concerning this Festival has been addressed to a contemporary:—

"It may not be without interest to some of the music-loving world to hear from a casual visitor at Bonn something about the grand festival which has been held there in the early part of this week.

"Three years ago a large music-hall—the Beethoven Halle—was built here, in which a great festival was afterwards held to commemorate that illustrious composer, who was born in the town. The year, 1873, has witnessed another festival in Bonn, in memory, in this instance, of Robert Schumann, who was buried here in 1856. The excitement and enthusiasm which the townspeople have displayed over this Schumann-Fest give a strong proof of the admiration now felt in Germany for that composer's works. Had Bonn been honoured by a visit from the Emperor of Germany and a dozen Persian Shahs into the bargain, she could scarcely have decked herself out more gaily than she did on the occasion of the Schumann-Fest. Not only were the market-place and principal streets decorated with long flags hung from every house, but the narrow out-of-the-way little street-alleys were also lined with them on both sides; and one heard little else than the praises of Schumann's music talked of from morning till night.

"The Beethoven Halle is a plain, well-proportioned oblong room, with a gallery along the two sides and at one end of it. It has rather a low, flat roof, but seems peculiarly well adapted for sound, and solos as well as choruses can be heard almost to perfection in any part of it.

"With regard to the performers, a glance at the programme will show that nothing was amiss in the choice of leading supporters. Names so familiar to us as Straus, Schumann, Joachim, and Stockhausen speak for themselves. The orchestra was composed apparently of select musicians from all parts of Germany, and the effects it produced did full justice to the compositions. The first symphony (No. IV, D minor), conducted by Joachim, with which the day's performance opened, was given with a power and feeling altogether astonishing, and its impressiveness was the more felt owing to the death-like silence observed by the audience between the pauses. It is, indeed, noticeable how offensive to a German audience is the least disturbance during any performance worth listening to. Thus, after a song has been sung, the slightest attempt to applaud until the last note of the accompaniment has died away is reproved with angry frowns, and is at once suppressed with sharp hisses. None the less enthusiasm is exhibited notwithstanding this. When Mdme. Schumann made her appearance the whole audience rose and waved their handkerchiefs, and she took her seat at the piano amid loud roars of applause, a blowing of trumpets, and a perfect storm of bouquets. Mdme. Joachim and Stockhausen had also in their turn to put up with a deal of tumult and a pelting of bouquets.

"The choral performances consisted principally of Schumann's Paradies und die Peri and his 'Scenen aus Göthe's Faust.'

"The last day was devoted entirely to drawing-room music '(Kammer-Musik),' in which a streichquartet (No. 3 A Dur), an andante with variations for two pianos, a piano quintet, and the 'Löwenbraut' (sung by Stockhausen), appear to have been specially admired.

"Altogether, the first great Schumann-Fest has been a grand success, thoroughly appreciated; nor is the impression it has made likely to be soon forgotten in the German music-world."

Rimes for Music.

It seems that "our rated and very much roast man"
Is not (as was stated) turned into a Postman:
Judge-Advocate-General, he hoists his black flag—
And that wicked Bob Lowe has baptised him "The JAG."

Punch.

BARCELONA.—Herr R. Wagner has not only consented, as already stated in the Musical World, to accept the presidentship of the Sociedad Wagner established here, but has promised to write a work to inaugurate the said Sociedad.

A VISIT TO BEETHOVEN.—Having to return some visits, Moscheles began with Beethoven, accompanied by his brother, who was burning with anxiety to see the great man. "Arrived at the house door," says Moscheles, "I had some misgivings, knowing Beethoven's dislike to strangers, and asked my brother to wait below while I felt my way. After short greetings, I asked Beethoven, 'May I be allowed to introduce my brother to you?' He replied hurriedly, 'Where is he, then?' 'Below,' was the answer. 'What! below!' said he, with some vehemence; then rushing downstairs, seized my astonished brother by his arm, and dragged him up into the middle of his room, exclaiming, 'Am I so barbarously rude and unapproachable?' He then showed great kindness to the stranger. Unfortunately, on account of his deafness, we could only converse by writing."—The Life of Moscheles.

AN IDEALISTIC FLIGHT.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—To dreamland: with "Wagner on the brain." Sweet world, good night! Sleeping, yet waking; the coinage of a distempered imagination receives impressions of Lohengrin. The luscious fairy tale demands not to be re-told; all will remember it. How the half-demented maiden sees in fitful visions the valiant Knight, who, at the moment opportune, supernaturally arrives and asserts her innocence of the false charge of having caused the death of her brother. How Frederic, goaded by his wife Ortrud, although defeated in judicial combat, again strikes at the successful knight. How his companion in "arms," the Sorceress, ensnares the weak bride to ask of her husband those particulars respecting his name and rank, the disclosure of which sends him back to keep the "holy grail." How the good King, the faithful Herald, the attendant Nobodies on the defeated accuser, and the attendant Nobodies on the rescued maiden, come and go in exact accord with dramatic propriety. How the mystic Godfrey comes only to inherit a problematical appearance. These are all well known. And so, from imaginary personages, evolved the real facts. The King is Eternity; the Herald, Time; the false accuser, Frederic, is Fashion; Ortrud, the wire-puller, Gold; Elsa is Melody; and Godfrey, her brother, Science; Lohengrin, the Æsthetic principle. So Fashion, public opinion (Grex-demos, he might be christened), at the instance of Gold (auri sacra fames), accuses Melody of having drowned, or smothered in the flood, Godfrey, Musical Science (thorough bass). True, Science is non est, but not altogether through the fault of Melody; Grex-demos has, at the instance of Mammon, frowned him out-of-town. Thorough-bass is unfashionable. The King, Eternal Rectitude, presides over the chaotic elements, notifying, through his Herald, Practical Justice, his indisputable will. His majesty first arrives, "to put an end to all such abhorr'd disorder." Public Opinion is addressed by him as "virtue's self." This functionary replies:—

"King Henry, measure all my grief,
When I of that fair jewel was despoiled."

Science being dead, he, Public Opinion "claims the land." He then adds to his former accusation against Melody that

"—— she whom I rightly cast aside
Is given to folly and to vanity."

And, further, of protecting "a secret minion."

The secret minion, of course, is Æsthetica. She speaks of herself as "lonely amid her sorrow," and of Science as her "hapless brother." Alas! it is too true. Science lay hidden away. Melody reigns alone. She is accused of killing Science—Science, which has become lethargic of Sorcery (i.e., laziness). Transformed Science, nevertheless, brings the "Knight of good intent," Æsthetic art, from beyond the ocean dark and void. Science is his Swan transformed into the semblance of poesy. The Knight would lead his followers to victory, but the base followers of the humiliated Public Opinion seek his life. The Gold power will have it so. Æsthetica, after a wild remonstrance, prepares to depart. This is no world for such as she. The Gold-power releases Science who brought the ideal hither, and he is taken home by a heavenly dove. Eternal Fitness and Diurnal Justice assent. Only in the absence of Science could he thus be treated. Shall it be so ever? Shall ever the Gold-power goad the Grex-demos to instigate the heaven-born Melody to scare away true art by dainty pandering? "This sword, this horn, this ring," form but a poor compensation to Science for the loss of thine own self, thou Knight of good intent, Lohengrin! Reminiscences of the opening chords dispelled this dream, suggested, doubtless, either by the book of words of this opera of the future, or by something which had been taken for supper occasioning indigestion and nightmare. Yours very truly,

IDEALIZER.

Rimes for Music.

All the G and A keys
Are between the black threes,
And 'tween the twos are all the D's.
Then on the right side of the threes
Will be found the B's and C's;
But on the left side of the threes
Are all the F's and all the E's.

To Shirley Brooks, Esq.

LYONS.—Signor Guiseppe Luigini has been appointed conductor at the Grand Théâtre of this town.

SAINT FRANCISCO.—According to all accounts, Herr Wieniawski has discovered a youthful musical phenomenon here in the person of a jeweller's son named Lichtenbeg. The boy is said to possess a marvellous musical memory and to play without notes the most difficult pieces correctly and with a certain amount of style. Herr Wieniawski purposes sending the prodigy to the Conservatory, Vienna.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

MULBERRY THOMAS.—The getting up of Herr R. Wagner's Rheingold at Munich, in 1869, cost the treasury of the Operahouse, or the composer's regal friend, Ludwig, 60,000 thalers, and nearly cost Herr von Perfall, the Intendant General of Theatres in Bavaria, his life, as he was almost worried to death by the cabals and intrigues of the Wagnerites.

IONICA MINORE.—It is more than ten years ago since Mr. Dion Boucicault proposed to erect a new theatre far superior to any theatre then existing, and offered himself to head the share-list with the very respectable sum of five thousand pounds. As yet, it is almost superfluous to add, the proposal has never been carried out. Whether it ever will be, is more than we can say.

OPOSSUM.—We cannot give you the required information in answer to your first question. To the second: Sixteen thousand pounds, including the contributions of the Earl of Dudley, and of the Dean and Chapter.

BRUSHDOWN.—Alfred de Musset's verses, "Le Rhin allemand," which created such a stir at the time, first appeared in a periodical with a very limited circulation. M. Buloz, who farmed the poet, was afraid of offending German susceptibilities, and losing subscribers, for which reason he would not publish them in the Revue des deux Mondes, which was his (Buloz's) property.

TRY BACH.—Your signature is a bad attempt at a stupid pun, which, to comfort you, we may state is not only stupid—and which, if you knew anything of German pronunciation, you would never have made—but as old as the hills. As regards the "Clavicembalo con Pedale," the great composer, whose name you do not know how to pronounce, did possess such an instrument. He composed on it various pieces, and among others his "Passacaille in C minor."

BIRTH.

On August 22nd, at Carlton Villa, Scarborough, the wife of R. SLOMAN, Mus. Doc., Oxon, of a daughter.

DEATHS.

On August 20th, Mr. JOSEPH JOHN ROBERTS, of Seymour Street, aged 69. Esteemed and respected by all who knew him.

On August 22nd, the Rev. WILLIAM MERCER, M.A., aged 62, compiler of Mercer's Church Psalter and Hymn Book.

On August 21st, EDWARD HALLIDAY, aged three months, grandson of Mr. EDWARD HALLIDAY, 23, Bishopsgate Street Within.

On June 27th, at Brompton, Mrs. FRANK MATTHEWS, late of the principal London theatres, aged 66.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 30, 1873.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Birmingham, August 25th, 1873.

THE rapidly revolving wheel of time has once more brought round the Birmingham Musical Festival, and again I find myself in this spirited and always advancing town which has contrived to earn for itself a double fame, its business and artistic reputation standing equally high in the world's estimation, and showing that a capacity for trade and manufactures may go hand in hand with a decided taste for the fine arts. That a place which is associated with the production of steel pens, buttons, fire-arms, jewellery—the real article as well as "Brummagem"—electro-plate, tea-trays and hardware generally, should also be able to give once in three years a series of musical performances equal, if not superior, to anything else of the kind in Europe, and marked by the additional feature, that at every Festival two or three novelties of magnitude and importance are always introduced, says something for the enterprise of Birmingham and its inhabitants. But not only do those who are more immediately connected with the matter in hand display an active interest, the town altogether seems to take a pride and a pleasure in its triennial gathering, and the remarkable freshness of appearance in the main streets is evidently the result of great unity of purpose as well as the application of much paint, and a general brightness of effect not to be expected in so smoky an atmosphere is the conspicuous result. The interior of the Town Hall, which has been for several weeks under the workmen's hands, bringing out the glory of its gilding and decoration, and displaying its noble proportions to the best effect, and, whether externally or internally, fairly challenging comparison with any similar structure in this country. Those who have not visited the town for the past three years will also find other important changes in its aspect, notably a handsome well-proportioned building immediately opposite the Town Hall, which, when finished, will be devoted to the service of the Post Office; while in New Street, a score or so of mean looking houses have been swept away to make room for a fine block of edifices, to be occupied, when completed, partly as shops and partly as an hotel. But still more remarkable are the alterations in Colmore Row and Ann Street, main approaches to the Town Hall, where old houses have been cleared off by wholesale, and already begun to be replaced by buildings of noble proportions, all of stone and in the Italian style of architecture. The great space recently cleared in close proximity to the Town Hall is the site of the new Law Courts; and it is to be hoped that in this respect Birmingham may be more fortunate than the Metropolis, and not be condemned for a series of years to witness nothing but a hoarding, which, however pleasant in the eyes of bill-stickers, can hardly be considered a "thing of beauty," much less "a joy for ever." Without pretending to the gift of prophecy, I think I may safely venture an opinion that law and justice will have been administered in the new Birmingham buildings long before the dreary waste between St. Clement's Danes Church and Chancery Lane has ceased to do duty as a means of proclaiming to mankind the virtues of "Nabob Sauce" and "The world wide hair restorer"—that is, if "Reports," "Committees," and "red-tape," move no faster than they have done in London the last five or six years.

Having thus glanced at the features that have first struck my observation here, let me turn to the more serious object of my mission, and note what the thirty-first musical gathering is to bring forth. If rumour is to be credited, and the application for tickets be a criterion, the Festival of 1873 is certain of success in a pecuniary point of view, and if the performance of the new works carry out the promise of the rehearsals—and there is no reason whatever to doubt that such will be the case—the artistic will be as great as the monetary triumph; for Birmingham wisely maintains that there is a double duty to be performed, and that a musical reputation so justly earned should be jealously upheld, the mere fact of obtaining so many thousands of pounds for the benefit of the General Hospital being not the sole aim and object of these Festivals. From the year 1768, when the first meeting was held, and realised the sum of £299, the amounts obtained for the excellent charity have steadily progressed, the last three Festivals showing respectively a net profit, in 1864, of £5,256, in 1867, £5,541, and 1870, no less than £6,195, the aggregate since the foundation of the Festivals being the remarkably handsome sum of £100,000 paid over to the Hospital.

Taken altogether, the programme of the present year is, to say the least of it, in all respects quite equal to any of its predecessors, combining as it does certain standard works, without which no Festival could be complete, and a proportion of entirely new productions, speaking alike well for the enterprise and judgment of the administrative ranks of the Committee. Nothing could possibly be more fitting to inaugurate the week's doings than Elijah, which, since the time it was produced under the direction of the illustrious composer himself, in the year 1846, has but once (in 1864) been absent from the scheme of a Birmingham Festival. That the Messiah should also be included is equally a matter of course, and that the popularity of Handel's most frequently performed and best known oratorio is not expected to decrease upon this occasion may be inferred from the special notice again issued to the effect, that in the event of the application for guinea tickets being sufficient to justify such a step, the Committee will take to themselves the right of appropriating the whole of the seats in the hall at that price instead of issuing any unreserved seats at half-a-guinea. On the Tuesday evening, the first novelty of the Festival, The Lord of Burleigh, music by Signor Schira, words by Desmond

Digitized by Google

Ryan, will be produced, and a posthumous Chorus of Rossini's "The Song of the Titans" will also be heard for the first time. On Wednesday Mr. Arthur S. Sullivan will make the most important and ambitious essay he has yet attemped, his oratorio, The Light of the World, the words arranged from Scripture by Mr. George Grove, being given for the first time. Birmingham having been the first of the Festival towns to recognise Mr. Sullivan's ability by the production of his cantata, Kenilworth, in 1864, much interest is naturally attached to a work which has already, so far as rehearsals are any guide, created a highly favourable impression. Particularly noticeable features of the Wednesday evening's concert are Beethoven's Symphony in C minor (the first time for many years that a symphony has been given here), a so-called National Hymn of Rossini, for the first time in England, and G. A. Macfarren's overture, St. John the Baptist, which hardly seems in place in a secular concert. Thursday morning, as of prescriptive right, is given up to the Messiah, and in the evening the third important novelty, in the shape of Signor Randegger's cantata, Fridolin, words by Mdme. Rudersdorff, will be produced. It may be well to remind younger musical readers that a cantata bearing the same title was written by Frank Mori (whose death was so recently recorded), and produced at the Worcester Festival of 1848. The Friday morning's scheme is miscellaneous, comprising Spohr's "God thou art great," an "Ave Maria" of Rossini, first time of performance; Haydn's Mass, No. 3, familiarly known as "The Imperial;" a "Double Chorus" of Rossini, first time of performance; and a selection from Israel in Egypt; Friday evening bringing the Festival to a close with Handel's Judas Maccabæus. Conspicuous by its absence is anything in the shape of an instrumental solo at either of the evening concerts, while the popular taste has been sufficiently consulted by the selection of more or less well-worn stock pieces for the principal vocalists, a list which includes Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. Lemmens-Sherrington, and Mdlle. Albani, sopranos; Mesdames Patey and Trebelli-Bettini, contraltos; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Vernon Rigby, and Cummings, tenors; Messrs. Santley and Foli, basses; Mr. Stimpson being at his accustomed post as organist, and Sir Michael Costa (to whom the present artistic excellence of the Festivals is so much indebted) in absolute command of the forces as conductor. The band numbering 139 performers, with M. Sainton as chef d'attaque, includes most of the best instrumentalists in England (or, indeed, in Europe for that matter); but I mark with some surprise that the important place of first violoncello is occupied by a foreigner to the exclusion of Mr. Edward Howell, who so honourably distinguished himself at the last Festival, and whose playing in the opening movement to the overture to Guillaume Tell will not be readily forgotten by those who were present on that occasion. The chorus includes 96 sopranos, 46 contraltos, 47 altos, 89 tenors, and 88 basses, the total strength being 366, and making, with the instrumentalists, a body of more than 500, quite sufficient to produce all the effect necessary for the music and yet not too many to be kept under the thorough control of the ever vigilant eye and ear of their watchful and energetic chief.

The Royal patronage, headed by Her Majesty the Queen, is this time to be something more than a name, the Duke of Edinburgh having signified his intention of attending two of the performances, namely, Mendelssohn's Elijah and Arthur Sullivan's Light of the World, a selection which does credit to His Royal Highness's musical taste, and pays a compliment to our clever young English composer, under whose bâton the Duke did service in the rank of violinist at some of the Albert Hall concerts. The president (who, it is to be hoped, will set his face against encores) is the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot, and there is a lengthy list of vice-presidents, including a large proportion of the most distinguished nobility and gentry of the midland counties, who not only contribute their presence and their guineas to the good cause, but fill their houses with guests for the sole purpose of attending the Festival.

From half-past nine this morning till half-past three in the afternoon rehearsals have been the order of the day, and as another four hours may be expected in the evening, there would hardly appear to have been much opportunity for those concerned to indulge in any of that mischief that a certain evil power is said to be in the habit of finding for "idle hands to do."

All the principals were at their post, and the works gone through have been Haydn's "Imperial Mass," Rossini's "Ave Maria," "Song of the Titans," and "National Hymn," Spohr's "God, Thou are great," and Arthur Sullivan's Light of the World. As the choruses have been in rehearsal here for some months past, under the direction of Messrs. Stockley and Sutton, and the band having had three days' rehearsal in London, everything, with some one or two trifling exceptions, went well. The public is not supposed to be admitted to rehearsals, but there was a fair sprinkling by way of audience, and amongst other notabilities I observed Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Martin, the latter of whom will perhaps be more widely recognised under her maiden name of Helen Faucit.

Apropos of the absence of an instrumental soloist, the Birmingham Daily Post has the following remarks:—

"In the instrumental department we miss one name—that of Mdme. Arabella Goddard, who, for four festivals past, since her first appearance at the Festival of 1861, has been a constant and conspicuous ornament of these gatherings; but we are glad to believe that this secession is only temporary, and that on her return from Australia, whither she has gone in quest of new laurels, the fair queen of the keyboard will again shed the lustre of her name and talents upon the Birmingham Festival."

---

August 26.

My anticipations as to last evening's rehearsal were more than realized, for although Signor Schira (who, like Mr. Arthur Sullivan, conducted his own work) gave the first wave of his bâton rather before seven o'clock, it was well nigh half-past eleven ere the orchestra was cleared after Signor Randegger had concluded his cantata, the two new productions having occupied the whole of the time, a long-continued storm of thunder and lightning keeping up a running and occasionally appropriate accompaniment to the strains of music which resounded through the hall.

To-day the Festival has begun in earnest with literally the finest performance of that masterpiece of oratorios, Mendelssohn's Elijah, ever heard. That this might be reasonably expected was but a matter of course, for if there is any one work more than another upon which Birmingham should expend its utmost energies, it is most certainly that which is the most intimately associated with the town, and which, indeed, may be said to have laid the foundation of the musical celebrity that the hardware capital enjoys. Under ordinary circumstances the demand for tickets for Elijah falls but little short of the applications for the Messiah, and to-day was not likely to prove an exception to the rule, for there was (to some of the audience, at least) the additional attraction of the presence of the Duke of Edinburgh, who, as the guest of the Earl of Shrewsbury, president of the Festival, attended the performance this morning, and who is also expected at the evening concert, as well as to-morrow morning for Mr. Sullivan's oratorio, as already mentioned. Although the Duke pays his visit merely as a private individual, it was not probable that the occasion would be allowed to pass without recognition, and from a very early hour this morning the hammer has been busily plied in all directions, barricades being erected to keep off the pressure of the crowd, and allow the distinguished visitor, as far as practicable, free access to the Town Hall, while flags and banners are liberally exhibited from every possible "coign of vantage." Birmingham has long had a character for its extremely advanced, not to say ultra-radical, political opinions, and one of its three members voted recently against the grant to the very guest in whose honour all this display is now made; but if one may judge from the cordial reception accorded to the Duke of Edinburgh by all classes, from the highest to the lowest, true and hearty loyalty may be safely reckoned amongst the qualifications possessed by the inhabitants of this borough. As I write there is a large crowd assembled under the windows of the Queen's Hotel, where the Duke (as well as your correspondent) is staying, and shouts and cheers frequently rend the air (to say nothing of distracting one's attention), the object of such demonstrations being to endeavour to bring the Duke forward to acknowledge these loyal demonstrations.

With his chronometer-like punctuality, Sir Michael Costa was at his post, and half-past eleven had no sooner past than the uplifted bâton and roll of drums announced the National Anthem—the first verse sung by the sopranos, the second by the altos, the third by the united force—Sir Michael's own arrangement (always done at these Festivals), and a great improvement on the former system, when the solos by the principals generally resulted in more or less of a "fiasco."

Digitized by Google

In accordance with the custom which has now long since prevailed, and which, it is to be hoped, may always continue to be maintained, the part of the Prophet was allotted to one vocalist throughout; and when Mr. Santley is named as the singer it will be readily understood that the music was given with as near an approach to perfection as may well be attained. In the first part Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Madame Trebelli-Bettini were the soprano and contralto respectively, and Mr. Vernon Rigby sustained the tenor part; while, in the second, Mdlle. Tietjens and Madame Patey divided the soprano and contralto honours, and to Mr. Sims Reeves fell the tenor music. How these principal artists availed themselves of their opportunities may be well imagined; indeed, one and all seemed to be on their mettle, and, nature fortunately seconding their efforts, everyone being in excellent voice, the result was one of unmixed satisfaction. To specify the particular numbers which produced the greatest effect is needless, Elijah being so well known to all who care to take interest in musical matters; but it may be enough to say that in her two great scenes, the widow and the youth, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington fully sustained her well-earned reputation; Madame Trebelli-Bettini distinguishing herself favourably in the air, "Woe unto them who forsake Him;" and Mr. Vernon Rigby giving due expression to "If with all your hearts." Mdlle. Tietjens, who has returned from her holiday at Aix-les-Bains rejuvenescent, sang superbly "Hear ye Israel" and the leading part in the Sanctus, telling with their wonted force; Madame Patey moving all hearers by her artistic singing of "Oh rest in the Lord," and with the previously named lady and Madame Trebelli, rendering it a question whether angels themselves could have done more with the trio ascribed to them, "Lift thine eyes." Mr. Sims Reeves (whose second letter on the pitch of the organ, which is indeed full high, will be found in another column) again asserted his unshaken position as first of living tenors in "Then shall the righteous shine forth," thrilling all hearers with a delight none the less genuine for being perforce prevented from finding audible expression. In the double quartet, "For He shall give his angels charge over thee," Mrs. Sutton and Messrs. J. A. Smith, W. T. Briggs and Smythson, did excellent service with the principal artists already named, and, as a consequence, it went wonderfully well, Mrs. Sutton also sustaining a part in the "Holy, holy" quartet. Of the band and chorus it is impossible to speak too highly; and, when I say that the five hundred went as one, what must be the measure of praise to the emperor of conductors, Sir Michael Costa, to whose unquestionable genius and indomitable will this performance of unsurpassable magnificence was due.

As the English are accredited (not unjustly, I am afraid) with being slaves to fashion, and much given to aping the manners and customs of those who are supposed to occupy the superior stations in society, it would be well to commend to those who are thus imitatively inclined the example set to-day by the Duke of Edinburgh, who, although he had to travel a considerable distance before he could reach Birmingham, was, nevertheless, in his place some five minutes before the performance began, and remained seated till the last note of the last chorus had been given.

Despite the heavy showers which have falsified the bright predictions of the earlier part of the day, beginning just as the audience were leaving the hall, and coming down with more or less persistence ever since, the many-headed continue to pervade the front of the hotel, gazing entrancedly at the windows, and cheering at intervals, with an evident fixed determination of being jolly under the circumstances.

---

August 27th.

The first important novelty of the Festival was introduced last night, in the shape of Signor Schira's cantata, entitled The Lord of Burleigh, conducted by the composer in person. The libretto, skilfully prepared by Mr. Desmond L. Ryan, embodies the tolerably well-known story of how a certain Lord of Burleigh determined that his bride should be one who would take him for himself alone; and, to carry out this design, in the guise of an artist wooes and wins a charming village maid, who, in passing unrestrained through the gates of the noble mansion with her husband, is surprised to find that he is not only lord and master of herself, but is also recognized as holding a similar position with regard to the broad domains which form so pretty an excursion from the town of Stamford. Her good fortune, however, appears to be too heavy a burden for her, and instead of emulating the example of many other heroes and heroines, and living "happy ever after," as was wont to be the ending of the "goody goody" stories we read in our juvenile days, the unfortunate lady dies, to the irrepressible grief of her husband and all concerned. Marian, the lady so unexpectedly ennobled, was the character assigned to Mdlle. Tietjens; Constance, a friend, to Madame Trebelli-Bettini; Cecil, the lover and Lord of Burleigh, to Mr. Vernon Rigby; while the quartet of singers was made up by Mr. Santley as Trueman, the steward, in search of his missing lord; chorus of priests, reapers, villagers, retainers and angels completing the ensemble of the work. Signor Schira's lengthened musical experience, and intimate knowledge of its resources, have enabled him to make good use of so exceptionally fine an opportunity as that afforded by a Birmingham Festival, and the Lord of Burleigh being received with favour alike by the public and the executants, the composer of Mina, The Orphan of Geneva (produced at the Princess's Theatre more years ago than I care to remember), Niccolo di Lapi, Leah, and other works denoting the hand of a practised musician, may with cause congratulate himself on the result of this his latest labour. The Cantata, divided into 13 numbers, opens with an instrumental overture of imposing dimensions, and includes a pastoral processional march, and prelude to the finale, both instrumental. With another new work to be noticed before my labours of the day are ended, it is impossible at this moment to enter into details, much less to give an elaborate analysis of Signor Schira's Cantata, it must therefore suffice to say that, as a whole, it is eminently dramatic and tuneful, some of the numbers being remarkably effective; and, although at times rather overweighted by the orchestration, throughout displays originality of thought as well as of treatment. An unaccompanied trio "O'er seas of life, come storm, come calm," and a quartet (also unaccompanied), "How changed my state," were both encored; and at the close of the work the hearty applause which broke forth both from audience and performers, and the subsequent recall, plainly expressed the opinion formed of The Lord of Burleigh.

The second part of the concert was, as usual, miscellaneous, as will be seen by the subjoined:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "Leonora" ... ... ... ... ... | Beethoven. |
| Air, "Caro mio ben"—Madame Patey ... ... | Giordani. |
| Air, "Alfin son tua" (Lucia)—Mdlle. Albani (flute obbligato, Mr. Radcliffe) ... ... ... ... | Donizetti. |
| Duo, "Du repos voici l'heure" (Philemon et Baucis) —Madame Sherrington and Mr. Cummings ... | Gounod. |
| Air, "Soft airs" (Euryanthe)—Mr. Sims Reeves ... | Weber. |
| Air, "Oh! vago suol" (Huguenots)—Madame Sherrington ... ... ... ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Chorus, "The Song of the Titans" ... ... ... | Rossini. |
| Ballad, "The Last Rose of Summer"—Mdlle. Albani | |
| Air, "The Raft"—Signor Foli ... ... ... | Pinsuti. |
| Quartet, "Cielo il mio labbro" (Bianca e Falliero)—Mdme. L. Sherrington, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Foli ... ... ... ... ... | Rossini. |
| Overture "Anacreon" ... ... ... ... | Cherubini. |

With such a magnificent body of instrumentalists, under the guidance of so accomplished a chief as Sir Michael Costa, it would have been indeed surprising if the Leonora, third, and, to my mind, the greatest of the preludes which Beethoven composed for his only opera, did not go well, but upon this occasion a greatly stronger qualification is needed, and it is not too much to say that the execution, from first note to last, was simply superb, the terrific rush of the violins in the last movement producing an electric effect upon all hearers. The very Handelian air, "Caro mio ben," of Giordani—reminding one both of "Lift up your heads" (taken much slower) and "Angels, ever bright and fair"—was admirably sung by Madame Patey, whose voice it suits to perfection. Then expectation was on tiptoe—an uncomfortable position, but not more uncomfortable than are the seats of the Town Hall—for the entrance of Mdlle. Albani, who was to make her first appearance before a Birmingham public with the familiar scena of the hapless maiden in Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor. The fair young Canadian may say with truth that she came, she sang, and she conquered, despite a rather awkward hitch caused by the conductor's copy not having a "cut" marked as it was with the band copies. "The Last Rose of Summer," later on, completed the triumph, and the enthusiastic encore which followed indicated clearly enough that Mdlle. Albani has now taken her place as an established favourite here. How Mr. Sims Reeves sang "Soft airs," from Euryanthe, need not be told; and the rest of the programme calls for little remark beyond observing that the "Song of the Titans," a chorus of bass voices in unison, a posthumous work of Rossini's, and in every way worthy of that illustrious master, although admirably sung, did not produce much impression on the audience. The concert began at eight, and did not terminate till half-past eleven, the Duke of Edinburgh being present from commencement to close; and, late as it was, when His Royal Highness returned to the hotel, there was even then a considerable crowd assembled to give him a loyal cheer by way of good night.

Digitized by Google

To-day the Duke has again attended the Hall and listened with evident enjoyment to the new oratorio, which I may at once say is in all respects a success, and in every way worthy the justly-earned reputation of the composer.

Whether Mr. Sullivan has been altogether well advised in choosing his subject may possibly be open to question, The Light of the World and the Messiah being convertible terms; and, as in many instances the words which Handel has married to immortal music are identical with those selected by our talented young countryman, comparisons will force themselves on the mind, however unwilling one may be to set the ancient against the modern composer. Mr. Sullivan, or rather the compiler of his book, would seem to indicate a desire that the work in question should be considered in a different point of view either from Handel's Messiah or Bach's Passions-musik, as it professes to set forth the human rather than the spiritual aspect of the life of our Lord, "exemplifying it by some of the actual incidents in His career which bear specially upon his attributes of 'preacher,' 'healer,' and 'prophet.'" Whether such mode of treatment is altogether practicable may be fairly open to argument; indeed it might be urged with some truth that the difficulty of regarding the Saviour merely from the human standpoint, at the same time dissociating the spiritual aspect from any portion of His life or works, is a task beyond the powers of librettist or composer. This, however, is a subject on which one might dilate to an extent far beyond either the limits or the scope of these columns, and the matter may therefore be still left open for discussion. Meanwhile it may be well to refer to the argument, which sets forth that the work is laid out in "scenes" dealing respectively, in the first part, with the "Nativity," "preaching," "healing," and "prophesying" of our Lord, ending with the triumphant entry into Jerusalem; and, in the second part, with the utterances which, containing the avowal of Himself as the Son of Man, excited to the utmost the wrath of His enemies, and led to the rulers conspiring for His betrayal and death; the solemn recital of the chorus of His sufferings, and the belief in His final reward; the grief of Mary Magdalene at the sepulchre, and the consolation and the triumph of the disciples at the resurrection of their Lord and Master. As the words are selected from the Holy Scriptures, the question may, without impropriety, be asked why the Annunciation is put into the mouth of a shepherd (with a bass voice), when, in the Gospel according to St. Luke, it was the angel Gabriel who imparted these glad tidings, and Elizabeth who uttered the sentence, "Blessed art thou among women, and blessed is the fruit of thy womb?" There may possibly be some occult reasons why this alteration has been made, but they are hardly likely to present themselves to the uninitiated observer.

In approaching so sublime a subject as the life and sufferings of our Lord, Mr. Sullivan has displayed a capacity for which even his most ardent admirers were hardly prepared, and the production of to-day is an achievement of which any composer of modern times might well be proud, so thoroughly is the music identified with the solemnity of the text. It would be an injustice to Mr. Sullivan's oratorio, with the limited time and space at one's disposal in so busy a week, to attempt just now even the merest outline of the various numbers which go to make up the work, and I must therefore be content with saying that, taken as a whole, the composition is nothing short of masterly, the vocal writing, whether for soloists or chorus, being throughout admirable, while the instrumentation is no less deserving the highest praise. Mdlle. Tietjens, who was in glorious voice, sang the first soprano part, and, in her great air, "Tell ye the Daughters of Zion," produced an unmistakable effect, as might readily be seen by the pleased expression and subdued though delighted murmurs of her hearers. In the tenor music Mr. Sims Reeves had but little to do, but what there was set down for him was done to perfection, notably the pathetic air, "Refrain thy soul from weeping," and the air preceding the final chorus, "If ye be risen with Christ." To Madame Trebelli-Bettini alone fell the work of the contralto, and, although a comparative novice in the school of oratorio, her beautiful organ, supplemented by her natural intelligence and the effective music allotted her, produced a commensurate impression, although it has been remarked by many that, with an accomplished vocalist at hand like Madame Patey, so thoroughly versed in sacred works, it would not have been out of place had the composer given the part to his own countrywoman. Careful, conscientious, and always singing like the genuine musician that he is, Mr. Cummings could not fail to give satisfaction in what little he had to do, as great or small may be the part equal pains is sure to be bestowed upon it. Mr. Sullivan may congratulate himself upon having an artist like Mr. Santley upon whom devolved the most important part in the oratorio, which, in this respect, might be a second Elijah, so arduous and so sustained is the effort required from the baritone part. To say that Mr. Santley sang magnificently is but stating a simple truth, and the sacred utterances were given with a dignity and impressiveness alike worthy of the subject and the music. Higher praise than this it would be impossible to award. In some of the concerted pieces Mrs. Sutton and Mr. Briggs (of St. George's Chapel, Windsor) rendered good service, whilst band and chorus fairly outshone themselves. By desire of the President, the chorus, "I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed" (a wonderfully fine piece of writing), and the chorus of children, one of the most exquisite numbers in the whole work, were repeated; and, at the end of the first part, when the pent-up applause at last found vent, the Earl of Shrewsbury, from his Presidential seat, addressed Mr. Sullivan—who, as a matter of course, conducted his own work—to the effect that no doubt the Vice-Presidents and the audience shared his opinion, and would gladly have desired to applaud and hear again many other parts of the oratorio, but in consideration of its length, and not wishing to impair its sentiment by interruptions, they had refrained from expressing their wish. The remark of the President as to length was justified, as the first part took nearly two hours, the second occupying rather more than one hour, and making, with the interval, a period little short of four hours. No doubt Mr. Sullivan will see fit to revise and probably curtail a portion of the work, as Sir Julius Benedict did with his St. Peter after its production here three years ago. No sooner had the last chorus, "To whom be glory for ever and ever"—in which everyone stood up—concluded than the most enthusiastic plaudits rang through the building, cheer after cheer arising from those who had so long and so attentively listened, as well as from those whose vocal and instrumental skill had served as the exponents of a work which fairly and honestly deserves the praise so lavishly bestowed upon it; and if one may judge by the heartiness of his applause, the Duke of Edinburgh was by no means the least gratified individual in the vast audience which thronged every available spot in the Town-hall.

---

LLANDOVERY.—An amateur concert in aid of the restoration of the tower of Cilycwm Church was lately given at the Town-hall. The singing was not up to the average heard at concerts in this town, when we take into consideration the vocalists secured for the occasion—viz., Mr. R. and Miss Campbell Davys, Mr. Lewis (Llwyncelin), Mr. Tempest Jones (Brecon), The Cilycwm Glee Party: Mr. David Waters, Miss Hughes (Llandilo), Miss Diana Price (Talley), Miss Jennett Thomas, Miss Catharine Williams, Mr. Jones (Velindre), Miss Jane Price, Mr. Benjamin Evans, with Mrs. Lewis, and the Misses Lewis (Llwyncelin), as pianists. The concert was followed by a ball, which was fairly attended.

Digitized by Google

LIGHT FROM DARKNESS.*

(From "Another World.")

My task at first seemed endless; but good is always fruitful, and each conquest aided every subsequent effort. I was greatly assisted in my progress by the knowledge of secrets in nature of wondrous value, but permanently effective only for good; secrets to be entrusted to those alone whose goodness, discipline, and self-knowledge enable them to stand firmly against the varied attacks of temptation, and to rise above motives by which men are ordinarily ruled, chosen High Priests of the Science who would never use for evil purposes the knowledge imparted. Similar powers have been exercised for good in different ages of your planet, but the mighty trust having become known to weak minds was sadly abused, the charm was broken and the secret lost; for, when the knowledge of man exceeds certain limits, his power, like that of good angels, can exist only while linked with noble aspirations. False prophets who used the dying embers of occult science for vile purposes have been properly looked upon with horror as delegates of evil; for the death-struggle of the expiring secret had wrought great mischief on the earth.

The power which had been entrusted to me was exercised for good, and aided me in consummating my plans without bloodshed; those insensible to words yielded to influences whose depths could not be fathomed by ordinary vision.

In the system I founded, every one—his natural powers disciplined to that end—is occupied in a pursuit adapted to his genius and inclination, ascertained by ever vigilant and scrutinising observation, and tests ofttimes repeated during his early and later career. These tests are applied in a variety of forms and by different examiners at different times; and there are so many checks and counter-checks, that the boy is effectually protected against the now scarcely possible ignorance or favouritism of "the knowledge testers," and even against himself.

Everyone having the occupation most congenial to him, all worked cheerfully in their pursuits; and I was soon aided by a never-ending phalanx of great men. The progress of science was marvellous, for as soon as the impeding obstacles were removed, and we allowed her to be wooed by the lovers of her predilection, Nature seemed to lend herself eagerly to the advances of her votaries.

The precept exhorting all to industry stood at the head of this portion of my laws, but the lesson was no longer needed.

I was indeed ofttimes oblige to exhort to recreations and amusements, and to turn many—particularly men of genius—from the too incessant pursuits of their labours of love.

I set an example in my own person, for I was a frequent attendant at the public games and diversions.

One discovery was pregnant with another; invention followed invention almost in geometrical progression; the secrets of nature were disclosed; and power, being wielded only by men intent on good, disease and crime were soon reduced to almost imperceptible proportions. Wisdom and joy ruled where folly and misery had prevailed, and towards the end of my reign the happiness of Montalluyah was more like the joys of a celestial star than of a planet inhabited by mortal beings.

When the causes of affliction themselves could not be removed, they were often made to contribute to my world's well-being.

The myriads of insects that formerly ravaged our fields are now intercepted in their work of destruction, their properties having been discovered and applied to purposes redundant with good.

The hippopotami, who in earlier ages were looked upon as the incarnate enemy of mankind, formerly overran the country, trampling down vegetation, and attacking man and beast. These creatures are now dominated, and their breed is encouraged, for they have become the most valuable of our wild beasts, the hide, fat, and nearly every part of the carcase being applied to very many purposes of the highest utility.

The advent of "the fever wind," which formerly blew disease amongst the people, now conduces to the healthfulness of those it would otherwise lay low.

The lightning, formerly destructive, impelled—as was told in our legendary lore—by the anger of the Fire God, is rendered innocuous, and collected for use.

The sun's scorching force is compelled to minister to our delights, to assist in our arts and manufactures, to supply a power which cannot otherwise be obtained, and even to protect us from the sometimes too dangerous influence of his own rays.

The sunlight is powerful in our world beyond anything in your Indian or African climates; even the shades are not black, but of a reddish hue.

The sun, going down, leaves a red light, so that, except when at night this is completely shut out from the houses, there is ordinarily no darkness in your sense of the word.

At certain times, however, Montalluyah, both by day and night, is overspread with thick darkness. Formerly, during this visitation, no man could see his neighbour. Fear seized the people. They believed it to be the reign of bad spirits, and so it seemed; few dared venture from their houses even to obtain food, and numbers died from terror and exhaustion.

Light is now made to displace darkness, and joyfulness to take the place of mourning.

My scientific men discovered a means by which the causes that produced the darkness are now used to remedy its inconveniences.

The City is made gloriously radiant. Forms of trees, birds, vases of flowers and fruit, fountains, and other designs of many tints and great beauty are transparent with light, rendered more beautiful by combination with a peculiar electricity emitted by the earth—an electricity which, be it observed, is the cause of the darkness.

The very birds by their warbling seem to greet the change, and the trees and flowers emit a more delicious perfume.

There is music and rejoicing everywhere in the City. Many of the electrical amusements provided appear grander from the contrast with the darkness they are made to displace—a contrast scarcely greater than that depicted by our "Nature Delineators" when, in allegory, they paint the present contrasted with past times—the later years of my reign contrasted with the beginning.

* "Let the mighty works of God stimulate all to industry."

BOLOGNA.—The Municipality of this city have determined to place a marble bust of Mariani in the vestibule of the Teatro Comunale, and to hang up a portrait of him in the hall of the Liceo.

NEW YORK.—The new Fifth Avenue Theatre is to open on the 15th October next. The company will previously give a number of performances in Cincinnati.—The Broadway Theatre was to open on the 26th inst., with La Fille de Madame Angot, the principal part being sustained by Mdlle. Aimée.—Having failed to discover in St Francisco the Tom-Tiddler's Ground he expected, Herr Wieniawski has returned here.

VIENNA.—Madame Schröder-Hanfstängel closed a short engagement at the Imperial Operahouse by appearing as Marguerite de Valois in Les Huguenots. A number of German-Americans, who have come to visit the Exhibition, presented her with a colossal wreath, decorated with the national colours of America. Fastened to the ribbon was a poem, stating that there were no nightingales in America, and inviting the lady to supply the deficiency by going over there.—Mdlle. Bertha Ehnn, of the Imperial Operahouse, was married in the Karlskirche, on the 28th inst., to Captain Robert Sand, of the Austrian army.

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

THEODORE THOMAS, the well-known director of the Classical Concerts in New York, is a man who "will not stand any nonsense," as the saying goes, when his art is concerned. A short time since, as his band was performing Mendelssohn's music to A Midsummer Night's Dream, some persons commenced talking loudly. Theodore Thomas gave the signal and the drums set up a continuous roll, which never ceased before the chatterers had taken the hint and held their impertinent tongues. Then, and then only, did Theodore Thomas resume the music of A Midsummer Night's Dream.

IN all times, vocalists have made more money by singing a few airs in an opera than composers by composing the entire score. A curious proof of this is to be found in the catalogue of the Amateur d'Ortographes, where we read:—

"121. Cherubini, Luigi, celebrated musical composer, and member of the Institute, born in 1760, and died in 1842.

"P.S. Paris, 15th Messidor, Year III.

"Contract by which Cherubini binds himself to compose new airs in the Italian operas represented at the Salle Feydeau; to compose annually two operas, etc., for 6,000 francs a year.

"131. Garat, Jean Pierre, one of the most celebrated singers of his day, born in 1764, and died in 1823.

"P.S. Paris, 13th Brumaire, Year V.

"Contract by which Garat binds himself to sing at eight concerts to be given in the Salle Feydeau, for the sum of 1,500 francs a concert."

THERE was a long struggle between the old customers of the celebrated Cheshire Cheese in Wine-Office Court, Fleet Street, and its younger patrons—now, alas! old customers themselves—before silver, i.e., plated, forks were introduced in place of the iron three-prongers, and gas supplanted candles. The struggle ended by a compromise: while the modern innovations were tolerated, the champions of the good old days still stuck to their iron monstrosities, and had their candles burning on the table while the gas was flaring above their heads. Prejudices, like Charles II., are an unconscionable time a-dying. Something of the same conservative spirit which distinguished the elder patrons of the Cheshire Cheese appears to have swayed until very recently the managerial councils of the Teatro Balbo at Turin. The float there has hitherto been supplied with oil. This season, for the first time, will gas be substituted, in consequence of the complaints, both loud and deep, made by the occupants of the stalls, whose noses were, from time to time, saluted by odours by no means recalling the perfumes of Araby theBlest.

FROM some interesting statistics recently published, concerning the number of times certain works have been performed at the Grand Opera, and the Opéra-Comique, Paris, we learn that La Dame Blanche has been represented 1,295 times; Guillaume Tell, 553; Zampa, 447; Robert le Diable, 570; Le Pré-aux-Clercs, 1,076; Le Chalet, 1,025; La Juive, 367; Les Huguenots, 521; Le Domino Noir, 844; La Fille du Régiment, 522; Le Prophète, 327; Bonsoir, M. Pantalon, 321; and Tannhäuser, 3.

A NEW instrument, entitled by its inventor, M. Frederick Kastner, the Pyrophone, will be introduced into the orchestra during the performance of M. Gounod's new opera, Jeanne d'Arc, at the Gaîté, Paris. It emits its sounds by means of lighted gas circulating in glass tubes; the sounds resemble simultaneously the human voice and an Æolian harp.

MOST persons who know anything at all about the stage are aware that the name of Vestris long occupied an honourable place in theatrical annals. It was one of the family who uttered the memorable words: "There are only three great men in Europe: myself, Voltaire, and the King of Prussia (Frederick II.)." One of his descendants, Carlo di Vestris, has just died at Florence, aged 79. He was a Count, probably the only titled male dancer on record. He must have been ennobled, for his family was of plebeian extraction. Can his title: "Conte di Penna," have been conferred on him because, in his Terpsichorean gyrations, he was as light as a feather?

THE largest amount ever taken in one night at the Imperial Operahouse, Vienna, was 5,300 florins, on the 23rd of June last, the opera being Les Huguenots.

ADVERTISEMENT.

KING'S THEATRE, PANTHEON.

THE Subscribers, and the Public, are respectfully informed, that the Opening of this Theatre, announced for Saturday next, will, by particular desire, take place To-morrow, the 17th inst., with the Grand Serious Opera of

ARMIDA,

The music by the late celebrated SACCHINI, with Additions and Alterations, &c. under the Direction of Signor MAZZINGHI.

Principal Performers,

Signor PACCHIEROTTI, Madame MARA,
Signora LAZZARINI,
Signora SALEMBINI, Signor BENIGNI,
And Signor GARELLI,

With Dances analogous to the Opera.

End of the First Act,

A DIVERTISEMENT, Serious and Demi Characters
Composed by Mr. D'AUBERVAL.

End of the Second Act,

An entire New Pantomime Ballet, in One Act,
Composed by Mr. D'AUBERVAL, called
AMPHION ET THALIE: ou,
L'ELEVE DES MUSES.

Principal Dancers,

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Messrs. | Didelot, | Mademoiselle Theodore, |
| | Duquesney, | Gervais Rocke, |
| | Vigano, | Deligny, |

And Mademoiselles L. et R. Simonets.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Messrs. | Fialon, | Madame Didelot, |
| | Duchesne, | Mademoiselle Pisieux, |
| | Rousseau, | Madame Bitthmer Cadette, |
| | Boisgirard, | Bitthmer, |
| | St. Aumer, | Rousseau, |
| | Schweitzer, | Vedie, |
| | Vigano, | Durand. |

FIGURANTS ET FIGURANTES.

Leader of the Band Mr. CRAMER.
Leader of the Ballets, Mr. CHABRAN.
The Dresses executed from Original Drawings of BARTOLOZZI and THRESHAM,
By Signor LUPPINO.
Painter and Inventor of the Decorations,
WILLIAM HODGES, Esq. R.A.
Machinist Mons. BENARD, from the Opera, Paris.

☞ The Grand Ballet of TELEMACHUS in the Island of CALIPSO, is unavoidably postponed, on account of the late hour to which two Grand Ballets would protract the Entertainments; it will therefore be brought out next week, with the Comic Opera of LA BELLA PESCATRICE, composed by the celebrated GUGLIELMI.

Subscriptions will be received at Wright and Co.'s, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden (only), where Tickets are delivering daily.

 Mr. Mapleson has the honour to say, that further particulars will be immediately announced, and a multitude of new "stars" will shine during the season in a multitude of new operas!

 All communications to be immediately addressed to Mr. F. Cowen, at No. 1, Pall Mall.

WEBER'S FIRST APPEARANCE IN LONDON.—Moscheles says: "What emotion Weber must have felt on his first appearance, yesterday, before the English public, in Covent Garden Theatre! The thundering applause with which he was greeted affected us deeply, how much more himself, the honoured object of all this enthusiasm! The performance consisted of a selection from the Freischütz, conducted by himself; the overture was encored with acclamation. Braham, Miss Paton, and Phillips sang the chief numbers of the opera; they seemed inspired by Weber's presence. During the peals of applause, Weber shook hands with the singers, to express his pleasure and satisfaction; at the end of the performance the whole pit stood up on the benches, waving hats and handkerchiefs, and cheering the composer. I saw him later on in the evening, sitting in the green room, and completely exhausted; he was too ill fully to enjoy this signal triumph in a land of strangers."—Life of Moscheles.

BROOKLYN (U. S.).—The new Park Theatre, which report describes as a splendid building, beautifully fitted up and elegantly decorated, was to be opened in September.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

Mdlle. Christine Nilsson leaves for the United States this day, by the Cuba.

Mr. Jarrett leaves Liverpool this day for the United States, by the Cunard steamship Cuba.

Carl Wilhelm, the composer of the famous "Wacht am Rhein," died at Schmalkalden, on Tuesday, the 26th inst.

Sir W. Sterndale Bennett is at Eastbourne, and was (under the advice of his physician) unable to be present at the Schumann Festival at Bonn.

Miss Therèse Liebe, the young and accomplished violinist, leaves London by the Cunard ship, Atlas, on the 18th September, to fulfil a seven months' engagement in the United States.

In Switzerland a milkmaid who is a good singer gets more salary than others, because, under the influence of music, cows "give down" better and give more milk. An Eastern farmer is trying to hire Parepa-Rosa and Kellogg to sing round his pump.

The Meyerbeer Foundation Prize, for Composition, of 1,500 thalers, founded by the composer of the Huguenots, was decreed, by the Academy of Arts, in Berlin, on the 13th inst., to Otto Dorn, son of the chef d'orchestre, H. Dorn. He is a student of the Stern Musical Institute in that city.

M. Colyns has been the solo violinist at M. Rivière's Concerts during the week. Vieuxtemps' "Air Varié," Beethoven's Romance in F, a Sonata by Correlli (with an elaborate cadence by M. Colyns), and a fantasia on airs from L'Elisir d'Amore, composed by himself, were the pieces played by the accomplished violinist, and which obtained for him the unanimous applause of the audience.

The popularity of La Fille de Madame Angot is remarkable. Once more the Folies-Dramatiques, whereat it is given, stands, so far as the receipts are concerned, at the head of the Parisian theatres. During last month, the fortunate management of the house has taken, in spite of summer heat, 105,000 francs, against 44,000 francs at the Français, 11,000 francs at the Vaudeville, and 9,815 francs at the Gymnase.

The lovers of music of ancient and modern Italian opera will be pleased to hear that there is some chance of operas such as Così Fan Tutte, Il Barbiere, Il Turco in Italia, La Clemenza di Tito, &c., being given in London during the next winter season, under the able directorship of Signor Monari Rocca, who is trying to get together a subscription list of two hundred gentlemen. He has already been promised a large proportion of the number, and he has set the subscription at the low price of twelve guineas for the forty nights. We wish him every success in his undertaking.

Sale of a Musical Library.—The valuable musical library of the late Earl of Aylesford was sold by auction on Monday, by Messrs. Puttick and Simpson, at their rooms in Leicester Square. The collection included many important choral and instrumental works of great rarity, including Wm. Babell's Harpsichord Lessons, and his solos for violin or hautboy; Philip Hart's "Morning Hymn" from Milton's "Paradise Lost;" "The Judgment of Paris" by Eccles; Glareani's "Dodecachordon;" George Wither's "Hymns and Songs of the Church," with Orlando Gibbon's music in two parts; Haydn's March in E flat for strings, in manuscript in his autograph, and signed Dr. Haydn; a curious manuscript collection of the thirty-five Italian fantasias for the organ by Corregio, Palestrina, Orlando di Lasso, and other eminent writers; and many other ancient works and treatises on the art.

An action, in which Miss Edith Wynne, the well-known singer, was plaintiff, was heard at Liverpool, on Saturday, before Mr. Justice Quain. It was brought to recover the value of household furniture which had been seized by the defendants, Henry Matthews and Joseph Taylor, under an execution. Miss Wynne, it appeared, had, on several occasions, lent money to a man named Creighton, a cousin by marriage, who lived at Liverpool; and, about Christmas last year, Creighton applied to Miss Wynne, who was then in Liverpool, for a loan of £50. The plaintiff refused to lend this money on this occasion without a bill of sale upon the furniture, which Creighton accordingly gave her. Some time afterwards, she found that the defendants had, under an execution warrant, seized and disposed of the goods, whereupon the present action was brought, Miss Wynne contending that by the bill of sale the furniture belonged to her and not to Creighton. The only defence was a technical one, objection being taken by Mr. Torr, Q.C., to an alleged informality in the bill of sale, in which Creighton was described as an accountant, whereas he was actually a schoolmaster. It appeared that Creighton had been getting his living at the time the bill of sale was given by keeping tradesmen's books, and the learned judge overruled the objection. A verdict was accordingly given for the plaintiff, leave to move being refused.—Carmarthen Journal.

A western exchange expresses amazement that a musician who had married a Miss Teresa Time, should strike and otherwise maltreat her ere the honeymoon was over. Pray, what is there out of the way in a musician beating time?

The ordinary general meeting of the renters of debenture-holders was held at Drury Lane Theatre on Wednesday evening, Captain Marcus Sharpe in the chair. Mr. James Robins, the secretary, read the notice convening the meeting, the report of the general committee to the proprietors, and the architect's report upon the building (which had been submitted to the meeting of proprietors about a month ago). He then read the report of the renters' committee, which congratulated the debenture-holders upon the favourable state of their affairs. It particularly dwelt on the necessity for keeping up the arrangements which were in use for the extinction of fires should any occur. The theatre has been re-let to Mr. Chatterton for a period of five years at an increased rental of £1,500, which made the rent now to be paid £6,500 per annum. A cordial acknowledgment was given to the management of Messrs. Chatterton and Mapleson, and the report concluded with anticipations of future prosperity. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said the report of the renters' committee, which the secretary had just read, was a most satisfactory one in every way. The theatre had been re-let, at an increased rental of £1,500 a-year, to Mr. Chatterton, and they had been able for four consecutive years to pay a dividend of £8 6s. on each debenture of the nominal value of £500. The value of the debentures had greatly increased, as the meeting would be aware. He had nothing further to add but that he looked forward with great confidence to their future operations, and had no doubt their dividends would not only be maintained but increased. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously. The present committee (with the exception of Mr. Dyte, who had died lately) were re-elected. The meeting shortly afterwards closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

Robert Cocks & Co.—"Sound the trumpet in Zion," for full choir, words by S. C. Hall, music by Brinley Richards.

Augener & Co.—"The day goes down red darkling," song, by Josephine Bongaerts.

Sunday School Union.—"Te Deum," by Mdme. Weiss.

Joseph Williams.—"The Man, the Monkey, and the Donkey," a satire; and "Drink was my foe," song, by E. F. Wilson.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING

Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: Hammond & Co. (late Jullien), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM

Musical Festival,

1873.

CHAPPELL & CO.

HAVE MUCH PLEASURE IN ANNOUNCING THAT

SIG. RANDEGGER'S

NEW DRAMATIC CANTATA,

FRIDOLIN,

OR

THE MESSAGE TO THE FORGE,

PERFORMED FOR THE FIRST TIME ON THURSDAY, AUGUST 28TH,

WAS PUBLISHED ON

MONDAY, AUGUST 25TH,

And may be had of all Musicsellers in Town or Country.

PRICE—Paper Covers, 6s.; Cloth Boards, 8s.

CHAPPELL & CO.,
50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MARIE ALEXANDROWNA WALTZ.

BY CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

ASHDOWN & PARRY beg to announce that this new Waltz will be published in a few days.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,

National Hymn, 6s.,

Ave Maria, 4s.,

AND

Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FIRTH, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Aug. 30, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 36. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY), September 6, Sheridan's Comedy, "THE RIVALS," compressed into three acts. Supported by the following powerful cast: Messrs. W. H. Stephens, C. Harcourt, F. Roland, H. Crouch, G. Temple, H. J. Turner, H. Carter, and George Honey. Mesdames Blanche Hayes, Gifford, Davis, and Miss Eleanor Bufton.—Numbered reserved stalls, Half-a-Crown; unnumbered reserved seats, One Shilling. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day and Monday, September 6 and 8, AUTUMN GREAT FRUIT and FLOWER SHOW. Admission, September 6th, Half-a-Crown; September 8th, One Shilling; or by Guinea Season Ticket.

MISS PURDY will sing at the FIRST SUBSCRIPTION CONCERT, at Manchester, on Monday, the 15th inst.—35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!), will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

MR. E. ADAMS, Operatic Comedian, Manager and Author, General Entrepreneur and Director for Comic Opera, Burlesque and First-Class Musical Entertainments, for London and the Provinces.
Complete Tuition for the Stage, with every facility to eligible aspirants.
Foreign Productions Translated and Adapted for English representation.
Personal interviews, from 12 to 3, at Mr. Boosey's, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL CADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

TO ORGANISTS.—For Sale, a GOOD PIANO, with 2½ Octaves, C Pedals, and Stool, complete. All in Mahogany, and in thoroughly good condition. For cards to view, address, H. J. A. S., Novello, Ewer & Co., 35 Poultry, E. C.

CONDUCTORS OF CHOIRS AND CHORAL SOCIETIES seeking something new, bright, and vigorous, will be much pleased with Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS' new Part-song, "LET THE HILLS RESOUND." Everywhere it is warmly received. 1s.; class copy, price four stamps; as a song, 3s.; piano solo, 4s. Also his Sacred Part-song, "SOUND THE TRUMPET IN ZION," for full choir, performed by the Welsh Choir at the National Eisteddfod, Mold, Flint, and warmly encored.

READING AT SIGHT.—Musical Cards, for Learning to Read Music quickly at Sight. Invaluable to all Teachers of Music. Post-free for 25 stamps.

HIGH-CLASS MUSIC for STUDENTS and Others.—To be had gratis and postage free, a List of 400 CLASSICAL WORKS, bound, at greatly reduced prices.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.
FOUR NEW STYLES.

STYLE P.—Two Sets of Reeds, with Three Pedals .. .. .. 22 Guineas.
STYLE Q.—Two Sets of Reeds, Resonant Case, Three Pedals .. 25 Guineas.
STYLE S.—Seven Stops; with Sub-Bass and Octave Coupler. Resonant Case .. .. .. .. .. .. 38 Guineas.
STYLE T.—Five Stops. Improved Vox Humana. Resonant Case .. 28 Guineas.
Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, London.

Just Published.
"DREAM ON,"
SONG,
Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., D.C.L.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY, the 22nd September, and will terminate on Saturday the 20th of December.
Candidates of admission can be examined at the Institution on MONDAY the 15th, and THURSDAY, the 18th September, at eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Monday and Thursday at the same hour. By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

"ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. Sung by Madame Patey .. 4s.
"THE KING AND I" .. .. Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. 4s.
"THE CROSS ROADS" .. .. Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. 4s.
"SYMPATHY" .. .. .. Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. 4s.
"NOTHING" .. .. .. Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. 4s.
E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

"SINCE BABY LEFT US" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s.
"REQUITED" .. .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"A MODERN STORY" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"WRITING TO WILLIE" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"MY MORNING DREAM" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

QUACK-QUACK.—The immensely exciting WILD DUCK GALOP, introduced nightly in the comic opera of the "Wonderful Duck," at the Opera-Comique, and vociferously encored. Can be sung as well as played. 18 Stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

Published this Day,
"BEYOND THE HILLS,"
SACRED DUET
For Soprano and Contralto.
Composed by HENRY SMART.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published this Day,
THREE SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.
With English and German Words.

No. 1, "THE MINSTRELS' HOME" (Des Sängers Heimath) .. .. .. 3s.
,, 2, "THE LOVELY MONTH OF MAY" (Im Wunderschönen Monat Mai) 3s.
,, 3, "VISIONS" (Traumbild) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s.
The English Versions of the Words by MARIA XIMENA HAYES.
The Music by WILHELM SCHULTHES.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Published this Day,
"COM' E GENTIL,"
Une FANTAISIE DE SALON,
Sur la Serenade de "DON PASQUALE,"
Pour le Pianoforte,
Par RICHARD HOFFMAN.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

Now ready, in Two Vols., with Portrait, 24s.,

LIFE OF MOSCHELES,

WITH SELECTIONS FROM HIS DIARIES AND CORRESPONDENCE,

By his WIFE.

THE TIMES.—"The Publication of these memoirs will give satisfaction to many of our readers. The devotees of music in this country are both numerous and earnest, and nothing can gratify them more than when literature pays a tribute to distinction in that art. These volumes, therefore will be hailed with particular delight. They are as well 'a record of the life of Moscheles' as 'a chronicle of the musical history of his time'—a period of sixty years. What Moscheles observed he was accustomed to record in his diary, and we have before us the result of his observations."

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

Published this Day,

"TWO PATHWAYS,"

SONG.

Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"

"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"

("Connais tu le pays.")

Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,

In the Opera of "MIGNON."

The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG.

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"OUR DARLING,"

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

NEW SONG BY SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

"LOVE AT SEA,"

Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Composed by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE RAT DE VILLE,"

ET

"LE RAT DES CHAMPS,"

(FABLE DE LAFONTAINE,)

Chantée par JULES LEFORT.

Musique de ETIENNE REY.

Price 4s.

(Edition de L. Escudier, Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MONS. FAURE'S NEW SONGS.

"VALSE DES FEUILLES" .. .. .. .. .. Price, net, 2s. 6d.

"LE PRESSOIR" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. ,, 2s. 6d.

Composed and Sung by J. FAURE.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

NEW PIANO MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY

DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.

WEDDING WALTZ. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

LA CAPRICIEUSE. Morceau de Salon. By GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

VALSE DE BRAVOURE. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

STAR OF THE CIRQUE. Lancers. (Illustrated Title). Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

BEFORE THE WIND. Galop. Composed by THOMAS BROOKS. Price 4s.

MARCHE BRESILLIENNE. Composed by IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

STELLA. Grande Valse de Concert. Par IGNACE GIBSONE. Price 4s.

BIANCA. Mazurka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 2s.

HAIDÉE. Polka. Composed by W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 3s.

LES CHARMILLES (ALLEY OF ROSES) VALSE. By W. JERVIS RUBINI. Price 4s.

NEW SONGS.

UN DESIO. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

LA VISIONE. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

IO LA VIDI. Romanza. Composed by G. ROMANO. Price 3s.

ROW, GONDOLIER, Barcarolle. Sung by Miss JOSÉ SHERRINGTON. Composed by GRACE SHERRINGTON. Price 4s.

M'HA LASCIATO, Stornello. Cantata da Madame CONNEAU. Composto dal Cavaliere FABIO CAMPANA. Price 3s.

THE MELTING OF THE SNOW. Duet. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE and Madame PATEY, at the London Ballad Concerts. Composed by HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

MID THE SCENTED CLOVER. Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

AH! WELL A-DAY. Song. Composed by JESSICA RANKIN. Price 3s.

LA BACCANTE. Canzone. Cantata da Madame SINICO. Composto dal ETTORE FIORI. Price 4s. (With a portrait of Madame Sinico).

THE BIRD'S LOVE SONG (with Clarionet Obbligato). By HENRY SMART. Price 4s.

THE MARINER. Sung by Signor FOLI. Composed by LOUIS DIEHL. Price 4s.

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From "The Times.")

Birmingham, August 28th, 1873.

To the great surprise and equal satisfaction of the Birmingham people, the Duke of Edinburgh, of whom it was thought yesterday that the last glimpse had been seen, returned this morning, with the Earl of Shrewsbury, from Ingestre; and after luncheon at the Queen's Hotel, where his Royal Highness had again taken up his quarters, attended the performance of the Messiah in the Town Hall. Punctual, as usual, he reached the hall at the appointed time, and Sir Michael Costa was enabled to give the first wave of his bâton with the regularity which on such occasions has always proved that he is not only a great musician, but a strict disciplinarian. Mr. Arthur Sullivan, composer of the oratorio, The Light of the World, performed yesterday with such brilliant success, formed one of the Royal party in the Vice-President's gallery; and, after the enthusiastic reception awarded to the Duke of Edinburgh, was himself made the object of a similar demonstration.

About the performance of the Messiah little requires to be said. How admirably the choruses are delivered from end to end by the Birmingham singers, amateurs need hardly be informed; nor is it necessary to remind our London readers of the excellence of those artists to whom were allotted the principal vocal pieces. In the first part the solo singers were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington (soprano), upon whom devolved the pastoral recitatives, "There were shepherds," &c., culminating in the florid and exultant "Rejoice greatly;" Madame Trebelli-Bettini (contralto), to whom fell the melodious air, "Oh thou that tellest good tidings in Zion;" Mr. Vernon Rigby, who sang "Comfort ye my people," with its joyous pendent, "Every valley shall be exalted;" and Signor Foli, whose share in the music was limited to the recitative, "For behold," and its sequel, "The people that walked in darkness," to which Mozart has added such elaborate and picturesque orchestral accompaniments. In the second part Madame Sherrington was set down for "How beautiful are the feet;" Madame Patey for "He was despised and rejected;" Mr. Sims Reeves for the Passion music, beginning "All they that see Him," and ending with "But Thou didst not leave His soul in hell," as also the air, "Thou shalt break them;" and Signor Foli for "Why do the nations so furiously rage together?" In Part III. Mdlle. Tietjens sang "I know that my Redeemer liveth;" and to Mr. Santley was allotted "The trumpet shall sound" (obbligato trumpet, Mr. T. Harper); Madame Patey and Mr. J. A. Smith taking part with Mdlle. Tietjens and Mr. Santley in the quartets, "Since by man came death" and "For as in Adam all die." The oratorio came to an end with a very fine performance of the great chorus, "Worthy is the Lamb," and its magnificent peroration, "Amen," during which, as during the "Hallelujah," the audience stood up.

On leaving the hall the Duke of Edinburgh was again loudly cheered, and the cheering was kept up outside until he arrived at his hotel. The numbers present at this performance of the Messiah were 2,213, and the receipts from sale of tickets amounted to upwards of £2,924—such is the continued and unfailing attraction of Handel's undying masterpiece.

The Duke of Edinburgh will attend the performance of Fridolin, a new cantata of Signor Alberto Randegger, this evening.

Among the company in the Vice-Patrons' gallery were the following: His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh (president); the Earl of Shrewsbury and Talbot; the Countess of Shrewsbury and party; the Mayor of Birmingham and party; Lord and Lady Littleton and party; the Marquis of Hertford; Lord and Lady William Seymour; Lady Mary Seymour; Mr. and Lady Florence Seymour; the Earl of Denbigh; Lady Folkestone; Lady Theresa Talbot; The Bishop of Worcester; Sir C. B. Adderley, M.P., and party; Lady Windsor Clive and party; the Hon. Parker Lewis and party; Dowager Lady Mordaunt and party; the High Sheriff of Warwickshire and party; the High Sheriff of Staffordshire and party; the Bishop of Rochester; Lady Ward and party; Sir Robert Hamilton and party; the Dean of Lichfield and party; Sir R. Knightley, M.P., and party; the Hon. Mr. Gage; the Hon. and Rev. John Bridgeman and party; Mr. and Lady G. Petre and party; General Phillips and party; Colonel Stevenson, C.B.; Lieutenant-Colonel and the Hon. Mrs. Lloyd Lindsay; Mr. Henry Allsopp and party; Mr. J. D. Wingfield Digby and party; Miss Davenport and party; Mr. Thomas Walker and party; Mrs. Manley and party; Mrs. Poole Shawe and party; Mr. James Chance and party; Mr. and Mrs. Owen Grant; Mr. Dugdale and party; Major Monckton; Miss Alice Peel and party; Mr. C. M. Caldecott, and Professor Oakeley, Mus. Bac.

The Duke of Edinburgh left Birmingham by the half-past ten o'clock train to meet the limited mail at Stafford, whence he would proceed direct to Scotland. In the course of the day, his Royal Highness visited the Society of Artists and the Midland Institute, where the statue of Prince Albert by Mr. Peter Hollins is placed. After dining at the Queen's Hotel, he went to the Town Hall to hear Signor Randegger's Fridolin, which occupied the first part of the concert. As the train was about starting, the Duke shook hands with the Mayor, and expressed his gratification at the cordial manner in which he had been welcomed by the Birmingham people.

The new cantata was received with every mark of favour. Two choruses were encored, many other pieces were loudly applauded, and Signor Randegger was unanimously called forward at the end. The solo singers were Madame Sherrington, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli. The numbers present were 2,425, and the receipts amounted to £1,605 5s.

---

August 29.

The evening performances at the Town Hall have been much of the long accepted kind. The highly favourable reception awarded to Signor Schira's Lord of Burleigh and Signor Randegger's Fridolin has been recorded. About these, as about Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio, The Light of the World, there will be further occasion to speak at length in a general summary of the Festival week. At present we merely refer to the miscellaneous selections of vocal and instrumental music which followed the cantatas, and which, though comprising few novelties, were not the less eagerly enjoyed by the crowded audiences assembled on each occasion. It must be allowed that the programmes, with regard to variety and interest, were carefully made out. More orchestral music of importance than usual helped to contrast with the vocal pieces of all sorts and denominations, and thus to bring out in strong relief the magnificent orchestra over which Sir Michael Costa presides with unrivalled ability. At the first concert the programme included Beethoven's Leonora, the grandest of the four overtures composed for the opera known to all the musical world under the name of Fidelio. Such an imposing beginning was worthy an imposing climax; and so we had the overture to Cherubini's Anacreon, a masterpiece of a wholly different character—brilliant rather than sublime—which brought the concert to a termination.

The audience could hardly have quitted the hall to the accompaniment of more inspiriting strains; and had not the concert been already so long, they would doubtless have appreciated them fully. At the next concert Beethoven's C minor symphony was the first, and Rossini's overture to the Siege of Corinth the last, orchestral performance. About these familiar masterpieces it would be superfluous to say more than that they were played as might have been expected from orchestra and conductor. The other overture was that to Mr. Macfarren's still unheard oratorio, John the Baptist. Upon this the verdict of London has twice been emphatically pronounced—at the concerts of the London Orchestral Society and those of the "old Philharmonic;" and now Birmingham has endorsed the opinion of the capital. The overture to John the Baptist is unquestionably a fine work; and if the other parts of the MS. oratorio (which has been secured by the managing committee of the approaching festival at Bristol) are of the same calibre, something far apart from the ordinary may reasonably be anticipated. It is known that Sir Michael Costa—to his credit be it said—took the utmost pains at the rehearsals of this new work, and the result was a splendid performance. At the third and last miscellaneous concert the picturesque overture to Guillaume Tell, unequalled in its style, met with the accustomed reception, the last movement (the military movement) being encored; the fiery Ruy Blas of Mendelssohn, which Weber might have signed, playing the audience out, and, like Cherubini's Anacreon, deserving a better fate. Many amateurs would have preferred hearing the Ruy Blas overture to a good deal of the vocal music; but the programme was lengthy, and so they were compelled to sit the whole out, or to put up with disappointment. From the foregoing it will be seen that the orchestra during the week was furnished with ample opportunities of display—and that these opportunities were not lost will easily be credited. There was no concerto, either for violin or pianoforte, but the symphony of Beethoven was an excellent substitute, and the close attention with which it was followed from beginning to end, even more than the applause bestowed upon movement after movement, showed plainly that its appearance in the programme was generally approved. The miscellaneous selections rendered assumed further importance on account of the introduction of several unknown things, among which were two of the "posthumous" works of Rossini. These were the "Song of the Titans," a chorus in unison for bass voices only, with orchestral accompaniments, and a "National Hymn" (so-called), for barytone solo (Mr. Santley) with chorus—the first a very original and remarkable composition, the second less original and less remarkable, but more likely to win popularity. Both were applauded. The only other vocal pieces at the three concerts which can lay claim to novelty were a well written trio, wedded by Mr. Anderton to the Laureate's famous stanzas, "Break on thy cold gray stones, O sea," and a very expressive setting by Mr. Oakeley, Professor of Music at the Edinburgh University, of the beautiful lyric, "Tears, idle tears," from the Princess, each with orchestral accompaniments. The former was assigned to Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and Mr. Vernon Rigby, the composer himself conducting in the orchestra. The latter was sung by Mdlle. Tietjens; so that both composers were fortunate in their exponents. Mr. Anderton is, we believe, a local professor who has composed several pieces held in esteem by his fellow townsmen. Something in a more ambitious style should represent him at the next Festival. To Mdlle. Tietjens, Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Patey, and Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Foli, Messrs. Vernon Rigby, W. H. Cummings, and last, not least, Mr. Sims Reeves, little or nothing was set down in the programmes out of the range of those pieces, Italian, French, German, and English (a small modicum of English by the way), in which they have been so often heard and applauded. To say more than that they were in almost every instance sung in such a manner as the audience had a right to look for at the hands of such artists, the manner to which they have long accustomed the public, and that their efforts were appreciated as always, would be superfluous. General regret, however, was expressed that there was not a single piece, vocal or instrumental, in any of the programmes, morning or evening, from the pens of either Sir Michael Costa, who has not only done so much for these triennial meetings, but has composed two oratorios for them, or of Sir Julius Benedict, who conferred lustre on the Festival of 1870 by the production of his St. Peter. It was also regretted that not one of those sterling English ballads—Dibdin's nautical ballads, for example—was put down for Mr. Sims Reeves, who has caught their spirit so thoroughly, and sings them with such genuine feeling. Nevertheless, such excellent service was rendered by the artists we have named in contributing materially towards the success of the new cantatas of Signor Schira and Signor Randegger, to say nothing of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's oratorio in the morning, that it would, perhaps, have been hard to tax them with further novelties.

Digitized by Google

While exempted from going into a detailed description of familiar matters, it is but fair to state that Mdlle. Emma Albani, Mr. Gye's newest prima donna, had just as favourable a reception here as at the Norwich Festival of 1872. It was the young Canadian lady's first appearance in Birmingham, and the Birmingham amateurs welcomed her with hearty enthusiasm. In the course of the evening concerts she gave three of her Italian operatic airs—the scena of the madness from Lucia di Lammermoor (flute, Mr. Radcliff), "Ah che infelice," from Donizetti's Ugo Conte de Parigi, and "Oh non credea mirarti," from La Sonnambula, besides "The Last Rose of Summer" and "Robin Adair," singing her very best, and making an impression which resulted on each occasion in loud "recalls," and on four occasions in encores not to be declined. Mdlle. Albani may be said to have thus easily won the (musical) freedom of the town.

The Duke of Edinburgh having left Birmingham, accompanied by the Earl of Shrewsbury, the duties of President were undertaken by the Mayor, who at the last performances of sacred music appeared in the presidential chair. On this occasion the morning programme was like the programme of the evening concerts, "Miscellaneous"—consisting of Spohr's well-known cantata, God, Thou art great (not, by the way, too well known at Birmingham, where Spohr has never been rated at his worth); "Angels, ever bright and fair," sung by Mdlle. Albani with the same success as at Norwich; Haydn's superb "Imperial Mass;" two other posthumous works of Rossini—"Ave Maria," for chorus, orchestra, and organ, and a double chorus, "Cantemus," with organ accompaniment (Mr. Stimpson, organist of the Town Hall); and last, and best of all, excerpts from Israel in Egypt. In Spohr's cantata the solo singers were Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli, and Mr. Vernon Rigby; in Haydn's Mass, Mesdames Sherrington and Patey, Mr. Cummings and Signor Foli; in the selection from Israel, Madame Patey, Signor Foli, Messrs. Santley and Sims Reeves. All went well. The Mayor, exercising the traditional privilege of his post, and seeing the inclination of the audience, waved his book for a repetition of "Angels, ever bright and fair," and also of "The enemy said I will pursue," after both of which, but especially after the latter, which Mr. Reeves never sang more finely, the restrictions against applause were disregarded. The wish, however, was in neither instance gratified. "The Lord is a Man of War" (Mr. Santley and Signor Foli) produced its accustomed effect; and the choruses were all admirably given. The additional accompaniments were those of Sir Michael Costa, who was of course conductor. In the evening a performance of Judas Maccabæus (also with Sir Michael's additional accompaniments), in which all the principal singers, except Mdlles. Albani and Trebelli, took part, attracted an enormous crowd; and, with the National Anthem, brought the Festival, the most prosperous on record, to an end. How successful this meeting has been may be gathered from the subjoined statement, comparing the results of 1870 with those of 1873.—

| | 1870. | | 1873. | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Persons present. | Receipts. | Persons present. | Receipts. |
| Tuesday ... ... | 4,429 ... | £4,530 8 3 | ... 3,480 ... | £3,764 7 5 |
| Wednesday ... ... | 2,100 ... | 1,681 4 9 | ... 3,304 ... | 3,208 0 1 |
| Thursday ... ... | 3,930 ... | 3,842 13 5 | ... 4,638 ... | 4,529 9 4 |
| Friday ... ... | 4,102 ... | 3,302 11 4 | ... 3,987 ... | 3,279 7 9 |
| | 14,561 | £13,356 17 9 | 15,409 | £14,781 4 7 |
| Tickets, £5 5s.... | 74 ... | 388 10 0 | ... 97 ... | 509 5 0 |
| A schemes ... | — ... | 385 11 6 | ... — ... | 370 0 0 |
| | 14,635 | £14,130 19 3 | 15,506 | £15,660 9 7 |

Total increase this year, £1,529 10s. 4d.

THE DAILY ORCHESTRAL PERFORMANCE AT THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

"The perseverance of the directors of these concerts"—writes the Globe—"is at last beginning to meet with its reward, and their excellence to find public recognition. A feature of the concerts has been Mr. Cusins' pianoforte concerto in A minor. Of this work we spoke in high terms on its production at the Philharmonic. Subsequent opportunities of studying it enabled us to endorse our first impressions very confidently. Some of the subjects are fresh as well as beautiful; and not only are the several movements coherent, but the work, as a whole, is really a concerto for the pianoforte, not a symphony with a pianoforte part. But our business just now is not with the work, but its execution. This was entrusted on Saturday to a very young lady—apparently not yet half through her teens—Miss Jessie Morison, a pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes. Seldom, irrespective of the age of the performer, have we heard a more satisfactory performance. Miss Morison has evidently mastered the mechanical parts of her art at the only time they can be mastered, in early youth. The consciousness of having done this leaves her at full liberty to deal with those more subtle parts of musical interpretation which are alike beyond the reach of imperfect mechanism or insufficient sensibility. She possesses, too, and has evidently cultivated, that precious gift to all, memory. She played the entire work without book. Should Miss Morison's studies be carried on as they have been so far, she must in a few years take a position among the first pianists, foreign or English."

Digitized by Google

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

(From the "Times.")

The production of an oratorio from the pen of an English composer, and of two secular cantatas by distinguished Italian musicians long resident in England, will give historical interest to the Birmingham Festival of 1873. All three were successful, and legitimately so; but, as a composition of magnitude and elaborate development, Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Light of the World naturally takes precedence. The plan of this work has already been described, and the argument printed in full. To criticise its musical treatment in technical detail is not our present intention; nor would it be fair, after a single hearing, to summarily pronounce judgment upon the result of some years' earnest thought and labour. That the oratorio will be heard in London not long hence can hardly admit of a doubt. Unaided by the fact that Mr. Sullivan has through previous efforts deservedly won a foremost position among the most eminent and popular composers of the day, its merits alone would suffice to insure that distinction. Eli, Naaman, and St. Peter have all been given in London, as well as at the Birmingham Festival, to which we owe the production of so many compositions of importance, not a few of which are likely to survive; and one of which, after nearly thirty years of probation in the British Isles, in Germany, and in America, is as fresh and healthy as when it first came forth, delighting every one with a soul for harmony, no less than every one who believes that the historical events and oracular prophecies of Holy Writ may be used to excellent purpose by a gifted musician inspired with a reverence for their truth and symbolic meaning. Not, however, to speak of Elijah, which, "like some serene and unapproached star," shines apart, the other three works we have named having been introduced to the capital, the London public has fair claim to be introduced to The Light of the World, and will in all probability expect and ask for it. Mr. Sullivan may possibly contemplate modifying certain parts, abridging others, and, by the aid of condensation, bring the incidents closer together. Upon this subject it would be superfluous to dwell, the composer being himself the best judge of what to do and how to do it. It is to be wished that he may not revise too much; for the habit of reconsidering things accomplished, instead of entering at once upon some new task, is, if too frequently indulged in, hardly to be praised without qualification.

On the whole, in our opinion, the book upon which The Light of the World is constructed requires little but the excision of certain portions to make it an unexceptionable book of its kind; but for this again Mr. Sullivan is alone answerable. When Mendelssohn, who, though occasionally taking counsel from others, was chiefly responsible for the books of his oratorios, made alterations of more or less import in Elijah, after its first performance, in 1846, at the Birmingham Festival, he was his own critic, and acted accordingly. No one had either publicly or privately suggested such alterations; but, when the oratorio was reproduced, the changes Mendelssohn had devised were universally recognized as good. Mr. Sullivan will doubtless exercise similar discretion; and, as his oratorio is really in want of little else than curtailment, the task will not impose upon him any very serious expense of thought or unreasonable amount of toil.

As it stands now, The Light of the World is full of interest from the beginning of the first chorus to the end of the last. With commendable reticence, its composer has endeavoured, as much as practicable, to steer clear of Handel, Bach, and Mendelssohn; though, occasionally, the influence of those masters (as well as that of the elder madrigal writers) is apparent—which, the nature of his theme considered, is not surprising, and, indeed, was almost inevitable. Handel is most evident in the "Pastoral Symphony," separating the opening chorus from "Bethlehem," the scene of the Nativity, and in a good deal that follows—perilous ground to tread upon, but ground upon which Mr. Sullivan has trodden with firm sobriety. Bach and Mendelssohn are hinted at slightly, here and there, especially in the scene at the Synagogue ("Nazareth"), where, as in the Passion music, not to mention St. Paul, Elijah, and Christus, the people respond to the soloist in brief snatches of chorus, which increase in fury and impetuosity as they follow one upon the other. Here, nevertheless, the single voice does not represent Pontius Pilate, but Christ, as preacher and admonisher. The scene is throughout well conceived and powerfully written. The trial of Jesus before Pilate and the Crucifixion, which would have been still more perilous ground, are avoided, the circumstances being succinctly related in a narrative chorus, after the manner of the Greek plays—a well-imagined and well-carried-out device. To the profound feeling of reverence with which Mr. Sullivan has musically illustrated all the passages relating to the Saviour, and in which the Saviour is supposed to hold forth, no intelligent listener can be insensible. It has been argued that the oratorio contains too much slow music, which occasionally engenders monotony. This is in some measure true, the subject, or rather certain features of it, rendering any other kind of treatment impossible. At the same time, it must be allowed that judicious compression can set all in proper order, and help to exhibit the remaining parts of the work with twice the power and thrice the brightness. The final chorus to the scene at Bethlehem, "I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed"—a grand chorus in the strictest sense of the phrase—is wonderfully impressive as it occurs, but would be still more impressive if it came earlier.

Not to enter further into minute particulars, what has been stated comprises absolutely all there is to say in critical disparagement of The Light of the World—a work which we cannot but regard as an honour to the English school of music, and, take it for all in all (The Woman of Samaria of Sir Sterndale Bennett being rather a sacred cantata than an oratorio proper), the best oratorio for which we are indebted to an English musician. In consenting to deal with such a theme Mr. Sullivan undertook a by no means easy task; he brought to it, however, an amount of intelligence, feeling, and musical acquirement which enabled him to accomplish it successfully.

There is in The Light of the World greater breadth, a richer flow of melody, more ingenious contrivance, and more fertile invention than we have remarked in his preceding works—though in many these qualities are observable. The orchestration throughout shows a complete acquaintance with all the instruments, a facility of combining them in harmonious groups no less than of displaying them in solo passages for special points of effect. Not the least noticeable piece in the oratorio is the introductory orchestral prelude to the scene at "Jerusalem" (Part II.), meant to pourtray in musical tones the troubles and dissensions created at Jerusalem by the presence, the teaching, and miracles of Christ. In the art of writing for voices Mr. Sullivan has acquired equal proficiency. To single out one example, the peroration to Part I., beginning with a chorus of children, "Hosanna to the Son of David," followed by a soprano air, "Tell ye the Daughters of Zion," other solos, and a chorus of men—"Blessed be the kingdom of our Father, David"—and terminating with "Hosanna in the highest," for full chorus and full orchestra, may be cited unhesitatingly as a masterpiece of construction and effect. This movement, or chain of movements, constitutes, perhaps, the finest number in the work; but there is much more of the kind to which attention may be called when opportunity offers. The efficient execution of The Light of the World by chorus, orchestra, and all engaged in its performance, not forgetting the principal singers—Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Messrs. Sims Reeves and Santley, with Messrs. Cummings and Briggs of Windsor, in smaller, though by no means insignificant parts—as also the enthusiastic reception of the oratorio and its composer, was recorded last week.

A few words yet remain to be said about The Lord of Burleigh and Fridolin, the respective new cantatas of Signors Schira and Randegger.

---

New Orleans.—M. Gueymard, the well known tenor, formerly of the Grand Opera, Paris, will shortly appear here.

Paris.—One day last week, Le Prophète was to be given at the Grand Opera, with Mdlle. Bloch as Fidès. Suddenly the lady was taken ill, and no member of the company knew the part. In this extremity, the manager had recourse to Mdlle. Leavington, a young lady born in Paris, of American parents, and a pupil of Duprez. She is a perfect novice, but she went through the trying ordeal most successfully.—There is a talk of building a new theatre, to be called the Théâtre de la Porte-Montmartre. M. Charles Monselet proposes to get up for the purpose a joint stock company, with a capital of a million francs in a thousand shares, of a thousand francs each.

Digitized by Google

THE WELSH NATIONAL EISTEDDFOD AT MOLD.

Wednesday morning week gave some little promise of a fine day. Alas! how short-lived was the hope. No sooner had the Gorsedd on Bailey Hill commenced than the rain began to sprinkle. Soon it poured, and soon it fell in torrents, and continued to do so for several hours. The processions that had paraded the streets were absent; no doubt they were drying their smart garments. The bands were silent, it was too wet for the Men of Harlech to march, even the seamen with "ducks" so white, and missing legs, who, yesterday, made the air hideous with their howlings, refused to turn out—they declined drowning. Still the ancient Bards stood round their mystic ring and performed their solemn rites. The Bards and Ovids have adopted a new and strange costume this year. They have assumed the university gown and trencher cap in varied colours, some blue and some green. They have either parodied the scholastic dress or the universities copied and adopted some ages ago their costume. They certainly look as if they had clandestinely procured academic robes and dyed them in outrageous and hideous hues. Two learned Bards, Pencerdd Caerludd (Mr. Willert Beale) and Pencerdd Towey (Mr. Brinley Richards), declined to wear the strange-looking garments; by so doing they broke that uniformity so desirable even in ridiculous ceremonies. These gentlemen looked ill at ease sometimes at the Gorsedd; they gazed so fixedly at the pieces of rock on which their right feet were resting, that fears were entertained they would, Polyphemus like, hurl them at the head of the gentle Acis that was boring them with a long-winded harangue in the Welsh tongue. Apart from the ludicrous aspect of the Gorsedd, and doubting any utility or significance in the ceremony, still the antiquity which excites so much curiosity cannot be questioned. It is said the institution is as old as the period of Prydain ab Aedd Mawr, who lived about a thousand years before the Christian era. Without attempting to fix the date of its origin, it undoubtedly may be received as a relic of that mysterious Druidical system which once ruled the inhabitants of these islands. An undeviating law in the holding of a Gorsedd is that it must be held "in the face of the sun, in the eye of the light." The Eisteddfod is a branch that sprung from the Gorsedd, and, consequently, of more recent origin. The word Eisteddfod means a "sitting," or "session." At one time it possessed political and magisterial power; the Saxon conquerors made restrictions and inflicted heavy punishment upon the Bards if they wandered beyond the regions of pure minstrelsy. The Eisteddfod, however, has survived persecution; it has had a vitality in Wales that neither the sword nor the pen could destroy. After the Gorsedd on Wednesday morning week, the Bards, as is their custom, went in procession to the Eisteddfod building, where, in spite of wet, a large multitude were awaiting them. Some few persons, however, were leaving the town in disgust at the discomforts the bad weather had caused them. At the back of the pavilion was seen the celebrated authoress, Mrs. Brown, looking the very picture of desolation. Poor lady! her pattens and umbrella were of no avail against Welsh wet. She had been betrayed to venture so far from the Borough Road to gather some amusement for her many admirers; but the fun she found in Mold was as unintelligible and lugubrious as the language. How disconsolate she looked as she hummed "The March of the Men of Harlech" in a minor key some three octaves low. How anxiously she was awaiting the train to take her back to the Borough. Photographers, too, were seen packing up their implements and fleeing the place; preferring the bottom of the nearest coal-pit to a town upon which the sun never shone. They should have remained a day or two longer, then Mold might not have proved to be altogether an aquarium. At the commencement of the morning meeting, disappointment and regret were caused by the absence of the president for the day, Sir Watkin Wynn, Bart., M.P. This gentleman is very popular in North Wales; his geniality, plain speaking, and common sense render him agreeable, pleasant, and instructive. Mr. Osborne Morgan, M.P., undertook his duties. A better substitute could scarcely be found. His speaking is marked by the ease of a practical orator, and he so well knows the temperament of his audience, that he can at all times supply them with that class of rhetoric they can understand and enjoy. The great event of the day, and of the Eisteddfod, was the chairing of the winner of the chair prize; the subject being an awde (ode) on Caractacus in Rome. The Rev. R. Williams, of Anglesea, proved to be the fortunate gentleman; he had previously taken four similar honours, he is, therefore, not only well known, but also extremely popular, as was evident when he was escorted by his brother Bards to the chair that secured him the bardic honours of the year. It was the most imposing scene of the week when, amidst the acclamations of the people, the congratulations of his brethren, and the triumphant shout of the choir singing "See the conquering hero comes," the rev. gentleman took the highest seat of honour Welsh minstrelsy can bestow. Miss Mary Davis was greeted by Mr. Brinley Richards as the coming prima donna of Wales. This young lady, by her sweet voice and modesty of manner, has secured the admiration and affection of her country people. Much she may have to learn, but she has to follow in the footsteps of Miss Edith Wynne, and, like her, she may some future day secure the hearty approbation and genuine popularity which that gifted lady now worthily monopolizes. Prizes were awarded for works on many and varied subjects: for "the best love song," and for an essay on "the principles of cattle feeding," for pennillion singing, and the best brass band; and Sir Robert Cunliffe, Bart., M.P., arrived in time to say that he had travelled all the way from Scotland to be present. He did not add that a general election was impending.

The evening concert was remarkable for the excellent singing of the Mold choir, under the conduct of Mr. Allen Jones. They sang selections from the Messiah so well, with such power, accuracy, and heartiness, as to prompt the hope that no future Eisteddfod will be held without a work by the great master being performed in its entirety. Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Lewis Thomas were the artists who took part in Handel's immortal work. Messrs. Skeaf and Harris were the accompanists, and Miss Waugh played with remarkable talent. Thursday week proved by far the most successful day. It received the patronage of the clerk of the weather. The sun shone, the town no longer looked as if it were sunken in the depths of murky waters. The country looked beautiful enough to charm even the photographers that left it in such chagrin. The Bards at the Gorsedd had no need of their umbrellas; and the trains poured crowds upon crowds into the town. Thanks to the sun, the financial success of the Eisteddfod is secured. The president of the day was the Right Honourable Lord Richard Grosvenor, M.P., who made a short but highly effective speech. He made especial reference to the surpassing value of music as a means for elevating the intellectual and moral tone of the people, and that it was his opinion the practice of choral singing in North Wales would do more to eradicate bad and pernicious habits, such as intoxication, than any other means which could possibly be employed. One of the most interesting features of the morning's proceeding was the competitive trial of choirs for a £20 prize open to Welsh Societies of not less than forty voices, the test being Handel's "Worthy is the Lamb" and "Amen" choruses. Five choirs competed, but one, namely, the Newtown (Montgomeryshire) choir is deserving of especial mention for its culture; in this respect they were not excelled by any of the other choirs. The prize, however, was awarded to the Birkenhead choir who sang capitally in time and with great fire and precision. The only matter for consideration is how a choir located at Birkenhead can be considered Welsh. An unfortunate episode threatened towards the close of the morning meeting to disturb the concourse of sweet sounds. A prize of £40 for the best rendering of the chorus, "Rise up, arise," had been offered. The Birkenhead choir claimed a right to compete, but the other choirs objected, and declared if the exact conditions stated in the programme were not observed they would all retire. A terrible row was at one time imminent, but all happily ended by the Birkenhead folk retiring. The competition followed, and the first prize was awarded to the Newtown (Montgomeryshire) choir, who richly deserved it. The distinctive feature of the evening concert was a new work from the pen of Mr. Brinley Richards. This gentleman exerted himself with unflagging energy during the week. His great popularity, founded as it is upon amiability of character, and high artistic culture, is well deserved, and it is heartily expressed by his countrymen, north and south. Concerning the merits of the composition, here performed for the first time, a future occasion will afford an opportunity for critical remarks. Suffice to say it was received with great acclamations, and that it was sung with heart and voice by the festival choir. The artists engaged on the previous occasion were all successful again. The people are never tired of them. They encore if they have the slenderest chance of another song. The good folk of Mold, no doubt, are hospitable; all Welsh people are. Their generosity this week has been manifested by their throwing open to illustrious strangers all the hotels and taverns of the town, where they could procure everything they could possibly wish by paying a little more only than the usual charges.

Digitized by Google

At the morning meeting on Friday week Lord Mostyn was unable to preside in consequence of domestic bereavement. Captain Pennant was chairman in his stead, and delivered an interesting and manly address. The chief matters of interest were the choral competitions, the £50 prize won by the Birkenhead Cambrian Choral Society, a second prize to the Carnarvon Society, and an interesting competition for triple harp concert was well attended.

L. T.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

August 27th, 1873.

When a doctor goes to visit a patient, and after a few minutes conversation with him prescribes the "mixture as before," it is possible the said patient is not so satisfied as if the M.D. had knocked him about and expatiated with him on all the human ills contained in Pandora's box (and out of it too). Let me then sum up the mixture of last week, always supposing I write Rep: mixt: in the shape of Mignon, La Fille du Regiment, and La Juive, with a pill taken three times because it did so much good in the course of last week; the name of it being La Fille de Mdme. Angot.

Joking apart, the above opera was produced here on Saturday night with such success that M. Clement was forced to reproduce it on Monday—making an extra night. Clairette was entrusted to Mdlle. Mey, who acted and sang with spirit, two very essential qualifications for such a rôle. Mdlle. Noaille undertook the part of Mdlle. Lange with her usual good singing and acting, the latter being, perhaps, too good—I mean too ladylike for such a character. The duet which begins "Jours fortunés de notre enfance où nous disions: maman, papa," and in the course of which, with arms a-kimbo, they "act" in acting "le ton de leurs parents." It went splendidly, and brought down the house.

Our second tenor, M. Descamps, took the rôle of Ange Pitou. His singing was accurate, and his voice, which I have not had much opportunity of judging before, is of good quality and compass. He looked Ange Pitou to the life, being a young man of prepossessing appearance, and last, not least, he knows how to act as well as sing. M. Cifotelli (fils) as Pomponnet, and M. Kinnel as Larivaudière, also deservedly gained applause for their singing and acting. When I sum up by saying that all the choruses, especially the now well-known conspirators' chorus, went well, having been rehearsed for six weeks previously; that the orchestra was what it always is under the bâton of M. Champenois; and that the mise-en-scène, costumes, and "get-up" altogether were good, I think you will agree with me that a crammed house on three nights last week was not astonishing.

Though I dismissed the repetitions as "the mixture as before," I think it due to some of the artists who took part therein to notice them. In the first place, in Mignon, let me mention with praise the duo when the heroine meets Lothario (her real father) —"Oh! oui j'ai souffert!" so well rendered by Mdlle. Mey and M. Larrivée; and in Act II., M. Bresson's singing of "Adieu, Mignon." In the next place, I must specially let you know of some of the caste in La Juive last night. The part of Le Juif was taken by M. Cazabon, that of La Juive by Mdlle. Noaille. M. Cazabon, described in the bills as a "fort tenor," is a fort tenor, and is well-known in France as such. He possesses a rich, mellow voice of good compass, his upper register being especially good, and he sings with ease. His chest notes it would puzzle many other tenors to "take," except as "head-notes;" added to this, he is an actor, and therefore in such a character as that of Eleazar he could not have come before an audience under better auspices. In Act I., finale, "Oh ma fille cherie," was deservedly re-demanded, and in Act IV., finale, "Dieu m'eclaire!" was fine, indeed, superb. Mdlle. Noaille I have often noticed in your columns, and so have only to record that her rich voice told uncommonly well as La Juive.

And now for concerts!—On the 22rd there was a grand concert at the Etablissement, "avec le concours de plusieurs artistes." Partie Vocale.—Mdlle. Montibert, du Conservatoire, élève de Madame Pauline Viardot; M. Devillier, ténor, a native of Boulogne, pupil of Rubini. Musique Instrumentale.—Mdlle. Boulanger, violoniste, premier prix du Conservatoire (1873) élève de M. Alard; and M. F. Dulcken, pianiste, compositeur. The "Orpheons" of Boulogne also gave their aid; and the programme was varied and well carried out. On the 24th, a concert almost similar as regards artists, but, of course, with a change of programme, attracted a crowd at the same Etablissement, though not at the usual hour of 4 p.m., 8.30 being judiciously selected by M. Spiers, the manager, on account of the Regatta which took place that day from 1 p.m. till 7 p.m. I will not detail the incidents of "Les Régates sur la Liane" to you, of how Alphonse "paddled his own canoe" too near the Committee boat during his paddling, and, consequently, got enveloped in the enormous tricolour (floating partly in the water) astern, and had to swim ashore, leaving his canoe and paddle to the mercy of the semi-saline billows of the Liane. Nor shall I enlarge upon how many Boulogne "amateurs" won races, especially when, as there was nearly a dead heat between the Boulogne and Amiens crews, (the former leading by a NECK—I mean half-a-length), the judge's boat went to meet them!

Afternoon Concerts always the same. It has been complained a great deal of—the loud conversation which goes on incessantly during these little matinée musicales. Why should persons who wish to talk come in at all, or, if they wish to do so, is there not time between the performance of the five pieces which constitute the same? Some years ago, I had to comment upon the ladies going to the Crystal Palace so early on a Saturday to get to the front of the gallery and there work and chat. I remarked "Tit-Tat-To" all the first row?

The new Commissioners of the Museum at Boulogne have got well to work, and hope to bring out a thoroughly good catalogue of the valuable collection therein contained, besides making many alterations and improvements as soon as they possibly can do so.

S. C.

MILAN.—Signor Petrella's opera, Giovanna di Napoli, was produced at the Scala on the 23rd August. The principal parts were sustained by Mdlle. Pasqua, Signorina Conti-Faroni, Signori Cellada, Burgio, and Padovani. The composer was called on fifteen times during the evening.—At the Teatro Dal Verme, Signora Galletti has been drawing excellent houses in the Favorita. The baritone, Signor Buti, produced a favourable impression. The tenor, Signor Sigelli, has not been so fortunate. Before he had sung, all the papers praised him up to the skies; they now all unite in running him down. However, he has naturally a fine voice, a real tenor voice, and, if he only studies and lives long enough, will some day make his mark. M. Gounod's Faust has lately been performed at the same Theatre, with Signora Casanova Cepeda, in the principal female part. The part of Mephistofeles was sustained by Signor Feitlinger. What seemed to strike the public most about this gentleman was the colour of his dress: red from head to foot. The character is generally so dressed in Germany, but not in Italy. The papers make merry with poor Signor Feitlinger. One says that he resembles a devil dipped in tomata sauce. Another remarks that he looks like a boiled cray-fish, adding that no one could doubt that he came from the infernal regions, or—had just emerged from the saucepan.

DRAGONETTI.—Dragonetti was an original of the purest water. Moscheles says of him: "In his 'salon' in Leicester Square, he has collected a large number of various kinds of dolls; amongst them is a negress. When visitors are announced, he politely receives them, and says that this or that young lady will make room for them; he also asks his intimate acquaintances whether his favourite dolls look better or worse since their last visit, and similar absurdities. He is a terrible snuff-taker, helping himself out of a gigantic box, and he has an immense and varied collection of snuff-boxes. The most curious part of him is his language—a regular jargon, in which there is a mixture of his native Bergamese, bad French, and still worse English."—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A. & P.—M. Pierre Schott, who recently died at Ixelles, near Brussels, was a brother of M. Schott of Mayence and London, but was not connected with either house as a partner. Mr. Wolf is the active partner in the London house.

F. J. F.—Miss Linda Scates, the accomplished pianist, formerly a student at the Royal Academy of Music, is one of the professors of the pianoforte at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham.

De Slater Bang.—It is the old story over again. "Tempora mutantur," it is true, but the persons concerned are the same, and so are their dirty tricks.

El Dorado.—Paved with Gold was written by Augustus Mayhew—one of the "Brothers"—single-handed. "You wish there were a few more novels of the same sort." We dare say you do. You are not the only person who wishes so.

Pennington Lobb.—1. Too late, at any rate for this number. 2. The distance from Marathon to Athens is about forty miles. 3. Meyerbeer, in 1847.

MARRIAGES.

On the 27th ult., at the Hanover Square Rooms, Hermann Sternberg, eldest son of Louis Sternberg of Brussels, to Lina, second daughter of W. Selim, Esq., of Upper Bedford Place.

On the 30th ult., at St. Clement's Danes, Strand, Lovell Phillips of Clement's Inn, son of the late W. Lovell Phillips, to Isabel Annie, only daughter of Alfred Cutler, of Willis' Road, N.W.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers.—The Office of the Musical World is at Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

In consequence of press of matter, it has been impossible to insert several articles which are in type. They will appear next week.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 6, 1873.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From our Special Correspondent.)

Birmingham, August 28th, 1873.

ALTHOUGH I purpose reserving statistics till the close, it may not be uninteresting to state that the receipts and donations for the first two days have exceeded by £760 the amount taken in the corresponding period three years ago, and as all the places are gone for the remaining performances, a net result of something like £7,000 for the General Hospital may not unreasonably be looked for. Satisfactory as this is for the charity, there is another feature which will be no less gratifying to the musical mind, and that is that Mendelssohn's Elijah has rivalled the Messiah in power of attraction, the whole of the places on Tuesday having been converted into reserved seats at a guinea each, a fact of which I have only recently been made aware. To-day the case is the same, and many whose names were put in the ballot-box have had their expectations terribly disappointed, receiving, instead of the anticipated tickets, a letter expressing regret that it was out of the power of the Committee to comply with their wish, the applications far out-numbering the capability of accommodation in the Hall.

I append the scheme of the second evening concert:—

PART I.

| | |
|---|---|
| Symphony, (C minor) ... ... ... ... | Beethoven. |
| Song, "Peaceful slumber"—Madame Patey ... | Randegger. |
| Duo, "Tornami a dir" (Don Pasquale)—Madame L. Sherrington and Mr. Rigby ... ... ... | Donizetti. |
| Air, "Ah che infelice" (Ugo Conte di Parigi)—Mdlle. Albani ... ... ... ... ... | Donizetti. |
| Trio, "Soave sia il vento" (Cosi fan Tutte)—Madame L. Sherrington, Madame Patey and Signor Foli ... ... ... ... ... ... | Mozart. |
| Air, "Se tanto in ira" (Linda)—Mr. Sims Reeves | Donizetti. |
| Duo, "Ebben a te ferisci" (Semiramide)—Mdlle. Tietjens and Mdme. Trebelli ... ... ... | Rossini. |
| National Hymn (First time of performance in England)—Mr. Santley and Chorus ... ... | Rossini. |

PART II.

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "St. John the Baptist" ... ... ... | G. A. Macfarren. |
| Song, "Ernani involami" (Ernani) Mdlle. Tietjens | Verdi. |
| Duo, "Bell' immago" (Semiramide)—Mdme. Patey and Signor Foli ... ... ... ... ... | Rossini. |
| Air, "Va dit elle" (Roberto il Diavolo)—Madame L. Sherrington ... ... ... ... ... | Meyerbeer. |
| Duo, "Quando di sangue tinto" (Belisario)—Mr. Cummings and Signor Foli ... ... ... | Donizetti. |
| Air, "Voi che sapete" (Nozze di Figaro)—Mdme. Trebelli ... ... ... .. ... ... | Mozart. |
| Ballad, "Robin Adair"—Mdlle. Albani | |
| Air, "Un aura amorosa" (Cosi fan Tutte)—Mr. Rigby ... ... ... ... ... ... | Mozart. |
| Trio, "Le faccio un inchino" (Il Matrimonio Segreto)—Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. L. Sherrington, and Madame Trebelli ... ... ... ... | Cimarosa. |
| Romance, "Just as of old"—Mr. W. H. Cummings ... ... ... ... ... | Cummings. |
| Sestett, "Sola sola" (Don Giovanni)—Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Sherrington, Madame Trebelli, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli ... | Mozart. |
| Overture, "Seige of Corinth" ... ... ... | Rossini. |

The performance of Beethoven's C minor Symphony was in every way worthy the splendid band and its accomplished conductor; and in recording my own opinion that it has rarely, if ever, been so magnificently rendered, I but echo the sentiment expressed by every competent judge, and endorsed by the reception it met with at the hands of the audience. For five Festivals no symphony has been heard, and even upon this occasion it was a matter of serious debate whether any such work should form part of the programme, but happily the classical advocates prevailed, and that they were right in their views has been proved beyond a doubt. Having now established a precedent it is to be hoped that henceforth one or other of the great symphonies may be included, and the taste of Birmingham for what is best and noblest in music may never again be open to question. Sound judgment was exercised in selecting No. 5 for the experiment; for, with the exception of the "Pastoral," not one of the immortal nine is so well-known or so thoroughly appreciated; and as it occupies but little more than half-an-hour, even those who do not care for classical music (in the same sense that an individual whose literary tastes have hardly got beyond "Who killed Cock Robin?" or "Old Mother Hubbard she went to the cupboard," could hardly be regarded as a competent judge of Shakespeare's Hamlet) could scarcely complain, as I have heard them do at times, that there was "too much of that precious fiddling," and at the end of a symphony remark, "Well, thank God that's over." Poor Jullien, who was the first to give the masses an opportunity of hearing the best music at a ridiculously cheap rate, found his account in the classical evenings, and the symphonies of Beethoven, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, never failed to attract the shilling-paying public; while Mr. Arthur Chappell's most constant supporters are to be numbered amongst those who, week after week, pay their twelve pence for the pleasure of listening to the chamber compositions of the great masters at the Monday Popular Concerts. The only novelties yesterday evening were the "National Hymn" of Rossini for baritone and chorus, said to have been written for the late Emperor of the French, and Mr. Macfarren's overture to St. John the Baptist. The solo in the former work was entrusted to Mr. Santley, who did full justice to its broad, stirring melody, and, as the instrumental is no less taking than the voice part, the result was proportionate, and much applause greeted its termination. If M. Rivière be wise in his generation, I would commend the work to his notice, for the whole thing is so bright, tuneful, and catching that I feel confident it would prove a great success at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts. Mdlle. Albani strengthened the favourable impression she had created the previous evening, and was encored both in the air of Donizetti and the old ballad, "Robin Adair," the latter being given with charming taste and expression. In Mr. Cummings's romance, "Just as of old," composition and singing appeared equally to the taste of the audience. Au reste, the selection comprising more or less familiar pieces, and equally well-known executants, beyond stating the fact that the listeners appeared pleased, and that the singers did their best, there is little, if anything to record,

The Duke of Edinburgh, who departed for Ingestre with the Earl of Shrewsbury yesterday afternoon, was so gratified by the performances he had attended, and no less so by the reception he had met with, that a telegram was received later in the day expressing the intention of his Royal Highness to be present at the Messiah this morning, as well as at the concert this evening, for Signor Randegger's cantata, Fridolin, which is alike creditable to the Duke, the Festival, and the town of Birmingham. With the exception of Mr. Cummings and Mdlle. Albani all the principal singers have taken part in the Messiah; and, although the weather has been unpropitious, frequent heavy showers having fallen at intervals, the success of the third day of the meeting has been in no way interfered with, even if some of the elegantly dressed ladies may have suffered somewhat in their attire during the sortie for luncheon, and after the end of the oratorio.

Digitized by Google

—o—

August 29.

A more thoroughly legitimate or completely deserved success than attended Signor Randegger's new cantata, Fridolin, last evening, has rarely been achieved, audience and musicians alike agreeing in this opinion. As a composer of popular pieces such as Ben e ridicolo, I Naviganti, and other light morceaux, Signor Randegger has enjoyed a certain distinction for some time past, but it was not until the elaborate scena, entitled Medea, appeared at the Norwich Festival four years since, that the existence of higher qualifications was made manifest, and even then the capacity would seem to have been latent rather than apparent. Last night has, however, effectually set any question of the kind at rest, and Signor Randegger's position as a musician is firmly established beyond a doubt.

Fridolin, or the Message to the Forge, is a dramatic cantata, the words of which have been written by Madame Rudersdorff. The original of the story is said to be either a French or a German legend, but the source from which it has been derived for the present occasion is a ballad by Schiller, "Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer." The period of the action is supposed to be about the year 1400. The dramatis personæ are Waldemar, Count of Saverne; Eglantine, his Countess; Fridolin, page to the Countess; Hubert, squire to the Count; with huntsmen, hand-maidens to the Countess, peasants, and smiths. The Argument is thus given in the preface to the pianoforte score of the work:—Fridolin and Hubert are in the service of the Count of Saverne. Hubert, aspiring to win the affections of his beautiful mistress, conceives a violent hatred of Fridolin, whom he regards as an obstacle in his path. Taking advantage of Fridolin's loyal devotion to the Countess, Hubert excites the jealousy of the Count, and prompts a stern revenge. The Count forthwith writes to some mechanic serfs, ordering that whoever comes asking a certain question shall be at once thrown into their furnace. Fridolin, innocent of wrong and unconscious of danger, receives the "message to the forge;" but, ere setting out, he waits upon his mistress for such commands as she might have to give. The Countess desires him to enter the chapel he would pass on his way and offer up a prayer for her. Fridolin obeys, and thus saves his own life; but vengeance overtakes the traitor Hubert, who, going to the forge to learn whether the plot has succeeded, himself asks the fatal question, "Is obeyed your lord's command?" and himself becomes the victim. Fridolin subsequently appears, and is about to perish likewise, when the Count and Countess, between whom explanations have taken place, arrive on the scene, to preserve the innocent and to learn the fate of the guilty.

Such a subject as this admits of eminently dramatic treatment, and Signor Randegger has musically illustrated the poem in a way which indicates how thoroughly he has been imbued with its spirit and meaning; indeed, with but little extension of the plan, and slight addition to the numbers, the result would be a highly effective two-act drama instead of a (no less effective) cantata. The principal characters were sustained by Mr. Santley as Waldemar, Count of Saverne; Eglantine, his Countess, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington; Fridolin (the "pious youth" alluded to in the prologue), Page to the Countess, Mr. Cummings; and Hubert, Squire to the Count, Signor Foli; and that these artists respectively did their utmost to contribute to the success of the work, and sang in a manner which left nothing to be desired, will be quite understood, while the band and chorus executed their task so thoroughly con amore, and with such brilliancy, precision, and delicate attention to light and shade that, had it been the twentieth instead of the first performance, or had there been a dozen instead of one rehearsal (and that late on Monday night, when every one was tired out with a long and trying day's work), it would hardly have been possible for the cantata to have gone better. True, the composer, who, as a matter of course, conducted, displayed as much skill in wielding the bâton as the pen, his beat being firm, clear, and decisive, and never for one moment hesitating or admitting any doubt as to its indication, but the task must have been terribly trying to Signor Randegger who, in addition to the nervousness naturally incidental to the production of a composition of magnitude at a Festival of such importance as that of Birmingham, had the misfortune but a few hours previously to fall in coming from the orchestra, wrenching his ankle terribly; and, although the most skilful surgeon in the place was instantly sent for, and bandages applied, the intense suffering from the part affected was but too plainly apparent in the pained expression and remarkable pallor of the face. However, the mental satisfaction must have been some compensation for the bodily agony, and a night's rest and the first burst of excitement being got over have done their work, and I am glad to be able to report favourable progress.

Of the ten numbers which make up the work, although one and all are more or less effective, the "Chorus of Hunters," encored by acclamation, as well as by the sanction of the President (himself a hunting man), a wondrously graphic and spirited bit of writing; the chorus of handmaidens, "Calmly flow the equal hours," an exquisitely graceful composition, also encored; the elegantly written air for the Countess, "No bliss can be so great;" the animated and picturesque chorus of peasants, "Song is resounding," which has a "go" about it perfectly irresistible; and the forge scene, commencing with the chorus, "Gift of demons, raging fire," produced the greatest impression. As the work is sure to be heard in London ere long, and the same reasons which have prevented my entering into detail with the other novelties still prevail, I must content myself with saying that whether for the voices singly or in combination, Signor Randegger's composition everywhere exhibits the hand of a master, while the instrumentation, charming throughout, is never obtrusive, much less overdone, frequently displaying originality both of thought and treatment, and showing a thorough knowledge of orchestral resources.

The Duke of Edinburgh, who had attended the Messiah in the morning, and who upon entering and leaving the hall was loudly cheered, as well within as without, frequently applauded the cantata; and before leaving Birmingham, which he did the same night, for Balmoral, sent a gracious message to the composer, expressing the great satisfaction he had experienced in listening to the work. Among other distinguished visitors in the patron's gallery were Mr. Arthur Sullivan and Sir Julius Benedict, both of whom being recognised on their entry were received with a round of applause. After what has gone before, it is needless to say that there was a perfect ovation (let those who object to the word find me a better) for the composer, executants and the public vieing with each other in the warmth of their approval.

The second part of the concert was made up as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "William Tell" ... ... ... ... | Rossini. |
| Bolero, "C'est l'Espagne"—Madame Trebelli ... | Offenbach. |
| Recitative, "Then she 'Let some one sing'"—Mdlle. Tietjens ... ... ... ... ... ... | |
| Air, "Tears, idle tears" ... ... ... ... | Oakeley. |
| Air, "Dalla sua pace" (Don Giovanni)—Mr. Rigby | Mozart. |
| Trio, "Break, break"—Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. Trebelli and Mr. Vernon Rigby ... ... ... ... | Anderton. |
| Air, "Oh non credea mirarti" (Sonnambula)—Mdlle. Albani ... ... ... ... ... ... | Bellini. |
| Air, "Non più andrai" (Nozze di Figaro)—Signor Foli | Mozart. |
| Quartett, "Un di se ben rammentomi" (Rigoletto)—Mdlle. Albani, Mdme. Trebelli, Mr. Rigby and Signor Foli... ... ... ... ... ... ... | Verdi. |
| Overture, "Ruy Blas" ... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn. |

I have heard the violoncello opening to Rossini's masterpiece of overture better played than upon this occasion, but there was no lack of applause, and the last movement was given again in answer to general acclamation, as was also the case with Mdlle. Albani, who repeated the "Ah non giunge," the joyous finale to Bellini's ever-popular opera. It was again something like half-past eleven ere the third concert, not remarkably interesting so far as its second division is concerned, was brought to a close. Mr. H. S. Oakeley, to whose song, "Tears, idle tears," Mdlle. Tietjens did full justice, was present, but the result of his fearful accident in Switzerland last year, when a carriage overset and hurled him down a precipice, are but too apparent, and it is to be feared that the lameness from which the Edinburgh Professor now suffers may prove permanent.

Digitized by Google

The weather this week has been most unfortunate, overcast skies, heavy and frequent showers, culminating in a perfect deluge yesterday afternoon, while to-day we have had sometimes gusts and squalls, sometimes drizzles, and at no times pleasant, bright, genial sunshine. Still all seems powerless, and moist though the atmosphere may be, and sorely afflicted as the wearers of the elegant and bright-looking costumes must feel, yet—in the figurative sense, at least—there is nothing like a damper cast on the Festival, for the hall to-day was as crowded as ever, while last night there was assembled the largest audience ever known within its walls.

The name of Spohr has not been seen in a Festival programme here for many years, although it was in contemplation at the meeting of 1870 to have given the work which opened this morning's programme, God Thou art great having been intended for performance on the same day as Sir Julius (then Mr.) Benedict's oratorio of St. Peter was produced. The principal parts were distributed between Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. Trebelli, and Mr. Vernon Rigby; and as the cantata (or hymn) does not present any remarkable difficulties and is tolerably familiar to the musical world at large, beyond stating that it went smoothly, there is little or nothing to record. Next in order followed an "Ave Maria" of Rossini, first time of performance, "by permission of Albert Grant, Esq.," who is said to have purchased the MS. score from the widow of the illustrious composer. Then came the air from Handel's Theodora, "Angels, ever bright and fair," sung with unaffected simplicity by Mdlle. Albani; but the effect was slightly marred by a frequent "vibrato," possibly arising from nervousness in undergoing the "sacred" ordeal. The request of the Mayor (who occupied the presidential chair) for a repetition was wisely disregarded, and Sir Michael Costa lost no more time than was absolutely necessary before proceeding to the fourth item in the scheme, Haydn's Mass, No. 3, familiarly known as "The Imperial," the solos in which were entrusted to the capable hands, or rather voices, of Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Patey, and Sutton, Messrs. Cummings and Foli. At the "Credo" some amongst the audience rose, others followed the example, and soon nearly every one was on his or her feet. At the "Sanctus" some sat down, some remained standing, and by the time that the "Benedictus" was reached, the majority of those present were in a charming state of uncertainty as to what was or was not the correct thing to do. Had there been space to spare, perhaps some might have solved the difficulty by adopting a middle course, and reclining at full length—that is, assuming it would be possible to maintain such an attitude on benches whose very hard wood is but ill-disguised by glazed calico cushions, lined with a substance which, taken in combination with the slipperiness of the covering and the height of the seat, form about as uncomfortable a perch for performances of several hours duration as can be possibly imagined. But, seriously speaking, this standing up during certain passages of a Mass when given, not in a Roman Catholic church as an act of worship, but in a town hall as a concert, which, although of sacred music, cannot by any stretch of the imagination be converted into "divine service," is at once an ostentatious display on the part of some, as well as an absurdity in itself, and if carried to its legitimate conclusion, with the variety of persons of different creeds, would lead to demonstrations of most opposite character, as one section might see fit to kneel, another to cross themselves, while the Semitic race might deem it incumbent to put on their hats, a proceeding which would be misconstrued by others, and lead to consequences unpleasant to contemplate.

The "Double Chorus" of Rossini, performed for the first time, is written in the ancient ecclesiastical style, and if, like the other novelties of the maestro produced at this Festival, it does not add to, certainly will not detract from, his fame. The morning's performance concluded with a selection of the best known numbers from Handel's Israel in Egypt, including the solo for Madame Patey, "Their land brought forth frogs," the duet "The Lord is a Man of War" for Messrs. Santley and Foli, and for Mr. Sims Reeves the recitatives, "Now, there arose a new King," "Then sent He Moses," and "The enemy said," the latter fairly electrifying the audience, who, utterly disregarding the injunctions against applause, burst forth with a shout of approval, so unanimous and so hearty, that to have attempted to suppress it would have been a task as difficult as to stem the waves of a raging sea. Dates are awkward things to deal with, and I will not pretend to say how often I have heard our great tenor sing this trying air, but throughout my recollection I cannot call to mind any occasion on which he has surpassed his performance of this morning, which effectually disposes of the rubbish that one has heard uttered of late to the effect that Mr. Reeves is "losing his voice," "has had his day," and "is no longer the singer he was." I quite agree, however, with the latter proposition, although in another sense, and am glad to find that my opinion is in accord with that of many musicians who think that the difference lies in favour of Mr. Reeves' present over his past singing, displaying as it does a degree of refinement and artistic study which had hardly developed in former years. True, Mr. Reeves husbands his resources, and does not make so frequent use of his top A's, as was but too frequently the custom in days gone by, reserving his power for such fitting opportunities as that just afforded, and as will no doubt be again shown this evening in Judas Maccabæus. Herein is Mr. Reeves wise in his generation; for with the pitch at such an excessive height, the danger of straining the voice is imminent, and this is far too great a risk to be run by any artist, much less by one whom it would, at least at present, appear impossible to replace. The choruses in Israel (one or two slips allowed for) were sung magnificently, as was only to be expected with so fine and so well trained a body of voices.

---

August 30th.

The Birmingham Festival of 1873 is now a matter of history, and when I say that, despite the enormous labours of all concerned, the last performance was worthy the first, it will be conceded that singers and players must possess powers of endurance of no mean order, for this has been indeed a heavy week's work. Judas Maccabæus—or Macchabæus as it was originally spelt on its first production at Covent Garden Theatre in 1747—is, happily, too well known to require any description at the present day, and the artists being no strangers either to the work or to the public, my concluding task is easy. Of the most familiar airs, "Pious orgies," "Oh liberty," and "So shall the lute," fell to Madame Lemmens-Sherrington; "From mighty kings," and "Wise men flattering," to Mdlle. Tietjens; "Father of Heaven," to Madame Patey, all of whom sang, as they have done throughout the week, excellently well. In the first part Mr. Cummings undertook the tenor music, availing himself of the opportunity afforded by "Call forth thy powers" to show (if proof were needed) how thorough a musician he is in the highest sense of the term; while Mr. Santley, in "Arm, arm ye brave," "The Lord worketh wonders," "Rejoice, O Judah," again asserted his supremacy. After the marvellous display of the morning it was not likely that Mr. Sims Reeves would allow his laurels to be tarnished, and it is enough to say that "Sound an alarm" rang like a war-trumpet through the hall, rousing the audience to an enthusiasm equal to that evoked by "The enemy said" in the morning. The choruses were again wonderfully well given, while the band was throughout no less satisfactory. After the National Anthem had been sung (in the same manner as at the opening of the Festival) ringing cheers and a hearty call for Costa brought the redoubtable chief once more to the fore to receive the well-deserved congratulations of a public which owes so much of the great musical treat it has for the past four days enjoyed to the energy and ability of the accomplished, if somewhat stern and imperious, conductor.

Briefly reviewing the extraordinary quantity of music gone through since last Tuesday, Birmingham has indeed something to be proud of, for of the standard works, the performances have rarely, if ever, been equalled, much less excelled, Elijah, Messiah, Judas Maccabæus, the Israel selection, the C minor Symphony of Beethoven, and Leonora overture, standing out prominent, while the three important novelties have all been unquestionably successful. Mr. Sullivan's oratorio is a work which is sure to grow upon one with more intimate acquaintance, and has raised the composer of the Tempest music, Kenilworth and The Prodigal Son alike in the estimation of sound musicians and the general public; and I am informed that already The Light of the World is secured for performance in London, Liverpool, and Nottingham within the next few months. I have no doubt that ere long it will be heard at most of the important musical towns in the kingdom, more particularly as it is the composer's intention to reduce the length of the oratorio to more reasonable proportions. Signor Randegger's praises are sounded on all sides, and it is generally allowed that, of all the cantatas produced of late years, Fridolin is the one most likely to retain permanent hold of the public ear. The Lord of Burleigh is worthy its composer's reputation, and if Signor Schira will deal with the instruments of percussion with no sparing hand, a much better opportunity will be afforded of hearing some really musicianly writing both for voices and instruments, allied to melodies which have only to become known to be appreciated at their right value.

Digitized by Google

The artists have contributed liberally to the donations, Mdlle. Tietjens having given £25; Madame Trebelli-Bettini, £10 10s.; Mdlle. Albani, £52 10s.; Mr. Sims Reeves, £20; Mr. Arthur Sullivan, £5 5s.; while the Sacred Harmonic Society, besides lending a quantity of music, has contributed £10 10s.

The following is a summary of the results of the Festival:—

| | Persons present. | | Receipts. £. | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| August 26.—Tuesday (first day) ..... | 3,480 | ... | 3,764 | 7 | 5 |
| ,, 27.—Wednesday (second day) | 3,304 | ... | 3,208 | 0 | 1 |
| Total 1st and second days ..... | 6,784 | ... | 6,972 | 7 | 6 |
| August 28.—Thursday (third day) ... | 4,638 | ... | 4,529 | 9 | 4 |
| Total 1st, 2nd, and 3rd days ... | 11,422 | ... | 11,501 | 16 | 10 |
| August 29.—Friday (fourth day) ..... | 3,987 | ... | 3,279 | 7 | 9 |
| Total 1st, 2nd, 3rd, and 4th days | 15,409 | ... | 14,781 | 4 | 7 |
| Tickets at £5 5s. each ..... | 97 | ... | 509 | 5 | 0 |
| Schemes..... | — | ... | 370 | 0 | 0 |
| Total ..... | 15,506 | ... | 15,660 | 9 | 7 |

The donations are in excess of 1870, £93; the receipts for tickets, £1,117 18s. in excess of the same date; and the increase in the number of attendances, 936. The result is £1,569 10s. 4d. increase of receipts as compared with 1870, but as the expenses are somewhat heavier there will be some deduction to be made from this surplus, but in any case, the funds of the General Hospital may expect to be benefited by an amount of something like £7,500, through the instrumentality of what may more than ever be called a divine art.

To Mr. Peyton, the Atlas upon whose shoulders the main work of the Festival rests, to Mr. Beale, the Chairman, Mr. Howard Smith, the Secretary, and the courteous and business-like Stewards, my acknowledgments are due for their readiness to afford every facility and information required.

I cannot close my notice without recording an incident narrated to me as having happened to the Duke of Edinburgh, who was addressed by an old lady of fervent but familiar loyalty, and who, forcing herself to the front of the crowd, exclaimed, "God bless you! How's your dear mother?" What was the reply of his Royal Highness I have not learnt.

DRINKWATER HARD.

KARLSBAD (Bohemia).—The recent programmes of our excellent Cur-orchestra, under the distinguished leadership of Herr August Labitzky, contained, during the last month, Mendelssohn's March from Athalie, the introduction to Herr Richard Wagner's Lohengrin, and his Walkürenritt; a "Symphonie Triomphale" by H. Ulrich; "Danse des Sylphes" by H. Berlioz; introduction to the opera, King Manfred, by Reinecke; overture to Herr Flotow's Martha, &c. The solo performances were chiefly entrusted to Fraulein Anna Dubez (Harpist to H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Schwerin), whose exquisite performances are always admired and listened to with particular interest. Fraulein Dubez played a solo on airs from Lucia, "Marche des Croates" by Zamara, "Au rive de la mer," and fantasia on an "Air Russe," by C. Oberthur; also, in conjunction with Herr F. Jakob, Oberthur's Romances, "La plainte" and "Le Petit Savoyard," for harp and violin, which pleased immensely, as did likewise a Romance by Schulhoff, for harp and horn, the latter instrument being admirably played by Herr Behr.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

A STATUE in honour of Goldoni has just been inaugurated at Florence. Carlo Goldóni, surnamed the Molière of Italy, was born at Venice in 1707. He was a most prolific dramatic author. Though very many of his works for the stage are still in MS., his published comedies and tragedies attain the high total of two hundred and eleven. He tried his hand, also, at opera. His great object was to substitute written comedy for the commedia del arte, under which name were classed pieces extemporised by the actors on a skeleton plot furnished by the author. His efforts as a literary reformer involved him in disputes and quarrels, necessitating his absence for some time from his native land. He went to Paris and was appointed Italian master to the daughters of Louis XV. He profited by his sojourn in France to write a comedy in French, Le Bourru bienfesant, still a stock-piece at the Théâtre Français. He died at Paris in 1793.

"THERE'S a good time coming, boys, a good time coming," sang the concert-giver. "I beg your pardon, Mr. Russell," said a labouring man, rising from the audience in the middle of the hall, "but you couldn't fix the date, could you?"

THE "Prix de Rome" given by the French Government dates from 1802. The first person who gained it was named Androt. He died during his stay in the Eternal City. Musical competitions in France, however, remount to a much remoter period. In the statutes granted by Henri III. to the confraternity of St Cecilia, we read: "All good and excellent musicians of this realm, and elsewhere, shall be invited to send, provided they feel so disposed, on the day and eve of St Cecilia aforesaid, some new motet, or honest cantique, being their own composition, to be sung, so that people may know and point out the good authors, and notably the one among them who shall have done best, and who shall be honoured and rewarded with some honourable gift, as shall be provided for at the fitting time."

A MAN with an enquiring mind thrust his hand the other day into a horse's mouth, to see how many teeth the animal had. The horse closed his mouth to see how many fingers the man had. The curiosity of each was fully satisfied.

SPEAKING of Madame Parepa-Rosa, a correspondent of an American contemporary says:—

"The lady was singing 'Casta Diva' at San Francisco. Folding her white hands on her bosom, and raising her tender eyes, she commenced with her Æolian notes, the melody swelling and breaking into a gush of plaintive, supplicating harmony that vibrated through every chord of the heart. I glanced at my friend at my side, radiant in her dress and halo of golden hair, silver powdered, and there was a sweet pensive look on her downcast face. The music ceased, and the audience, wild with enthusiasm, were demanding an encore, when my companion raised her large serene eyes to my face, and said 'Isn't it sad?' 'Yes,' I replied, quickly, sharing her feeling, 'although so glorious, it touches a melancholy chord.' 'O, nonsense,' she exclaimed, 'I don't mean that! You know very well that I don't pretend to appreciate this kind of musical jargon. I mean isn't it sad to see so many young men in California bald-headed? I wonder if it is dissipation, or the climate, or what? Do you know that I have been picking out bald heads down in the parquet, and, would you believe it, I actually counted out twenty-five?'"

"MR. SPEAKER," exclaimed a member of the Arkansas Legislature, "my colleague taunts me with a desire for fame. I scorn the imputation, Sir. Fame, Sir! What is fame? It is a shaved pig with a greased tail, which slips through the hands of thousands, and then is accidentally caught by some fellow that happens to hold on. I let the greased-tail quadruped go by me without any effort to clutch it, Sir!"

SOQUAL (CALIFORNIA).—Frederic Hawson, an actor very well known in these parts, committed suicide on 29th July.

CRONSTADT.—A new Theatre is being erected here, capable of containing eight hundred persons. The greater part of the cost will be borne by the Ministry of Marine.

SALT LAKE CITY.—However great in other things, the Prophet, Brigham Young, does not shine as a theatrical manager. In consequence of his partiality for the penny-wise-and-pound-foolish system, the performances at the Theatre ceased to be patronized by the local Saints, and the Prophet, who, though not thinking himself a small Prophet, is fond of quick returns, has sold the Theatre to a company.

Digitized by Google

COSTUMES.*

(From "Another World.")

While speaking of materials for dress, I will venture to interrupt "the preparations for the marriage" by giving a short description of some of our costumes. As certain of our manners and customs, besides having a character of their own, may be said to partake both of your Eastern and Western usages, so do our dresses partake both of your oriental and classical costumes.

Lady's Costume.

The costume of the lady is loose and flowing. A jacket or bodice of purple tissue covers the right arm, and one side of the body to the waist, leaving the left arm, shoulder and part of the bosom exposed. A small waistcoat, made of a crimson tissue, is worn underneath the bodice. The tunic is of white tissue, beautifully embroidered with a gold thread. The short skirts show trousers of golden tissue, full, and not unlike those of your Turks. They are confined at the ankle by anklets, made of plain gold for the middle classes, whilst those worn by the upper classes are of ravine metal, ornamented with precious stones. There are fringe trimmings to the tunic made of precious metals of every variety of colour, selected for their lightness and beauty, and enriched at their extremities with precious stones. The colours of the costume vary with the taste of the wearer, but are selected to harmonize one with another, and all with our brilliant light. The feet are protected by a sole secured either by sandals or by means of an adhesive material. Women are not allowed to wear stays, or in any way to confine the waist. Indeed such encumbrances would serve no good purpose, inasmuch as their forms are actually beautiful; their spines, in consequence of their physical education, are strong, and every part of the frame, which might otherwise require support, is in its right place.

Head-Ornaments.

In the hair is sometimes worn an ornament forming two wings, each consisting of a single diamond, which moves on small fine hinges, and is so arranged that the least breath of air will set it in motion. In the centre, uniting the two wings, is a small crimson stone, surmounted by a large round stone of purple blue, from which sprouts out a very fine dagger of a greenish gold colour. The rest of the head-dress is made of fine metal, chosen for its lightness, of the same tints. These metals are of equal, perhaps greater, value than gold, but are chosen for their qualities. The necklace and anklets correspond in character to the head-dress, with the addition to the former of one large pearl, which hangs to the wings, and rests on the lady's bosom. The bracelets are made in your Greek style—bands of gold set with large pearls. The soles to protect the feet are gilded with ravine metal. The sandals, which are of purple enamel of a peculiar kind, are often ornamented with jewels. The fan is composed of the choicest feathers of our native birds, and set in ravine metal of the most beautiful kind, studded with pearls and other precious stones.

We have pearls, diamonds, and other precious stones of a very remarkable kind, whose electricities are supposed to have a certain influence over the wearer. Thus, diamonds in Montalluyah have, it is thought, a tendency to increase the circulation; and when I have been fatigued by excessive study, a chain of peculiar diamonds has been placed, near my skin to revive me. Ladies sometimes wear a small turban with a gold tassel on the crown of the head. For the open air the head is covered with a turban, in front of which is a small shade, which, by means of a spring, falls down and protects the eyes and face from the sun.

Ladies of superior quality rarely wear turbans, for they seldom go abroad in the heat of the sun, and when they do, they are shaded by a canopy, supported at each corner by a pole, and borne by four men. When walking in their grounds ladies use long veils, covering them from head to ankle, which they also wear when on horseback; but they never mount in the heat of the sun.

Every unmarried woman, without exception of class, wears a distinctive feature on her dress. The drapery is fixed with a jewel to the right shoulder, and the right arm is bare. On the other hand, the married woman's arms are always covered with falling drapery, though by certain movements she shows the arm. It is not till after marriage that the lady is allowed to wear very elaborate costumes.

Gentlemen's Costume.

By men, an elastic linen case, or chemise, make of a material which will stretch to any size, and cling to the form, is worn next the skin. This, reaching just below the knee, is short in the sleeves, and very ornamental about the neck, leaving the throat bare. It is changed daily by the poor, and twice a day by the rich. Over it is worn a tunic of rich material, with sleeves differing from each other in form and colour.

The trousers of the men consist of a large mass of drapery of light material finer than cambric, prepared from leaves which have passed through a certain process, and are afterwards woven. This is wound round and round the leg. As many folds are required to protect the body from the scorching heat, it will be seen that lightness is an essential quality. The trouser, otherwise full, is narrow at the ankle, where it is confined by a band of the same material, of gold, or of jewels, according to the quality of the wearer. Gloves are not worn by men, but their trousers being so massive they can place their hands in the ample folds when walking in the sun.

Another important article of male attire is a large piece of drapery, which, fastened in front and on one shoulder with a jewel chain, is carried to the back, and, attached to the opposite arm, falls in graceful folds below one knee, where it may be fastened. It may also be thrown back and worn as a cloak or covering; in any case it descends in graceful folds. The feet are bare, and are rubbed with an oleaginous preparation, which keeps them lithesome, and prevents them from being browned by the sun. The under part of the foot is protected by a sole secured by sandals. The hair, whether of the head or beard, is never cut, and we have no shaving, but we have means to prevent the hair growing on any part of the face.

The colours of the costume vary greatly; each man selects according to his taste, but always with a harmony of tints. To give an example. If the drapery were crimson on the outside, the inside would be blue; the tunic, a very rich brown; the legs of the trousers, one red the other blue. The only ornament worn by the men is a chain of ravine metal, sometimes plain, sometimes set with costly gems; and we have brown costumes, relieved by this chain alone.

Out of doors the men wear a turban or head-covering, made of a very light material, beat out to the thinness of the finest wafer, and repellent of heat. It is very large, so that the face and eyes may be protected from the sun; and it is furnished with a contrivance by which a current of air is kept constantly playing on the top of the brain.

* "The harmonious beauty of dress gives often indication of the mind of the wearer."

Strassburg.—The new theatre, built on the site of that destroyed by the German bombardment, was to be inaugurated on the 4th inst.

Brussels.—M. Pierre Schott, the head of the well-known publishing firm here, has just died, in the prime of life, after a fortnight's cruel suffering, from the sting of some venomous insect. He was the youngest of the sons of M. B. Schott, who founded large musical publishing houses at Mayence, Brussels, London, and Paris.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

SCARBOROUGH.—On Tuesday last, Dr. Sloman gave a most successful pianoforte recital at the Spa Saloon. The programme included Schubert's Impromptu in A flat, Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," and "Characteristics" of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven. The latter selection was greatly admired by a large and appreciative audience.

EXETER.—A "popular" concert has been given in the Public Rooms by the well-known flautist, Mr. Henry Nicholson, assisted by Madame Thaddeus Wells, Miss Lazarus, R.A.M. (solo pianist and accompanist), and Mr. Orlando Christian. We may hope that the concert and entertainment season has commenced, the inaugural performance having so successfully taken place. Madame Wells (the Emma Jenkins of the past) is an accomplished vocalist, who gives the most elaborate fioriture with refreshing correctness of intonation. Her management of the upper register of her voice is easy, no facial contortion marring the pleasing impression produced by her clear, crisp tones. Mr. Nicholson's solos were received with rapturous applause (as usual), and Mr. Orlando Christian, who possesses a fine resonant voice, has no cause to complain of a lack of appreciation on the part of his hearers. Miss Lazarus plays brilliantly, her solos giving evidence of much careful training, while the taste which distinguishes her performances gives proof that in her case there is no lack of natural talent, without which the most costly tuition is bestowed in vain. There was a good attendance, and the "encore" system was liberally resorted to.—W. S. J.

MANCHESTER.—A short season of English Opera was commenced on Monday the 2nd inst., at the Theatre Royal, under the direction of Mr. Carl Rosa. There was a large attendance, and the opera of Maritana was presented, with such general excellence as to warrant the hope of a very successful season. The following is the caste: Maritana, Miss Blanche Cole; Lazarillo, Miss Lucy Franklein; Marchioness, Mrs. Aynsley Cook: Charles II., Mr. Arthur Stevens; Don José, Mr. S C. Campbell; Marquis Montifiore, Mr. H. Jackson; Don Cæsar de Bazan, Mr. Wm. Castle. "The choice of Maritana"—writes the Examiner and Times—"as the opening work was very judicious, and the applause of the audience frequently testified to their very hearty satisfaction. The band has been well selected, and it is not often that the orchestral accompaniments to an opera in Manchester have been so unobjectionable. The chorus, too, is very far above the average, and we have seldom had a company of choralists so familiar with their music, so generally correct, and, what is of no slight importance, so careful in the pronunciation of the words. This excellent quality, we are glad to say, was also studied by the principal vocalists. The costumes were extremely rich, and the requirements of the wardrobe have evidently been specially considered by the management."

---

MUNICH.—Herr Heinrich Natter, the sculptor, has been commissioned to execute a Schumann Monument for Leipsic.

OSTEND.—The Baroness Vigier (née Sophie Cruvelli), gave a most interesting concert lately, in conjunction with Leopold de Meyer.

PAMPELUNA.—According to report, there is a young lady here possessed of a bass voice which the late Signor Lablache himself might have envied.

NAPLES.—A new four act opera, Wallenstein, has been produced with only moderate success at the Teatro del Fondo. The libretto, founded upon Schiller's well known play, is by Signor Enrico Galisciani, and the music by Signor Musone, the composer of Camoëns.

VIENNA.—During his short engagement at the Imperial Operahouse, Herr Betz appeared very successfully as Nelusco in Meyerbeer's opera, L'Africaine. He was admirably supported by Madame F. Materna, who, in consequence of Mdlle. Ehnn's sudden indisposition, undertook the principal female part, which she executed splendidly, at, so to speak, a moment's notice.

ARAD.—A short time since, M. Offenbach's operetta, La Belle Hélène, was followed by a very sad and startling episode. The part of Calchas was sustained in the first act with much humour by Herr Pianta, a great favourite with the public. In the second act, another comedian continued the part, without any reason being assigned by the management for the substitution. A rumour, however, soon mysteriously found its way about the house, to the effect that the unfortunate Herr Pianta had been suddenly attacked by cholera, and in consequence conveyed at once to his lodgings. The rumour turned out to be true. The public evidently took no more interest in the performance, and it was quite as evident that the performers took no more interest in it than the public. Everyone felt glad when the curtain fell for the last time. Herr Pianta's comrades hastened to lend what assistance they could, but in spite of all their efforts, and those of the medical man, at two o'clock a.m., the poor fellow was a corpse. His benefit was to have come off the next evening, but, when he should have been going to the theatre, his friends were mournfully following him to the grave.

SOUTH KENSINGTON SCHOOL v. ROYAL ACADEMY.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—It now appears finally settled we are to have a "New School for Music" at the South Kensington establishment—if in opposition to the Royal Academy, in what way will it benefit the profession? If it merely swells the number of art mechanics, as the Kensington School of "Fine Art" has done, then I think it were better to let well alone; but if the new school is to encourage original compositions, and raise a suitable building for performing new English operas, and, by this means, bring out native talent as operatic actors, and place English opera upon a sure foundation, then, indeed, every lover of music and justice will wish the new society good speed. "Idealizers" may look with profound contempt upon English composers and English singers; they say "there is an absence of earnestness in their work." What can be more depressing to an ardent student with original talent than to feel that he has no power of displaying that talent however hard he may work? Let the new society create a demand for English opera by encouraging it, and the family of "Idealizers" will soon find that English composers have still a soul for melody of the very highest order, and singers to realize it.

Yours &c.,
R. C.

P.S.—I have looked anxiously for "Idealizer's" further remarks upon "English Opera," in your valuable journal, boldly signed by his name in full; in so good a cause, why does he hold back?

---

WAIFS.

Signor Bevignani has returned from Italy, and leaves London for Moscow this day, to fulfil his duties as conductor of the orchestra.

Mr. Bishenden informs us that he has, within the last twelve months, been busy writing to the musical conductors all over the world, advocating the use of the diapason normal, and that almost all have agreed to adopt it.

A new organ has been opened at the Church of St. Philip, Milltown, Co. Dublin, by Mr. W. H. Telford. The singing by the choir (augmented for the occasion) of Dr. Greene's anthem, "Thou visitest the earth," would not suffer by comparison with more costly choirs. The offertory, the largest ever received in the church, was devoted to defray the expenses of the organ.

Messrs. Weippert & Co., the music publishers of Regent Street, whose warehouse was recently burned, have written to the Times, stating that so far from their stock-in-trade having, as reported, been fully insured, the insurance was for less than a tithe of its value, and they are, therefore, heavy losers. Some valuable musical instruments and many rare manuscripts were also destroyed.

Carl Wilhelm, the composer of the "Wacht am Rhein," whose death we announced last week, was buried on the 29th August, at Schmalkalden (Hesse). A large concourse of people from all parts of Germany, musical societies, military clubs, and deputations from various corporations, as well as the communal authorities and the school children of the town, attended, and walked in procession to the cemetery.

The death, at Ixelles, on the 30th ult, of M. Pierre Schott, the esteemed music publisher, is announced. M. Pierre Schott was well known for his amiable disposition and genial manners. He was one of the family of the world-famous "B. Schott et fils," music publishers of Mayence, and was the proprietor of an extensive business in Brussels and Paris. He leaves a widow, two daughters, and a son (aged 17) to regret their loss.

Mrs. Roney (Miss Helen Hogarth) has been appointed teacher of singing at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham. Mrs. Roney, who had the advantage of studying under the first masters, has received from the parents of her former pupils the highest testimonials of her ability as a teacher, and the warmest expressions of their personal esteem. The Ladies' College could not have selected a professor better qualified for the important duties required.

CRAMER.—Cramer is exceedingly intellectual and entertaining, he has a sharp satirical vein, and spares neither his own nor his neighbour's foibles. He prefers to converse in French, and shows by his manners that he has spent much of his early life in France. He is one of the most inveterate snuff-takers. Good housekeepers maintain that after every visit of the great master the floor must be cleansed of the snuff he has spilt, whilst I, as a pianoforte player, cannot forgive him for disfiguring his aristocratic, long, thin fingers, with their beautifully shaped nails, by the use of it, and often clogging the action of the keys. Those thin, well shaped fingers are best suited for legato playing; they glide along imperceptibly from one key to the other, and, whenever possible, avoid octave as well as staccato passages. Cramer sings on the piano in such a manner that he almost transforms a Mozart Andante into a vocal piece, but I must resent the liberty he takes in introducing his own and frequently trivial embellishments.—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

Madame Sinico made her first appearance at M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts on Saturday evening last. The accomplished vocalist sang "Ah fors è lui" (La Traviata)—the cabaletta of which she was compelled to repeat—and the "Blue Bells of Scotland." In response to a hearty encore, Madame Sinico followed the prevailing fashion of not repeating the song asked for, but giving another, which, on this occasion (by way of novelty?) was "Robin Adair."

Messrs. Kirkman and Sons have received a medal for their pianofortes, from the Judges of the Vienna Exhibition.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

HENRY KLEIN.—"Electricity Valse," by Henry Klein.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Just Published,

"SWEET HAWTHORN TIME."

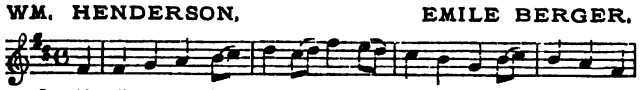
WORDS BY (SONG.) MUSIC BY

WM. HENDERSON. EMILE BERGER.



Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May! What joys at-tend thine ad-vent gay!

Sweet hawthorn time—fair month of May!
What joys attend thine advent gay!
On every tree the birdies sing,
From hill and dale glad echoes ring;
The lark, inspir'd, to Heav'n ascends,
The gurgling brook in beauty wends
By mossy bank and grassy brae,
Where violets bloom and lambkins play.
Delightful Spring—sweet month of May
What joys attend thine advent gay!

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"A pleasing song, entitled 'Sweet Hawthorn Time,' . . . . . would be a trump card' in the hands of any amateur able to do it justice."—Daily Telegraph.

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MARIE ALEXANDROWNA WALTZ.

By CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

ASHDOWN & PARRY beg to announce that this new Waltz will be published in a few days.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,

National Hymn, 6s.,

Ave Maria, 4s.,

AND

Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Now Ready.

THE

RAISING

OF

LAZARUS.

AN

ORATORIO.

BY

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT

Price, in paper covers, 8s.; bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

NOVELLO & CO.,

BERNERS STREET.

LONDON.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - | each | 3 | 6 |
| No. 1. Hunting Chorus. | | | |
| „ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens. | | | |
| „ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers. | | | |

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Printed by Henderson, Rait, and Fenton, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by William Duncan Davison, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Sept. 6, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 37. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—CHORAL FESTIVAL, This Day (SATURDAY) September 13. Annual Autumn Concert of the Tonic Sol-Fa Association. Chorus of 3,500 voices; certificated singers only. The programme will include selected pieces by Handel, Mendelssohn, Rille, Himmel, Kreutzer, Bach, Webbe, Reichardt, Adams, Smart, Pinsuti, Callcott, Macfarren, &c. Soli passages by a select choir, prize winners at National Music Meetings. A sight-singing test, with a work not previously seen by any members of the choir, between the parts. Conductors, Mr. Joseph Proudman and Mr. W. G. McNaught. Organist, Mr. James Coward.—Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Saturday Concerts and Afternoon Promenades, 1873-74.—The EIGHTEENTH SERIES of the SATURDAY CONCERTS will COMMENCE on the 4th of October.

There will be 25 Concerts in all—11 before and 14 after Christmas, on the following dates, commencing each day at 3 o'clock:—

1873, October 4th, 11th, 18th, 25th.
,, November 1st, 8th, 15th 22nd, 29th.
,, December 6th, 13th.
1874, January 17th, 24th, 31st.
,, February 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th.
,, March 7th, 14th, 21st, 28th.
,, April 4th, 11th, 18th.

Conductor, Mr. MANNS.

Transferrable reserved stall for the 25 Concerts, Two Guineas; stall for a Single Concert, Half-a-Crown, exclusive of admission to the Palace.

The Band and Chorus will be of the same strength as during last season.

Every effort will be made to render the programmes generally attractive, and to continune the production of new and unknown music, and the excellence of execution for which these concerts have become known. Among the works intended to be performed are the following, many of them produced here for the first time:—Handel—the oratorio of "Theodora," with additional accompaniments by Dr. Ferdinand Hiller; Bach—pianoforte concerto in F minor; Haydn—two symphonies not yet performed, and selection from the "Seven Last Words;" Mozart—symphonies in C major (No. 6) and G minor, pianoforte concerto in E flat (1785); Beethoven—symphonies Nos. 3, 6, 7, and 9, the septett, "The Praise of Music"—a cantata for solos, chorus, and orchestra—chorus for female voices from "King Stephen," the "Egmont" Music; Schubert—symphony in C (No. 9), the Octett (for strings and wind); Mendelssohn—symphonies in C minor and Scotch, the 95th Psalm for solos, chorus, and orchestra, Hymn for contralto-solo, chorus, and orchestra (Op. 96), "The Midsummer Night's Dream" Music, and the "Lobgesang;" Schumann—Symphony in E flat, selection from the music to "Faust;" Berlioz—the Garden Scene and the Queen Mab scherzo, from "Romeo and Juliet;" Felicien David—Le Desert, Ode-Symphonie for orchestra and chorus; Macfarren—overture (MS.) to "John the Baptist;" Sir W. S. Bennett—"The Maid of Orleans," sonata for pianoforte solo; Sir Julius Benedict—symphony in G minor (MS.); Brahms—Schicksalslied, for chorus and orchestra; Gounod—Meditation, for violin solo and orchestra; E. Prout—symphony (MS.) in C major; J. F. Barnett—overture (MS.) to "A Winter's Tale;" Arthur S. Sullivan—some vocal pieces, with orchestra, specially composed for these concerts.

Engagements have already been made with Madame Lemmens, Madame Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Foli, Madame Schumann, Herr Joachim, Mr. Charles Hallé, Herr Pauer, Herr von Bülow, and Signor Platti. Other eminent artists will be engaged as opportunity offers.

Mr. Manns' Benefit Concert will take place on the 25th April.

At the Afternoon Promenades the exhibition of objects of interest in art and manufacture will be continued as opportunity may offer.

By order, G. GROVE, Secretary.

Crystal Palace, 9th September, 1873.

MISS PURDY will sing, at the GENTLEMEN'S CONCERT, MANCHESTER, on Monday, "LES ADIEUX DE MARIE STUART," Niedermeyer; the ballad, "NEAR WOODSTOCK TOWN," and, with Mr. Santley, "IN QUESTO SUOLO," Donizetti.—35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!), will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

MR. E. ADAMS, Operatic Comedian, Manager and Author, General Entrepreneur and Director for Comic Opera, Burlesque and First-Class Musical Entertainments, for London and the Provinces.

Complete Tuition for the Stage, with every facility to eligible aspirants.

Foreign Productions Translated and Adapted for English representation.

Personal interviews, from 12 to 3, at Mr. Boosey's, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Old Stafford, Manchester.

ORGAN FOR SALE—TWO MANUALS CC, PEDALS CCC to E; 16 Stops. Suitable for Church or Chamber.—Apply by letter, X. Y. Z., care of G, Street, 30, Cornhill.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—M. RIVIERE'S CONCERTS.—EVERY EVENING at Eight. The following artists will appear during the week:—Mdlle. Corani, Miss Adelaide Newton, Mdlle. Martorelli, Miss Alice Barth, and Mdlle. Cornalie D'Anka; Mr. J. H. Pearson, Signor Gustave Garcia, Herr Werrenrath, and Mr. George Perren; Mdlle Secretain, Mdlle. Nelly Guibert, and Mr. J. Levy.

MONDAY next, Popular and New Music.
TUESDAY, Wagner Night.
WEDNESDAY, Second Weber Night (by general desire).
THURSDAY, Scotch Ballad Night.
FRIDAY, Mendelssohn's "ATHALIE."
SATURDAY, National Music.

Conductor—M. RIVIERE.

Splendid Decorations, Ferneries, Fountains, Plants, Exotics, Flowers, &c. Refreshments by Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. Promenade, One Shilling. Doors open at 7.30; Commence at 8. Acting Manager, Mr. JOHN RUSSELL.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., D.C.L.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY, the 22nd September, and will terminate on Saturday the 20th of December.

Candidates of admission can be examined at the Institution on THURSDAY, the 18th September, at eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Monday and Thursday at the same hour. By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER wanted for St. SILAS ENGLISH EPISCOPAL CHURCH, Glasgow. Apply, with references and terms, to J. MUIR WOOD & Co., Glasgow.

LET THE HILLS RESOUND (New Part Song).—"The composition of Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS, so eminent in itself, and rendered with so much spirit, that the Prince of Wales, on behalf of the whole Royal party, demanded a repetition. It was given a second time."—See the Times, July 16. "The second great success of Mr. BRINLEY RICHARDS."—The Graphic. Post free for 12 stamps. Class copy, 4 stamps. As a Song, 18 stamps. As a pianoforte solo, by the Composer, 24 stamps.

SOUND THE TRUMPET IN ZION.—For Full Choir. Words by S. C. HALL, F.S.A. The music composed by BRINLEY RICHARDS. Post free for 18 stamps.

READING AT SIGHT.—Musical Cards, for Learning to Read Music quickly at Sight. Invaluable to all Teachers of Music. Post free for 25 stamps.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

FOUR NEW STYLES.

STYLE P.—Two Sets of Reeds, with Three Pedals. .. .. .. 22 Guineas.
STYLE Q.—Two Sets of Reeds. Resonant Case. Three Pedals. .. 25 Guineas.
STYLE S.—Seven Stops; with Sub-Bass and Octave Coupler. Resonant Case .. .. .. .. .. .. 38 Guineas.
STYLE T.—Five Stops. Improved Vox Humana. Resonant Case .. 28 Guineas.

Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, London.

Digitized by Google

Now ready, in Two Vols., with Portrait, 24s.,

LIFE OF MOSCHELES,

WITH SELECTIONS FROM HIS DIARIES AND CORRESPONDENCE,

By his WIFE.

THE TIMES.—"The Publication of these memoirs will give satisfaction to many of our readers. The devotees of music in this country are both numerous and earnest, and nothing can gratify them more than when literature pays a tribute to distinction in that art. These volumes, therefore will be hailed with particular delight. They are as well 'a record of the life of Moscheles' as 'a chronicle of the musical history of his time'—a period of sixty years. What Moscheles observed he was accustomed to record in his diary, and we have before us the result of his observations."

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

"ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. Sung by Madame Patey .. 4s.
"THE KING AND I" .. .. Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. 4s.
"THE CROSS ROADS" .. .. Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. 4s.
"SYMPATHY" .. .. .. Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. 4s.
"NOTHING" .. .. .. Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. 4s.

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

"SINCE BABY LEFT US" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s.
"REQUITED" .. .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"A MODERN STORY" .. .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"WRITING TO WILLIE" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)
"MY MORNING DREAM" .. .. .. .. .. (In the Press.)

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUET

For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

THREE SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

With English and German Words.

No. 1, "THE MINSTRELS' HOME" (Des Sängers Heimath) .. .. .. 3s.
,, 2, "THE LOVELY MONTH OF MAY" (Im Wunderschönen Monat Mai) 3s.
,, 3, "VISIONS" (Traumbild) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s.

The English Versions of the Words by MARIA XIMENA HAYES.

The Music by WILHELM SCHULTHES.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"COM' E GENTIL,"

Une FANTAISIE DE SALON,

Sur la Serenade de "DON PASQUALE,"

Pour le Pianoforte,

Par RICHARD HOFFMAN.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"

"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"
("Connais tu le pays.")

Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,

In the Opera of "MIGNON."

The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published.

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG.

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

MIGNON.

Opera in Three Acts,

BY

AMBROISE THOMAS.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| THE OPERA COMPLETE FOR PIANO SOLO ... ... ... Net | 10 | 0 |

All the following arrangements are Sold at HALF the marked PRICES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| BIZET (G.), Six Transcriptions:— No. 1, Danse Bohémienne, 5s.; 2, Romance de Mignon (Connais tu le pays), 5s.; 3, Duo des Hirondelles, 5s.; 4, Adieu Mignon (Mélodie), 4s.; 5, Polonaise de Philène, "Je suis Titania la blonde," 6s.; 6, O Printemps (Mélodie), 4s. | | |
| BATTMANN (J. L.), Op. 271. Petite Fantaisie (sans Octaves) .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| BRISSLER (F.), Two "Pot-Pourris" .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |
| CRAMER (S.), Two "Bouquets de Mélodies" .. .. .. .. each | 6 | 0 |
| CROISEZ (A.), "Styrienne, Andante et Valse" .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| DELAHAYE (L. L.), "Adieu Mignon, et Danse Bohémienne" .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| GODARD (A.), TROIS TRANSCRIPTIONS FACILES:— No. 1, "Recitatif et Romance de Mignon," 3s.; 2, "Danse Bohémienne," 3s.; 3, "Entr'acte Gavotte," 3s. | | |
| HESS (J. C.), Fantasia "Styrienne, Prière" .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 209, Fantaisie brillante ("Marche Bohémienne," "Reveille," "Pastorale," "Danse des Œufs,") &c. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 232, Seconde Fantaisie ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 245, "Grand Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 246, "Petite Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| KRUGER (W.), Op. 142, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| LYSBERG (C. B.), Op. 116, Fantaisie Transcription (Duo des Hirondelles et "Titania") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 71, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance de Mignon" et "Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 81, Seconde Fantaisie Transcription ("Adieu Mignon et Valse de Philène") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| OESTEN (Th.), Op. 400, Fantaisie élégante ("Valse Styrienne, Romance de Mignon, Polacca") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| ROSELLEN (H.), Op. 188, "Polonaise de Mignon," Transcription variée | 6 | 0 |
| TREDHE (G.), Op. 123, "Romance de Mignon," variée .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| VALIQUET (H.), Op. 81, "Deux petites Fantaisies" .. .. .. each | 5 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| BERNARD (PAUL), Op. 90, Deux Suites Concertantes .. .. each | 9 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, Premier Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| RUMMEL (J.), Deux Mosaiques .. .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| SARASATE (Op. 16), "Romance et Gavotte de Mignon" .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LÉVÊQUE (EMILE), "Six Mélodies faciles et Motifs favoris de Mignon" | 5 | 0 |

CORNET-À-PISTONS SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| GUILBAUT (E.), "Pot-pourri sur Motifs favoris de Mignon" .. .. | 6 | 0 |

VIOLIN, HARMONIUM, AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LEFÉBURE-WELY. "Romance de Mignon" Paraphrase .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

DANCE MUSIC—PIANO SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| STRAUSS, 1er Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ARBAN, 2de Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| MEY, 3e Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| GODFREY (CHARLES), "Mignon Waltz" .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 0 |
| MÉTRA (OLIVIER), "Suite de Valses" .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, "Grande Valse" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STUTZ (PHILIPPE), "Polka Mazurka" .. .. .. .. .. | 2 | 6 |
| DESGRANGES (E.), "Polka des Hirondelles" .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ZIKOFF (F.), "Entr'acte Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| STRAUSS, "Mignon Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

LONDON:
DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
244, REGENT STREET, W.

THE COMPLETE OPERA FOR VOICE AND PIANO, 20s., and all the Vocal Music of "MIGNON" (separately), can be obtained from DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.

Digitized by Google

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From the "Times.")

Hereford, September 8.

The 150th meeting of the Three Choirs of Gloucester, Worcester, and Hereford begins to-morrow, at the last-named city; one of the smallest, quietest, and, thanks to the river Wye, most agreeable and cheerful in mid-England. The history of these gatherings has been so often and minutely described that it would be tedious to go over the same ground again, step by step. A brief sketch will answer all purposes. What progress has been made since the three choirs first met at Gloucester to combine their voices in the act of worship, and, later, not only for this, but also with a view to promote the maintenance and education of orphan children of the poorer clergy, is generally known; as is also the substantial aid given to the cause, in 1724, at Gloucester, by the eloquent preaching of Dr. Bysse, Chancellor of Hereford, and brother of the Bishop. It was Dr. Bysse who advocated the collection of money after morning service at the doors of the church—to be disposed of as already explained. The meeting of 1724 must, therefore, be regarded as the origin of that which, time out of mind, has been denominated the "Festival of the Three Choirs." What Dr. Bysse had successfully recommended to Gloucester, he, in the two following years, as successfully recommended to Worcester and Hereford. It was at Gloucester, subsequently, that the idea was broached of allowing widows as well as orphans to participate in the benefits of the charity, the scope of which was thus materially widened. Many years later, owing to the comparatively insignificant proceeds arising from the meetings of the choirs, the Duke of Beaufort, then President, suggested that concerts of vocal and instrumental music should be added to the attractions; and in 1755, at the Worcester Festival, the Dean and Chapter granted the use of the College Hall for that purpose, generously fitting it up at their own expense. In 1757, at the triennial turn of Gloucester, the meeting was prolonged from three days to four—the first day being devoted, as usual, to full service in the Cathedral. On this occasion, Handel's Messiah was first heard in an English county town, not, however, as now, in the church, but at Boot Hall, which afterwards was metamorphosed into an inn. In 1798 (at Hereford), the growing expenses attendant upon the performances made it difficult to find responsible guarantees, and, but for the intervention of the Duke of Norfolk, who persuaded some of the most renowned singers and players of the day (among them Banti, the prima donna; Lindley, violoncellist; and Dragonetti, contrabassist) to afford their gratuitous assistance, the Festivals must in all probability have collapsed. By the influence and exertions of the same nobleman, moreover, the number of stewards was augmented—a step which, by modifying their liabilities, considerably diminished their reluctance to act. Year by year more gentlemen were found willing to officiate, and the prospects of the Festivals gradually improved. The contributions to the Charity became liberal in proportion, upwards of £800 being received at Worcester in 1809, and nearly £800 in 1811 at Gloucester. The chief singer, however, at Gloucester was the then celebrated Catalani, whose exorbitant terms, notwithstanding that the prices for tickets had been raised, brought the profits of the meeting, which would otherwise have been great, to a comparatively low ebb. This, however, had nothing to do with the collections for the Charity, with which the stewards, whether the result be profit or loss, to their honour, never meddle. How the institution has grown, gathered weight, and thus inspired increasing confidence, need scarcely be said. At the first meeting, in 1724, there were six stewards—a clergyman and a layman belonging to each diocese; while to go back no further than the Worcester Festival of 1851, when Sophie Cruvelli was the "star," twelve gentlemen accepted the responsibility, and this was looked upon as a sign of promise, although the result in a pecuniary sense was not satisfactory, and each of the stewards had to disburse his share towards a considerable deficit.

But to leave history, we come to the festival, which begins to-morrow under the happiest auspices, fine weather included, which it is devoutly to be hoped—but, considering recent experience, hardly to be expected—may last. Instead of 12 responsible stewards, Mr. Townshend Smith, organist of the Cathedral, and, in right of his prerogative, director and conductor of all the musical proceedings, can point triumphantly to a list of no fewer than 88 stewards, with Lord Bateman, Lord-Lieutenant of the County, as President—a list comprising many of the nobility and gentry of Hereford and the neighbouring counties, together with some 20 clergymen, and the Dean of Hereford at the head of them. The institution of early services in the choir on every morning during the continuance of the Festival has in a great measure done away with certain strong objections on the part of conscientious and not illiberal members of the Church. Divine service can now be daily held as usual; and thus the Cathedral is not diverted, by the exigencies of an exceptional occasion, from its chief and holiest purpose. This adds weight to the official appeal on behalf of the Charity, which, as usual, we append—

"These music meetings are held for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the poorer clergy, &c., within the dioceses of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester; aided by the Diocesan Clerical Charities, the proceeds have of late years in this diocese averaged to each widow £17 3s., and to each orphan £29, in the Archdeaconry of Hereford; and to each widow £21 16s. 3d., and to each orphan £27 18s. 6d., in the Archdeaconry of Salop. That such institutions stand in need of immediate encouragement is unhappily too manifest from the present number of applicants—more than fifteen orphans and fourteen widows, and two clergymen in distressed circumstances; while the necessity of future support is equally evident from the positive fact that there are within the three dioceses 147 benefices having an income of below £100 per annum each. The Committee will be happy to receive, and apply to the purposes of this important Charity, all contributions forwarded by those who are unable to attend the Festival in person.

"JOHN H. ARKWRIGHT, Chairman.

"The Close, Hereford, July 19, 1873."

Mr. Townshend Smith, secretary no less than conductor, has been active in his preparations, and, it must be admitted, happy in their result. His principal singers are Mdlle. Tietjens, Miss Edith Wynne, and Mdlle. Bartkowska (sopranos); Madame Trebelli-Bettini and Miss Enriquez (contraltos); Messrs. W. H. Cummings, Montem Smith, and Edward Lloyd (tenors); Mr. Santley and Signor Agnesi (barytone and bass.) The solo player is M. Sainton (violin), than whom no artist in his line could be more generally welcome. Mr. Done, of Worcester, according to custom, presides at the organ, except on the second evening, when Dr. S. S. Wesley, of Gloucester, is to play the organ part in Mendelssohn's St. Paul. Mr. Smith has engaged a highly-efficient orchestra of 20 violins (M. Sainton at the head of the first, and Mr. Willey of the second, compartment), 8 violas (principal, Mr. R. Blagrove), 8 violoncellos (principal, Mr. Pettit), and 8 double basses (principal, Mr. Howell), with the usual proportion of wind instruments, &c., including Messrs. Radcliffe, G. Horton, Lazarus, Waetzig, T. Harper, C. Harper Hawkes, Phasey, and Thompson (respectively as chief flute, oboe, clarionet, bassoon, trumpet, horn, trombone, euphonium, and drums)—the librarian and performer on the side drum being, as of old, Mr. W. Goodwin. About the chorus, which includes delegates from Bristol, Bradford, and London, as well as the members of the three choirs and the various choral societies of the three counties, it would be superfluous to say anything. They are always efficient. The programme of the week is as follows:—Full cathedral service on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday—with Dr. Wesley at the organ; the oratorio of Elijah on Tuesday afternoon; Handel's Jephthah, followed by Rossini's Stabat Mater, on Wednesday morning; and St. Paul on Wednesday evening, when the Cathedral is to be lighted up; on Thursday a new oratorio, entitled Hagar, the words selected from Scripture by the Rev. J. R. Gleig Taylor, the music composed by Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Professor at Oxford University, succeeded by a miscellaneous selection, including three movements from Spohr's great symphony, Die Weiheder Töne ("The Consecration of Sound,") the same composer's Christian's Prayer, a sacred cantata, and Handel's magnificent "Chandos Anthem," No. 6; and on Friday, of course, the Messiah. On Tuesday and Thursday evenings we are promised miscellaneous concerts of vocal and instrumental music, in which all the principal artists take part. For Friday evening, the customary dress ball in the Shire Hall, and, simultaneously, a concert of chamber music in the College Hall are announced; and with these the Festival will terminate. The programme is well made out with a view to contrast and variety; but some of the selections are decidedly too long,

Digitized by Google

September 9.

The Festival has begun most inauspiciously as far as the weather is concerned. From a tolerably early hour, the rain clouds, first scattered, so as to indulge us with occasional "April showers," then folded and shrouded together in one impenetrable mass, have been deluging the city; and there appears but small likelihood of cessation for the present. This is, at first sight, a dreary prospect; for how much the success of the music-meeting depends upon the many tempted by its attractions from all parts of the country round about need scarcely be said. A wet market-day for the farmers, or a wet fair-day for those who congregate at fairs, could not be more utterly dismal. If a change for the better does not speedily occur it will be a sad drawback to the receipts of the Festival. At the same time every one feels assured that the clergy, nobility, and gentry, whose support is of such moment, will not allow their enthusiasm for the cause in any degree to be weakened. As for the stewards, they form so large a body that, under any circumstances, they are not likely to be asked to contribute to a deficit which just now seems inevitable. It is to be hoped, however, that things may change.

The events of to-day need not take many words. In the morning there was full Cathedral service by the members of the Three Choirs, Dr. Wesley presiding at the organ. As a simple act of worship, this part of the proceedings is of course exempt from criticism; and we shall merely add that the service was that of Sir John Goss in D, including the beautiful "Te Deum" performed in St. Paul's Cathedral at the Thanksgiving for the restoration to health of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, and that for anthem there was "The Wilderness," one of the best known and most admired church compositions of Dr. Wesley. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Arthur Clive, who selected for his text "Paul to the Corinthians," first epistle, first chapter, 21st verse—"For after that in the wisdom of God the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save them that believe." That part of the discourse was devoted to an appeal on behalf of the charity will easily be credited. The congregation was more numerous than the unfavourable state of the weather had led people to expect.

Mendelssohn's Elijah was the oratorio this afternoon, and, despite the antagonistic elements, drew together a very large audience. The solemn effect produced within the walls of a Cathedral by this marvellous inspiration has been so frequently commented upon that little remains to be written on the subject. Had Mendelssohn heard it himself under such conditions—conditions that he could hardly have anticipated—it would in all probability have given a fresh impetus to his always plastic genius. He might have written a grand oratorio expressly for the church, and to his fertile and ever soaring mind some new and imposing form might have suggested itself. But it is useless speculating now. What Mendelssohn actually did, in the course of his brief and restless life, was more than enough to insure his fame and place him in the first rank of composers of sacred music as worthy associate of the greatest of them all. To say anything more about Elijah, although beauties which may at first have escaped notice reveal themselves at each new hearing, would be superfluous. The chorus-singers know it by heart, and invariably sing their share of the oratorio—from "Help, Lord, wilt Thou quite destroy us" to "Thanks be to God, He laveth the thirsty land," in Part I., and from "Be not afraid" to "Lord our Creator," in Part II.—con amore. So do the solo singers, whom it will suffice to mention by name. In Part I. the leading soprano, contralto, and tenor, were Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Enriquez, and Mr. Montem Smith; in Part II. these were replaced by Mdlle. Tietjens, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and Mr. Edward Lloyd (rapidly becoming a favourite). Mr. Santley sang, as usual, the whole of the music of the Prophet, from beginning to end. Misses Crichton and L. Broad, the Rev. A. Robinson, the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe and Mr. J. H. Lambert joined Miss Wynne, Miss Enriquez, and Mr. Montem Smith in the double-quartet, "He shall give His angels charge over Thee." The oratorio, from first to last, was listened to with devout attention, and the many printed editions observed in the hands of amateurs, not a few of them ladies, would have testified, if test were wanting, to the ever-growing popularity of the work.

Tuesday Night.

Since the above was written a promising change in the weather has occurred, which, possibly, may be only temporary, but which it is to be hoped for, in the interests of the Festival, may be enduring. An official account of the numbers attending the performance of Elijah to-day and of the voluntary contributions to the charity is encouraging. No fewer than 1,097 persons heard Elijah, and the collection at the doors of the Cathedral amounted to £117 8s. 5d. The increase in the number over the Festival of 1870 was nearly 200, and the donations exceeded those on the same occasion by nearly £40. In addition to this, at the morning service the collection amounted to £62 8s., so that the days results on the whole surpassed expectation. The first miscellaneous concert at the Shire Hall, in which the principal singers took part, passed off brilliantly, the programme, which included a selection of the choicest pieces from Rossini's Semiramide, being both varied and interesting.

---

September 10.

The oratorio to-day was Handel's Jephthah, with the additional accompaniments of Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Thanks principally to Mr. Joseph Barnby and his Oratorio Concerts, Jephthah is attracting an attention which, infinitely great as are its merits, it can hardly be said to have attracted until now. Its enormous length in a great measure stood in its way, nor was the extreme difficulty of many of the solo airs a particular incitement for singers to study them. Other works of Handel, however, all of those, in short (Israel in Egypt and the Messiah excepted), with which we are familiar, have from time to time been curtailed to meet expediency, and Jephthah has shared the fate of the rest. The liberty thus taken with the old master is inevitable if we are to hear his last oratorio in public at all. What is omitted can easily be consulted in the library by curious students; while there is enough of beauty, grandeur, and sublimity in what remains to satisfy the most enthusiastic amateur of Handel's sacred music. Though the last of Handel's oratorios (begun only eight years before his death, in 1759), and—owing to the attack of gutta serena, ending in total blindness—the one which occupied more of his time and labour than any two of its predecessors, the various halts and delays in its composition allowed for, Jephthah bears no mark of age, impaired powers, or failing invention. On the contrary, never, even in his most universally and justly-renowned works, did the master exhibit more unfettered command of his apparently inexhaustible resources—a fact of which the interesting selection prepared by Mr. Townshend Smith for to-day's performance in the Cathedral was enough to convince any competent judge. The choruses, without exception, are superb, as full of character, vigour, and sublimity as the finest choral displays in the previous oratorios, and, moreover, as remarkable for the mastery of fugue and other ingenious forms of counterpoint, in which Handel's only contemporary rival was John Sebastian Bach. With what ease and facility Handel could impart variety to his chorus by episodes on the fugal style is well known to those who have studied his music. The choruses of Jephthah contain many splendid proofs of this especial gift, and none more striking than "No more to Ammon's god and king," the exultant outburst of the Israelites restored to the true faith, where the episode—

> "Chemosh no more
> Will we adore
> With timbrell'd anthems to Jehovah due"— introducing a new theme, wrought out in the manner referred to, powerfully contrasts with the jubilant strains that make way for it. Another magnificent instance occurs in the supplication of the Israelites to their own God, in which a fugal episode on the words "But turn Thy wrath, and bless once more," just as happily contrasts with the preamble; and again in "When His loud voice in thunder spoke," on the whole, perhaps, the finest chorus of all, which gathers new and fresh interest through the elaborate fugal episode, "They now contract their boisterous pride." Other examples might be cited, but no more are required. The frequent appearance of fugue in the choruses of Handel was not intended to show off the ripeness of his scholarship or his easy mastery of intricate contrivance, but to give characteristic expression to new ideas when new ideas were suggested by the text. It was one of his strongest aids in the construction of his choral music, and he employed it with unrivalled power.

Digitized by Google

It may be said, without further preliminary, that the performance of Jephthah was for the most part above the average excellence to which we are accustomed on these special occasions. Most of the choruses were well given, and among the best the three we have specially pointed out. To these should be added "In glory high, in might serene," and "Ye home of Gilead with one voice," respectively at the end of the first and second parts, both delivered with noteworthy spirit and precision. The solo singers—Misses Edith Wynne and Enriquez, Messrs. W. H. Cummings and Santley—all entered heartily and zealously into the tasks imposed upon them, and were successful in proportion. The part of Iphis fell to Miss Wynne; that of Storge to Miss Enriquez; that of Zebul, with its declamatory recitatives, to Mr. Santley; that of Jephthah to Mr. Cummings. Among the pieces which seemed to make the deepest impression were the airs, "In gentle murmurs," and "Farewell, ye limpid streams," sung by Miss Edith Wynne, who, in the former, enjoyed the advantage of Mr. Radcliff's flute obbligato; the recitative and air, "Scenes of horror" (one of the most striking "numbers,") sung by Miss Enriquez; "Deeper and deeper still," with its traditional pendent, "Waft her, angels, through the skies," allotted to Mr. Cummings, who had also to sing the florid and extremely trying air, "His mighty arm with sudden blow," near the end of the first part; the recitative and air, "Pour forth no more unheeded prayers," in Part I., and the air, "Laud her, all ye virgins, to air," which immediately precedes the final chorus of Part II.—both sung by Mr. Santley. The additional accompaniments supplied for Jephthah by Mr. Arthur Sullivan won the general approval of musicians when they were first heard at Mr. Barnby's concerts in London, and closer acquaintance with them fully justifies the favourable opinion then expressed. While delicate and unobtrusive, they are at the same time ingenious and clever—the work, in short, of a practised musician.

The day's performance—a very long one, it must be admitted—wound up with Rossini's Stabat Mater, the ever-increasing popularity of which renders the chance of our hearing the Stabat Mater of Pergolesi, or, better still, the Stabat Mater of Haydn, within a short period more and more problematical. The work of the gifted and genial Italian, however, is so melodious and beautiful, and, from the point of view taken by its composer, so religiously devout, that it can never be heard without satisfaction when adequately interpreted. That it was so on the present occasion may be taken for granted when it is stated that the quartet of chief vocalists comprised Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi, who all sang their very best. The duet, "Quis est homo," sung to perfection by Mdlle. Tietjens and Madame Trebelli, made a visible impression, and had it been so delivered in a concert-room, instead of a church, an encore would have been inevitable. The choruses were all that could be desired, and the orchestra, which had already distinguished itself by a fine performance of Handel's overture to Jephthah, no less distinguished itself by the manner in which the accompaniments to the Stabat were executed. The attraction of to-day's performance, varied and interesting as was the selection, was not so great as that of Mendelssohn's Elijah yesterday. The contributions to the charity, nevertheless, were still more liberal, the collections after the oratorio amounting to £190 7s. 5d., which, added to £5 7s. 5d. obtained after each morning's service, gave £195 14s. 10d. as the total receipts.

A line must at present suffice to record the complete success of the performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul this evening, in the Cathedral, which was lighted up for the occasion. There was a very full attendance.

---

VENICE.—The Communal Council have granted a subvention of 50,000 francs for the Carnival season at the Fenice. The company will probably be that engaged for the Teatro Nacional of Madrid. According to report, the latter theatre will, in consequence of the disturbed state of affairs, not be opened.

THE EMPRESS MARIA THERESA AT PRINCE ESTERHAZY'S.*

By C. F. Pohl.

(Concluded from page 568.)

On this day there was a public dinner in the grand hall. An opportunity was again afforded all strangers and residents of seeing the Imperial Court, and of admiring the magnificence displayed by a princely house. During the dinner, the most accomplished virtuosos of the Capelle played various concert-pieces. On this occasion (or perhaps the day previous), Haydn was presented to his sovereign. It was not the first time he had stood before her, and he must have been involuntarily reminded of an episode of his youth. Between 1740 and 1750, Maria Theresa frequently visited the Imperial country-seat of Schönbrunn, and the neighbouring church. The Court Musicians took part in the service, but, having been greatly reduced in number since 1741, they were not able unaided to do duty elsewhere than at Court. In such cases, therefore, they had to be reinforced by the choir of St. Stephens. Haydn, then a singing-boy at the Cathedral, was called on in his turn, and conscientiously profited by his extra freedom. In the first place, he was irresistibly attracted by the scaffolding erected for completing the château; he climbed from story to story, encouraging his comrades by his example. The Empress, seeing from her windows the break-neck doings of the young gentlemen, repeatedly, but in vain, gave orders that all climbing should be forbidden. At last, things became really too bad. The Empress applied to her Court Chapelmaster, Reutter, describing to him a round-headed, light-haired urchin as the ringleader, and ordering that the latter should have a sound spanking. The singing-boy had grown up to be a celebrated man, but there still lurked in him the same roguish spirit, and he thanked the Empress very humbly for the "spanking she had been graciously pleased to order him." The good-natured sovereign smiled and observed that the spanking had, at any rate, been productive of good fruit. On the present occasion, a gold snuff-box filled with ducats was the means of bringing about a mutual reconciliation.

At 4 o'clock p.m., the Empress and her Court attended a performance in the Marionette Theatre. Acting dolls, known as early as the 15th century, were very popular; they had moveable limbs, managed by a wire from above. The directors produced not only folk's pieces but ventured upon Shakespeare and operettas; travesties of heroic operas were especially liked. In Italy and England the figures were called Fantocini.† In 1716, Gottfried Prehauser, afterwards known under the permanent mask of Hanswurst (Jack Pudding), played for some time at Vienna. The Italian Contini, too, performed comedy and ballet with marionettes in a large booth on the New Market-Place in the same capital, and the Marionette-Theatre of the Countess von Stockhammer is mentioned as recently as 1798. The doll-company at Esterhaz was under the direction of L. von Pauersbach. This gentleman was Court-Secretary to the Imperial Landrecht ‡ of Lower Austria in Vienna, and passionately fond of mechanical inventions. The dolls'-theatre at which he had worked for twenty years was purchased of him by Prince Nicholas for a high sum, on condition that he should manage it for a year and a day. In 1778, Pauersbach married Marie Anna Tauber, who was a member of Prince Esterhazy's operatic company, and, through the mediation of the Emperor Joseph, appeared in Vienna, where she did not please. After his marriage Pauersbach and his wife went to St. Petersburgh. Pauersbach and Bader, the Prince's librarian, wrote the pieces for the marionettes and read the parts at the performances. The, actors, also, engaged by the Prince, had to bind themselves to take part in the marionette performances. After 1770, Haydn himself had a small theatre, which he opened during the Carnival with his musicians, and which, at the Prince's wish, he brought to Eisenstadt that the Princess might witness the performances.

On the present occasion, the programme presented to the Empress comprised the marionette opera, Philémon und Baucis, with a prelude: Der Götterrath, oder: Jupiter's Reise auf die

---

* From the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung.

† This holds good of Italy only. In England the term "Fantocini" is applied not to the figures but to the entire entertainment.—TRANSLATOR.

‡ One of the law courts.

Digitized by Google

Erde. Philemon und Baucis was written as a drama by C. Gottlieb Pfeffel, in 1753; Berner, already mentioned, performed it with his company of children in 1763 at Saverne and Strassburg. The same subject was used for a festival opera by Gluck, in 1769, under the title of Bauci e Filemone. In modern times M. Gounod wrote, immediately after his Faust, the opera of Philâmon et Baucis. Described as an "entirely new ballet," Philemon und Baucis, oder: Die belohnte Tugend, was given at Brunswick, on the 13th March, 1772, simultaneously with the first performance of Lessing's Emilea Galotti. The plot is well-known: clothed as pilgrims Jupiter and Mercury visit the earth, and, touched by the hospitality of the old Phrygian couple, promise to restore them to youth. Moved by gratitude the pair beg that they may dedicate their hut as a temple to Jupiter and devote themselves, as priest and priestess, to perform service there in his honour. Of Haydn's music to this plot, all that has been preserved is the pretty little Overture in D minor (mentioned also as a Symphony), and a canzonet: "Ein Tag, der Allen Freude bringt."

Immediately the curtain went up the spectators were surprised by the representation of Olympus and the assembled Gods, but their astonishment was excited still more by what followed. The beauty and completeness of the scenery, the admirable machinery, and the correct movements of the richly dressed dolls evoked loud applause, which reached its culminating point at the conclusion of the opera when the allegorical show was changed into a tribute of homage to the Empress and the reigning house. Maria Theresa, deeply astounded, repeatedly expressed to the Prince her satisfaction and stimulated by her own example the applause of her retinue. The impression produced by the performance was so lasting that, some years later, she sent for every one concerned, the operatic company, the band, and all the machinery, to Schönbrunn, where she had an Italian opera and a marionette-opera performed. We all know her saying: "If I want to hear a good opera, I go to Esterhaz."

After the performance the sovereign, attended by her retinue, proceeded to the lower room to supper, and, at the conclusion of the repast, went to a spot beyond the Park, to see some fireworks by Rabel. The way to the stand lay through a double row of coloured lanterns. The Empress herself applied the match to the fireworks; their arrangement, quantity, and splendour, excited general astonishment. The Prince then conducted the Imperial Court to another spot, festively decorated and magically illuminated, in the vicinity of the Park. Especial interest was here excited by paintings, lighted in a manner previously unknown by Van Dyke. The whole plain, accommodating more than eight thousand spectators, seemed studded with variegated lamps, forming all sorts of figures. A festive procession of about a thousand rustics, of both sexes, waving their banners aloft, now appeared, decked out with flowers and ribbons, and executed some impetuous national dances to the strains of their national music. In their joy at seeing their beloved sovereign among them, they filled the air with shouts of: "Long live Maria Theresa! Hurrah for our Queen!" while the members of the Imperial retinue mingled with them and took part in their dances. It was with difficulty that the Empress could withdraw from the general rejoicings which were kept up for a considerable time longer.

On the third morning, after rewarding with presents all the agents and servants in the Prince's employ, the Empress left the château at something after nine. The Prince accompanied her as far as Oedenburg, which the Imperial party reached by half-past ten. That Royal free city, which had not seen its sovereign within its walls for nearly a century, had decked itself in festive garb. Outside the walls, along the high road, were erected triumphal arches, and, near the Potschy, or Hungarian Gate, an inspection was held of part of the Carabineer regiment, under the command of Lieutenant-Field-Marshal Count von Kinsky. At the Gate the illustrious lady was received by a brilliant crowd of generals and staff-officers, as well as by the magistrates, headed by the burgomaster, Andreas Torkos, who handed his sovereign the key of the town entrusted to it in 1681 by the Emperor Leopold. Preceded on horseback by Carl Artner, the town-captain, and Jacob Kamper, the procession advanced amid the cheers of the inhabitants, ranged in two lines, and the firing of the cannon placed all round on the city bastions, through the Georgengasse, which was decked with inscriptions, emblems, and garlands, to the Ursuline Convent. After hearing mass the Empress drove to the Esterhazy Palace. In the name of the magistrature, the daugher of Joseph Blasovsky, the town judge, handed her specimens, in delicate baskets, of the most beautiful fruit produced in those parts. The members of the magistracy were then presented to Her Majesty, and permitted to kiss her hand. After dining at the Prince's table Maria Theresa visited the Noble Convictorium, thanked the magistrates for the way in which she had been received, and, at half-past three, set out upon her return to Schönbrunn.

Even at the present day, after the visitor to the seat of the Prince Esterhazys has seen everything else in that remarkable place, the guide still shows him the honoured apartments "of our Queen, Maria Theresa."

CARL WILHELM.

As announced in last week's Musical World, this composer, to whom Germany undoubtedly owes a heavy debt of gratitude, is no more. He died on the 25th August, at 2 p.m., in the Crown Hotel, Schmalkalden. We gather the following particulars concerning him from the Kölnische Zeitung.

He was born on the 5th September, 1815, in the small Thurringian town just named, and, while yet very young, began taking music lessons from his father, who was an organist. After having continued his musical studies in Cassel and Frankfort-on-the-Maine, he settled in 1840, as conductor of the Liedertafel, at Crefeld. It was here that, at a grand concert given to celebrate the silver wedding of the present Emperor Wilhelm and the Empress Augusta, he first had his setting of "Die Wacht am Rhein" executed by one hundred singers. One member of the Liedertafel, fearful of the anger of Napoleon, then a victor in the Crimean war, entered a formal protest, asserting that such a manifestation of feeling was a dangerous piece of impertinence. On the 6th July of the same year, however, the Prince of Prussia (now Emperor) heard the vocal quartet of the Brothers Steinhaus in Elberfeld sing the song; sixteen years later it was destined to accompany to victory his troops marching against the French. How, in the year 1870, after it had, so to speak, existed only in the narrow circle of vocal associations, it suddenly sprang up into life at the first braying of the war-trump; how it called the people to a general levy; and how, in every nook and corner of Germany, it preceded "Like thunder, and like clash of swords, and like the noise of waves," an enthusiastic nation in arms, are facts still green and fresh in our memory. In the year 1865, the composer, who had then been created a Royal Musical Director, was compelled by increasing illness to leave Crefeld and return to his native place Schmalkalden. There he spent his latter years in close retirement. The new German Empire granted him, through the Imperial Chancellor, a yearly pension; the Emperor conferred on him an order; the Empress had a gold medal struck especially in his honour; and the Vocal Associations of Germany endowed a Wilhelm-Foundation. He will always live in the memory of the German people.

MILAN.—Signor Petrella's new opera, Giovanna di Napoli, does not seem destined to have a very long run at the Scala. As already stated in these columns, Signor Petrella was called on fourteen times during the first performance, but fourteen recalls are not much—in Italy, bien entendu—for so popular a composer, with whom laurel wreaths and serenades are nearly as plentiful as blackberries. On the second night, the attendance of the public was very small, and, on the third, smaller still. The friends of Signor Petrella explain this by asserting that it is a great mistake to open the Scala in August and September, for the sake of catching strangers who may not come, as is the case this year. They say the season ought not to begin before November, when the regular habitués would have returned to the city and the theatre be full. They attack, also, the libretto of Signor Ghislanzoni. That gentleman's admirers retort by saying that the libretto can be called his no longer, so altered and cut about has it been by bungling hands. For instance, an entirely new fourth act has been substituted by some poetical cobbler, or cobbling poet, of Naples. Sum total: Giovanna di Napoli cannot fairly be entitled a triumph. Signor Verdi's Aida is to brought out in the course of the season with Signore Fricci, Singer, Signori Bolis, Randolfini, and Castelmary.—The next novelty, already in rehearsal, at the Teatro Dal Verme, will be Signor Sangiorgi's Guiseppe Balsamo.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

September 3rd, 1873.

La Fille de Madame Angot has taken so at Boulogne that, with the exception of Sunday, when Mignon was placed upon the stage, and Monday, made an extra night for the production of Les Huguenots (M. Cazabon as Raoul), I have really little to report—theatrically—except the fact of crowded houses, which houses thoroughly appreciate M. Lecocq's opéra comique, and which, I must say, is better interpreted each time it is played. On three occasions last week, the manager had to refuse admission to the crowds who flocked to hear it; and, though the "posters" were printed announcing other pieces, had to come back to his old love, La Fille, at the last moment. "De Madame Angot, Je suis la fille." The Valse, the "Conspirators' Chorus," &c., are being whistled, hummed, and otherwise murdered all over Boulogne.

The concerts last week have been numerous. On Sunday, Mr. Dulcken took his benefit at the Etablissement. He was ably assisted by an artist well known, I believe, in London, Madame Conneau. She sang three times: first, an air by Massé, "Flor d'Aliza;" secondly, a mélodie, "Au printemps" (Gounod); and, lastly, some variations of Handel. Mdlle. Boulanger, whose very clever handling of the violin elicited much applause from both connoisseurs and the public, played two fantasias, one on Linda, the other on Rigoletto. Mr. Dulcken played, as the first piece of the concert, Beethoven's Ballet des Chevaliers (manuscrit inédit). It was composed by the great musician at Bonn, in 1790, for the theatre there, and dedicated to the Count Waldstein. Otto Jahn had the score, and it was bought, after his death, by an amateur, who allowed Mr. Dulcken to transcribe it. He also played a funeral march by Chopin, a Saltarello by Heller, and "Le Long du Ruisseau."

On Saturday last the children's supper, followed by a ball, took place. It was a very amusing sight. Fancy 200 children dancing for an hour (some very juvenile ones held one another at arm's length and hopped about; might I say, they were little skippers, and, therefore, not mal àpropos, at our sea-side home?) After that, cakes and——no! not ale, but very frothy lemonade—more cakes—more dancing—more lemonade, &c. The grand feature of the evening was the "Giantesse de Boulogne," 16 feet in height, a "got up" figure which much amused some of the little ones and frightened others. The third children's ball and entertainment takes place to-night. Each child on entering receives a ticket entitling him or her to receive a "Volume Francais ou Anglais." N.B.—Being very international, the English will receive French story books, the French will receive English.

La Fille de Mdme. Angot still holds the boards against all comers, and is announced for Thursday next. Saturday, Faust; probably Les Huguenots for Sunday—with Trovère and Domino Noir in rehearsal.

Grand fêtes on Saturday, Sunday, and Monday, the band of the Guides, from Brussels, taking part in the same. S. C.

---

NAPLES.—Dinorah has proved such a hit at the Mercadante that there has been a day performance of it; a most unusual thing here.

GENOA.—Signor Mariani's sister has made the Municipality another present. It includes a number of letters written to the deceased conductor by some of the leading composers and literary men of the day, and the portrait of Herr R. Wagner, having beneath it the words "Evviva Mariani" and the signature of the Composer of the Future, in that composer's own hand. The Municipality have ordered the letters to be preserved in the Town Library, and the portrait to be placed in one of the rooms of the Palazzo Civico.

SPA.—Before these lines appear in print, a grand musical festival on the German model will have been held here. It was to last three days, the 8th, 9th, and 10th inst. The number of performers was to be 250, under the direction of MM. Daussoigne-Méhul, from Glasgow, Jules de Swert, formerly of Berlin, and L. Guillaume of this place. The following was to be the programme: First day—Die Ruinen von Athen, Beethoven; music to Antigone, Mendelssohn; a Cantata, Etienne Subre; the Seventh Symphony, Beethoven, and the Prelude to Lohengrin. R. Wagner. Second day—Symphony, "Im Walde," J. Raff; Violin Concerto, Beethoven (performed by M. Jehan Prume); Faust overture, R. Wagner, and the "Roman Carnival" and Hungarian March," Hector Berlioz. Third day—Overture to Ruy Blas, Mendelssohn; "Jubel Ouverture," C. M. von Weber; and various solo pieces, vocal and instrumental.

MUSIC AT MELBOURNE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

Miss Alice May still continues as the great attraction in English Opera. The Australasian of July 12th says:—

"At the Prince of Wales Operahouse Miss Alice May is the reigning attraction. She has appeared in Barbe-Bleue, The Bohemian Girl, The Grand Duchess, and Satanella."

And again:—

"The opera, Satanella, has been performed for a week with very fair success. Miss Alice May has sustained the extremely arduous part of the demon page with ever increasing credit to herself."

The Age criticises her performance as follows:—

"Miss May took the part of Satanella with great éclat, and sang better than she has done any night this season. The great variety of styles the rôle includes, and the numerous changes of dress involved, make the part an arduous one; but, despite this, Miss May was fully as successful in the last as in the first act and in all was excellent."

Punch, with his usual gallantry, calls her "Sweet Alice May, and the pompous Argus admits that she has all the requirements, viz—face, figure, voice, and dramatic power, suitable for the part.

We understand that Miss May intends visiting America at the conclusion of the present season—which, by the way, seems likely to be a long one from present appearances—via New Zealand and California. Signor Biscacianti, the well-known impresario in the United States, and who is now managing Mr. Lyster's Italian Opera in Adelaide, assures her that she will have great success there. Miss Alice May is well supported by Mr. Beaumont, Mr. Farley, Mr. Rainford, Miss Georgia Hodson, and a large company, under the bâton of Mr. G. B. Allen.

The very large musical public of Melbourne are anxiously looking forward to the return of Madame Goddard from Sydney, where her success has been very great. The teachers here, whose opinions guide a large number of people, are very anxious that she should play some of her classical pieces—Beethoven's Op. 106, and the like.

The Philharmonic Society has just given Sullivan's Prodigal Son with success as far as the performance was concerned, but to a small attendance.

Signor Giorza and Mr. Hill have been giving most successful organ recitals and concerts for three successive Saturdays at the Town Hall, at which Signorine Bosisio and Riboldi, Mrs. Cutter, and Signori Susini and Cecchi, assisted. Verily the town that can find 4,000 people for a concert, 3,000 for English Opera, 3,000 for the theatre, where music is often a feature, besides audiences of two or three other halls, must be a musical town, and such is Melbourne.

Benedict's Lily of Killarney is in rehearsal, and Miss Alice May will shortly make her first appearance in the rôle of Eily.

Melbourne, July 15th, 1873.

---

LODI.—A new theatre, capable of accommodating upwards of 2,000 persons, will be opened in December. The chances are that it will not frequently be too crowded, as the whole town contains only 20,000 inhabitants, all told.

ANTWERP.—The new opera, Le Roi l'a dit, has been most successfully produced here, under the personal direction of the composer, M. Léo Delibes. The King attended on the first night, and the composer had the honour of being presented to his Majesty.

BRUSSELS.—The Théâtre de la Monnaie was to have been opened on the 1st inst., but the event was postponed for a week or so by the new manager, M. Campo-Casso, who has in this respect imitated his predecessors. Punctuality does not appear to be held in particularly high esteem by the impresarii of La Monnaie.—There are grave apprehensions that there will be no Concerts Populaires this season. M. Vieuxtemps does not seem inclined to act again as conductor, and M. Dupont is too much engaged with other things.

EMS.—Madame Mathilde Mallinger was staying here a short time since. She came to seek relief from a severe and obstinate catarrh. She left perfectly cured, and, accompanied by her husband, the Baron von Schimmelpfennig, proceeded to the village of Eger on the Tegersee, for the purpose of studying, with Signor Schimon, from Florence, the characters of the heroine in Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris, and of Mrs. Ford, in Nicolai's Lustige Weiber von Windsor, those being the characters in which she is to make her re-appearance at the Royal Operahouse, Berlin.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SIR FORTESCUE POLE.—Yes, like other gifted composers, Haydn could at times indulge in outbursts of admirable musical fooling. We may cite the "Ox Minuet" and the "Candle Symphony."

R. G.—The subject is still involved in considerable mystery. Internal evidence, however, seems to indicate forcibly that the composition is by another hand. Perhaps time may satisfactorily solve our doubts one way or the other.

QUAVER.—Michael Kelly was on terms of intimacy with Mozart and was one of the original artists in Le Nozze di Figaro.

INQUIRER.—The word Capelle (or Kapelle) means a small building (chapel) for private divine service, especially such a building as forms part of the palace or mansion of a prince or nobleman; 2. a number of musicians engaged by a prince or nobleman to perform the sacred music in such a Capelle; 3. any other important body of musicians, as the orchestra of a theatre, or even the band of a regiment. Hence the conductor is styled the Capellmeister, i.e., master of the chapel or band.

SPENSER WHISK.—You refer to a series of concerts, with Prince George Galitzen as conductor, which were given at the Surrey Gardens in 1861. They were called "The Wednesday Concerts," but the title was not a new one.

PALINDROME.—It is a style of writing against which every real lover of the drama has always set his face. Thank goodness, it is at length dying out. As for the author in question,

"Autour de lui voltigent l'équivoque,
La louche énigme, et les mauvais bons mots,
Les calembours, qui sont l'esprit des sots."

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 13, 1873.

THE apothegm that: Use is second Nature, may, I am inclined to think, be very safely allowed to pass without discussion, though there are, I grant, many exceptions. Among them, by the way, I include the case of eels; for, despite the assertion advanced by the legendary peripatetic vendor of fish that eels are used to skinning, I contend: first, that they are not used to it, if by "used" we imply "accustomed," seeing that they are never called upon to undergo the process more than once; and, secondly, that, even if they were in this sense used to it—which, I have just denied—they never were reconciled to it, and probably never will be; a baked potato may, indeed, not writhe under the loss of its skin, but a live eel's feelings on the subject must be very different.

With certain exceptions, then, the apothegm above quoted may be received as valid. What is true of use, however, holds good of its opposite, and we may say with equal truth: "Abuse is second Nature." I do not by this allude to the undoubted partiality exhibited by the ladies of Billingsgate for the lavish employment of strong language; what I mean is that there is not an abuse, no matter how monstrous, that may not become second nature, like use. It is this principle alone which explains the tough vitality of such abuses as the sacrifices in honour of Brindhâvana C'audra, alias, our old friend Juggernauth; the immolation of human victims by the Druids; the staining their teeth black by the ladies of Japan; the wholesale slaughter of female infants in China; the press-gang in England, in the times when George the Third was King; and the practice of over-loading ships, or sending crazy vessels out to sea, now that his grand-daughter Victoria sits on the throne.

There seems to be some analogy between abuses and buildings. To a man standing close against it, St. Peter's at Rome would not appear larger than a modern trumpery stuccoed suburban church, supposing the man to occupy the same relative position to the latter as to the former. That he may obtain a proper and just notion of the vast proportions, the stupendous size of St. Peter's, he must remove to a distance, and then survey it. So with abuses; people near them have no notion how great, how immense they are. This accounts for our immediate progenitors wallowing so contentedly, to speak metaphorically, in the slush, filth, and garbage of Smithfield, and burying their deceased relatives and friends, if not actually under their own door steps, or in their own dust bins, at least opposite their shop windows, stowing them away under some of our busiest thoroughfares—say the Strand or Tottenham Court Road—as though they were so many main drains or gas pipes. At the present distance of time, we see the enormity of this, but we are still jammed up too closely against Leicester Square to know the extent of that abuse. When that now degraded spot, when that disgrace to London shall be laid out as a pleasant garden, with flowers, and fountains, and gravel walks, and convenient seats, our Posterity will open its eyes very wide, and wonder why we should never have utilised so charming a site otherwise than as an asylum for an invalid statue, and a refuse for friendless oyster-shells, homeless kettles, and abandoned boots.

Among the abuses of long standing against which a set was recently made, I may mention that of giving money to box-keepers at our theatres. A very short time since, a box-keeper looked as confidently for his fee as though he had been a member of the College of Physicians. Talk of black-mail, why all the Donalds, and Dugalds, and Sawnies who ever drove a Northumberland farmer's flocks over the border, never surpassed for impudence and pertinacity the individuals who used to open the box doors, or usher a man to his stall. When any one demurred, the answer was: "We pay for our situations, and we must live." With regard to the second assertion: "We must live," I always felt very much inclined to answer, as Talleyrand answered a creditor of his who ventured to make the same remark: "Je n'en vois pas la nécessité."

Yes; the box-keepers paid for their situations. Just as old maimed soldiers, in return for past services, received from a grateful country permission to beg, box-keepers purchased from their managers, for a stipulated sum, the same privilege. A nice system, truly. Once admit the justice of it, and it may be almost indefinitely extended. If it is right for a manager to make the public pay him for keeping a particular class of officials, and compel the said public to furnish their wages as well, why not tax the band also, and send the conductor or leader round between the acts to levy contributions on the audience? Why were not the latter called upon to defray the cost of the stage-carpenters; to guarantee the salary of the property-man; to become security for the gas bill; and be under the obligation of seeing that a liberal sum was provided every Saturday for that serviceable though not showy band of adherents, the cleaners, whose duty it is to dust, sweep, and scour such portions of the theatre as require these operations? The reader may remark, in the language of Horatio: "'Twere to consider too curiously, to consider so." In the words of Hamlet, I venture to answer: "No, faith, not a jot!" The above suggestions are but the strictly logical consequence of the system of feeing box-keepers. Managers did not think of them; had they thought of them, I verily believe some of their number would have carried them out, or, at any rate, have made the attempt.

Digitized by Google

At length people began to murmur; presently their murmurs were changed into complaints, and some indignant individuals, smarting under box-official extortion, boiling over with indignation, and blessed with more energy than their fellow-martyrs, put into action the fearful threat of "writing to the Times" and other papers. The Press, also, took the matter up, as did several well-known leading London managers, who, with a just appreciation of their own dignity as gentlemen, and of their duty to the public, set an example which not all their brethren have seen fit to follow. The upshot of the matter was that at most of the principal metropolitan theatres the obnoxious imposition was abolished. Notices to this effect were duly and prominently posted up on the walls of corridor and stair-case, lobby and crush-room. "Of course, no more fees were given," observes, perhaps, some particularly innocent reader. To this guileless being I reply by asking whether the urgent appeals, to be seen in every menagerie, for visitors to refrain from thrusting their arms between the bars of the cages, prevent some idiots from affording the lion, the tiger, the rhinoceros, or the panther, a fine opportunity of doing them grievous bodily injury—whether the poles stuck in the ice, and bearing a board with the word "dangerous" inscribed on it, deter a goodly phalanx of skaters and others from meandering about precisely on the very spot where their presence bids fair to afford employment for the Royal Humane Society's drags, and where there is every chance of their meeting with a watery death? "Some men," we know, on indisputable authority, "has plenty money, and no brains; while others has plenty brains, and no money." The members of the former category seem intent on proving afresh the truth of the proverb as to the facility with which a certain class of persons part with their capital. Despite all that has been said and done, they will continue to thrust gratuities into not unwilling palms. The consequence is that boxkeepers still look for such gratuities, even from those blessed with more brains, but not, perhaps, with "plenty money;" and who are subjected not unfrequently to impoliteness or actual rudeness, because they are resolved on doing their best to carry out a highly desirable reform.

Thus the snake is, at present, only scotched, not killed. The practice of giving fees to box-keepers, a practice which never entirely ceased, is reviving, and the significant way in which the theatrical janitor lingers about and eyes you after opening the box door, proves he does not expect you to pay any attention to the notices on the walls. Perhaps if those managers who are thoroughly in earnest on the subject were not only to request the public from giving fees, but to intimate in addition that, so far from doing a box-keeper a service by slipping a shilling into his hand, the donor was exposing the man to the risk of instant dismissal, we might stand some chance of doing away with a nuisance which, if not absolutely intolerable, is, at all events, most objectionable.

L.

---

Moss.—M. Denefve has resigned his post of Director of the School of Music, after having been attached to that institution for thirty-seven years. To mark their appreciation of his long services, the Communal Council, while accepting his resignation, have conferred on him the title of Honorary Director.

Pesth.—There is to be a grand jubilee-celebration on the 31st October, the Abbate Franz Liszt's birthday. All the arrangements are undertaken by the Hungarian Literary and Dramatic Club. By the way, the Abbate has been very busy composing lately. He has just completed his third oratorio: St Stanislaus. Among other new works of his is said to be A New Method of Pianoforte Playing.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Last year, Herr Scaria, the well-known basso of Dresden, was engaged to give some "starring" performances at Prague. The day previous to his first appearance, when he was to sing in Der fliegende Holländer, he occupied, in the Hall of Mirrors, as it is called, at the Arch-Duke John Hotel, Prague, a table near the entrance, and was busily engaged on a fine haunch of venison. He was not, however, so absorbed as to be unable to observe that the Hall Porter of the establishment kept walking up and down on the other side of the large glass door, and casting very anxious looks at him as he sat enjoying the venison. Herr Scaria fancied, perhaps, that the man was taking the measure of his head for a laurel crown to be flung on the stage the next night. If so, he was soon awakened from that pleasant dream of floral honours. Suddenly pushing open the door, the Porter entered, and came up to the artist. Bowing very low, he said: "I beg your pardon, Sir, but do you not think you had better select another table? There is a fearful draught here, near the door."—"O, I am not afraid," replied Herr Scaria.—"Yes, but I am," replied the Porter, encouraged by Herr Scaria's affable manner. "I've been speculating a bit, you see. I've got in my pocket ten orchestral stalls for your first appearance to-morrow night. Suppose you were to be taken hoarse!" Herr Scaria looked in astonishment at the speaker. Such unselfish interest in his welfare touched him deeply, and—he selected at once another table.

---

A worthy Hungarian, who had paid a visit to the Pressburg Theatre, drew out a huge bottle from his pocket during one of the entr'actes. After taking a long pull at it himself, and being apparently much revived by the process, he kindly offered the bottle to a neighbour. The latter thanked him, observing rather sarcastically that they were not in a refreshment-room. "I don't know," replied the Hungarian, "so much about that. I see the ladies up there in the boxes eating ices and drinking lemonade. Why then should not I be allowed a sip at my bottle? It's only a matter of taste after all."

---

Some time since, M. Offenbach was closeted with the manager of a leading Parisian theatre. A young composer, desirous of speaking with the manager, and fearing that, if kept long waiting, he should lose his train, sent in a card. The manager read, in a loud voice: "M. Litolff." M. Offenbach immediately evaporated.

---

The computed cost of the Ninth Edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica, about to be published by Adam and Charles Black, Edinburgh, is £209,000.

---

The following articles were recently sold by auction in Paris: A dozen and a half black bordered clouds in good condition; a bran new rainbow; an excellent snowstorm, consisting of flakes of fine paper; two others, ditto, inferior quality; three bottles of lightning powder; a setting sun (very fine); a new moon: some highly effective thunder. There were, moreover, a sea of twelve big waves, the tenth wave being rather bigger than the rest and somewhat damaged; an elephant; a crocodile; three dragons; and seven phials of a mixture for producing apparitions and blue flames.

---

A local paper informs its readers that a Vocal Funeral Association has been founded at Minden, in Germany.

---

The regular money-taker being unavoidably absent was temporarily replaced at the Exhibition of the Bearded Lady, and other natural phenomena, by a pretty, bright-eyed, ingenuous girl of about fourteen.—"Haw—I suppose the—er—Bearded Lady is your mother," observed a languid swell, as he paid his admission money. "No, Sir," said the extempore money-taker, naïvely, "she's my father."

---

Schoolmaster (pointing to letter).—"Surely you know that letter—come; what is it." Pupil.—"Yes, I know it well enough, please, Sir—by sight. But I can't tell you its name, please, Sir."

---

Munich.—Herr Meyer, the present Capellmeister at the Royal Opera, is far from affording universal satisfaction. He wants dash and spirit; the performance of Robert le Diable under his direction was, according to all accounts, a very slow affair.

Digitized by Google

THE YOUNG GIRL RESTORED.*

(From "Another World.")

Formerly, as before observed, many were pronounced mad who were perfectly sane, but madness itself was scarcely ever recognized until, by violent actions or incoherent words, the patient had excited fear in others. Numbers afflicted with incipient madness might have been easily cured had its presence been detected; but they were allowed to inflict great injury upon their neighbours. This they did the more effectually as their madness was not even suspected until the symptoms of the malady became too glaring to be disregarded.

I will relate to you a case which presented some remarkable features. A little girl, about four years old, fell down some stone steps, and received a violent blow across the nose, which swelled enormously. She probably was otherwise injured, but the injury on the nose was the only one then observed. After some time the effects of the accident were to all appearance completely cured.

As the girl grew in years, she gave signs of marvellous talent. But apparently unable to apply herself to any particular pursuit, she became wearied of one thing after another, and continually thirsted for novelty. This incessant desire for change extended to everything—to friendship, love, dress, amusements; to the most serious and most trifling matters. She was happy and melancholy at intervals, and always in excess; nay, in her fits of extreme despondency she would even meditate suicide.

Though disliked by some for her wayward and capricious disposition, she was a great favourite with others. I should add that she was extremely beautiful, indeed lovely, very witty, highly gifted, and withal so fascinating that she never failed to charm every one at the first interview, the novelty of the excitement, and a natural desire to please giving impulse to her will. Although possessing so many gifts, she was very jealous and envious of others. She often offended against the laws, and but for her beauty and the powerful interest she excited, would have been subjected to severe punishment.

Many were the offers of marriage which she accepted in succession, abandoning one suitor after the other without any adequate reason, or any feeling of compunction. At length she unexpectedly accepted a man of whom she had scarcely any previous knowledge. The marriage, made at her request in a headstrong fit of impatience, took place a few days after the proposal had been made. A child was born, but long before its birth she had become tired of her husband. The child she loved passionately at first, but soon became weary even of this object of her tenderest affection, and looked upon it with indifference! All these events had taken place during the reign of my predecessor. Under my laws such a marriage would have been impossible.

At the age of twenty-six a frightful accident happened to this lady—she fell into a vat of scalding liquor—a beverage prepared with honey. We have a very effective remedy for scalds, and, though severely burnt, she was eventually cured, but the fright had sadly shocked her nerves; a violent fever seized the blood, she fell into a trance, her eyes were fixed and glassy, and she gave no signs of movement except by swallowing the little nourishment that was offered her in a liquid form.

This trance lasted some days. On awakening, the patient asked, with the tone and manner of a child, how old she was. She was extremely calm, and a remarkable change had come over her. On the doctor's asking why she inquired about her age, she replied that during her sleep she had been in what seemed a long, sad, and changeful dream! She then related some details of the injury she received when at four years old she fell down the stone steps. Those around her first thought that her mind was wandering, but this notion was soon dispelled. She spoke of incidents of her life extending over many years, as though they passed in a dream; one incident of this dream being that she had given birth to a child, and suffered acute pain. At one moment she saw herself in a family of strangers who were very kind, but she knew them not; then she saw her family in great grief.

One of the impressions that this seeming sad dream made upon her was, that swarms of insects had followed and enveloped her on all sides, stinging and causing her excruciating suffering, which had extended over a series of years of more than lifelong duration.

Sometimes, in moments of despondency, she saw the beautiful form of an angel, radiant with light, who spoke to her in soothing tones, and entreated her to be patient, assuring her that her sufferings were ordained for a good end, and that by patience and the sweetness of her nature she would attain the power of casting from her the torments she endured, and that after doing much good during her mortal career, she would, when her time came to quit the world, be placed high amongst myriads of angels. She said that whenever urged by despair to relieve herself from her pains by a desperate course, this bright and beautiful angel would stand before her and pour words of consolation and hope into her ear.

In relating the incidents of her supposed dream, her whole manner was so different from the former state of excitement, to which her friends had been accustomed, that all saw she was perfectly rational, although relating as a dream what had occurred during twenty-two years of her actual life. It seemed as though all the time that had elapsed since she was four years of age belonged, as it were, to another and differently constituted brain; and that she had now resumed the thread of her life from the time when she was four years old, the period of the first accident.

When the husband and child were brought to her she knew them not, though she had some vague notion of having seen them in her dream. The husband prayed her to return to him. She said she was not his wife, and could not accept him as a husband; that she felt no love for the child, and could not even like it as a playmate. She recollected her parents when they were twenty-two years of age, and could not understand how they could be so much changed.

In all her occupations and amusements she acted as a young child, but she gradually increased in understanding, and in sixteen years after her recovery she became a most accomplished person, without, however, possessing the varied talent of former times. She lived seventy-two years after the trance (in all ninety-eight years), now a short life with us; but never, till the day of her death, could she understand that she had lived during the twenty-two years which filled up the space between the first and second accidents. Strange to say, during that interval, no one had suspected that her brain was affected. Nearly the whole period had elapsed before the commencement of my rule, or the evil would have been detected and remedied, not by confining the patient and driving her into madness, but by gentle means.

The medical officers had no doubt of her complete re-establishment; besides, shortly after her return to calmness they applied the tests recently discovered, and the result furnished conclusive evidence that the malady had been eradicated. On an examination after death there was, indeed, an entire absence of certain microscopic animalcula, the effects of whose continued presence in excess in one or more portions of the brain, lead to monomania. The substance of the brain was poor and watery, and it seemed as though at other times there had even been more brain than was then found; the lining of the brain was coated with a substance in outward appearance not unlike the fur which sometimes accumulates on the tongue in a fever. The doctors having reason to believe that this fur was composed of animalcula, which, in all probability, had been destroyed at the period of the second accident, either by the shock or the fumes of the boiling liquid, were inclined to attribute to this circumstance the recovery of those parts of the brain which remained, as it were, slumbering since the first accident.

* Madness.—"A sleep of sorrow."

WIESBADEN.—A fair violinist, Mdlle Fanny Schön, from Vienna, and Herr Wilhelmj have been giving some successful concerts.

FLORENCE.—If rumour may be trusted, Aida will be produced next spring at the Pergola, with Signore Stolz, Waldmann, Signori Capponi, Collini, and Maini, in the principal parts.

BARCELONA.—The Correo de Teatros denies the report that the Liceo will remain shut this season. It says that the principal singers are already engaged, and that the proprietors have renewed the stage and machinery.

VIENNA.—In honour of the fiftieth anniversary of the entrance into priest's orders of the Prince Archbishop Cardinal Rauscher, there was a special musical service in the Cathedral of St Stephen. It included a new Festival Mass in B flat; Graduale: Ecce Sacerdos; Offertorium: Jubilate Deo, and a new "Te Deum" in B flat, by Gottfried Preyer.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

MALVERN.—We read in the Advertiser that —

"On Monday evening (Septeruber 1), Mr. W. Haynes provided a recherché musical treat in the College Hall. The artists were Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, and Mdlle. Jose Sherrington, sopranos; Madame Poole, contralto; Mr. R. Hilton, bass; with Chevalier Lemmens and Signor Randegger as conductors. A scena from the new cantata, Fridolin, by Randegger, was given. Mons. Cornelius played a violin solo. Madame Sherrington was in excellent voice, and delighted the audience with her highly artistic and finished singing. Madame Poole won golden opinions by singing with effect and clearly enunciating the words of the pieces she performed; and the performances of Chevalier Lemmens on the mustel organ were much admired. There was a large and fashionable attendance, and the whole passed off successfully."

IRELAND.—A series of concerts have lately been given at Youghal, Kanturk, and Fermoy, by Mrs. Adolph Fitzpatrick, a most accomplished soprano vocalist, assisted by Mr. John Fleming (tenor), Mr. Edward O'Mahoney (bass), and Miss Charlotte Crampton (pianist). Mrs. Fitzpatrick sang, to the evident delight of crowded audiences, the Irish melody, "The Harp that once through Tara's Halls," and the romance of "A Summer's Eve," as well as the soprano part of the trios from Verdi's Attila ("Te sol quest anima") and John Barnett's Mountain Sylph ("This magic wove scarf"), with Messrs. J. Fleming and E. O'Mahoney. The last trio was a special favourite at each concert. Mr. Fleming gave Ascher's popular "Alice, where art thou?" and was most rapturously encored; he also gave his own song, "Stars of the Summer night," with effect. Mr. O'Mahoney, in the song of "The man of war," displayed his voice to advantage, as well as in the concerted pieces, and in a duet, by Signor Campana, with Mrs. A. Fitzpatrick; both were rapturously applauded. Miss Charlotte Crampton, in Thalberg's arrangement of the airs from Don Pasquale, and a "Galop de Concert" by Herr Rubinstein, displayed talent of no mean order. The inhabitants of each town were much gratified by the musical treat afforded them by Mrs. Adolph Fitzpatrick.

J. S. BACH'S PASSION OF ST. MATTHEW.

(Continued from page 567.)

Allusion has been made to the recitative, "O grief," which is succeeded by the aria, "With Jesus I will watch and pray," for tenor, with chorus. In this and all the accompanied recitatives there is not the freedom for the singer which mark those of Mozart and Beethoven, and some—such as "Deeper and deeper," in Jephthah—of Handel. Bach's are rhythmical declamations exacting the highest dramatic powers of the vocalist, but denying to him the liberties that mostly belong to recitative singing. The solo phrases constitute the interludes to the choral, which is here given with the verse beginning "O Saviour, why must all this ill." Its melody is slightly varied, so as to make the more gentle its expression of the touching sentiment, and such variation may indeed be called embellishment. The resolve set forth in the aria, to excel in devotion the three chosen apostles, and to watch ever with Jesus, is beautifully relieved against the phrases for chorus, "And so our sins will fall asleep," the rocking motion of which has a soothing, lulling effect, that realizes the sweetly calming influence of prayer. The wondrous harmonies of the recitatives, the double counterpoint to the first phrase of the aria, and the chromatic progressions in the phrase that ensues, must be studied to be understood, and heard to be admired.

The most picturesque piece, perhaps, in all the oratorio is that which ensues on the capture, "My Saviour Jesus." It begins with a duet for soprano and contralto, in which the counterpoint of soft instruments, without basses, is intricately interwoven with the plaintive vocal phrases. These are from time to time interrupted by the exclamations of the chorus, "Leave Him, bind Him not," with the accompaniment of basses, organ, and all the force of the opposite orchestra. The movement ends with a half close preparatory to the fiery outburst of the succeeding allegro, for double chorus, which, opening in a different key from the commencement of the piece, concludes in that of the beginning; and so its termination rounds the whole into just completeness, after a course of seemingly wildest freedom. Amazement that all nature was not convulsed, that the eternal laws were not suspended, that the end of all things evened not upon the impious insult to the Son of Man, is expressed better in the music than in the words beginning "Have lightnings and thunders." Its indescribable power of excitement might exhaust itself were its character unvaried; but at the words, "Now open, O bottomless pit," after a pause of silence, a newly introduced idea proclaims the indignance of the Christian world at that enormous deed of which the obloquy of all time is the retribution.

The portion of the Oratorio designed to succeed the sermon, the second part according to the usage of concert performance, opens with a solo for contralto, with chorus, "Alas! now is my Saviour gone." Herein Zion, or the Church, mourns over the lost Jesus, and the Faithful, half enquiringly of its cause, half consolingly for its pain, muse on her deep affliction. It has the form of a dialogue between the solo voice and the chorus, and the distinct character of the two is always obvious, the latter having the air of solace to the keener anguish of the other. The pathetic effect of the piece is heightened by its fragmentary termination.

Thus prepared, we have now the scene before Caiaphas. At the words, "And Jesus held His peace," is inserted the recitative, "To witness false," for tenor, as a commentary on the situation.

"Have mercy upon me, O Lord," is the aria for contralto, with accompaniment for violin obbligato, which is more generally known than any other separate piece. It occurs after Peter's threefold denial, when his bitter weeping tells the torture of his self-conviction. The deep, deep grief of a tormented conscience finds here an utterance which fulfils the purport, and far transcends the expression of the words. One might suppose the power of the artist to have been concentrated upon this one incident, so infinite is its beauty; one might suppose Bach to have regarded the situation it illustrates as more significant than others of man's relation to Deity in his sense of sin and need for mercy, and as requiring, therefore, peculiar prominence in the total impression the Oratorio should convey. If this was his aim, it is all accomplished. The penitential feeling embodied in the song is that which will longest linger in a remembrance of the work. The soft tone of the contralto voice, and the keenness of that of the violin, are accessories to the effect which the master well knew how to handle; but these judicious means are little to be considered in comparison with the musical idea of which they are the adjuncts.

The soprano recitative, "To us He hath done all things," constitutes the reflection upon Pilate's inquiry, "What evil hath he done?" It recapitulates the mercies by which Jesus testified His divinity, and with the exquisite art elsewhere manifested in giving similar pointedness to meaning that would else be lost, the change of key upon the words, "Besides this, Jesus naught hath done," marks the purport with beautiful significance.

When Jesus is delivered over to be crucified, the narrative is suspended for the contralto recitative, "All gracious God." The remarkable modulation from the key of F sharp minor into G minor that distinguishes the appeal for pity from the description of the taunting and scourging of the condemned Saviour, is another of those traits, which, as in the preceding song, test the artist and the special power of his art. Neither painting nor poetry has anything analagous to this beautiful resource in music, the power of showing an entire revulsion of feeling by an unexpected change of key.

The contralto recitative, "Ah! Golgotha," and aria with chorus, "See the Saviour's outstretched arm," occur after the account of the crucifixion. Zion points to the arm extended on the cross as the haven of rest for the Faithful, in a sweetly persuasive melody. The more than once repeated phrase on the words, "See" and "Rest" is one of charming tenderness, and the accompaniment, for low oboes and organ only, shares with the voice-part the interest of the whole. Once more, the interrogatives of the chorus here break the general stillness, and influence as much the material effect—for with them the full orchestra is introduced—as they bring out the expressive power of the music.

The recitative, "'Twas in the cool of eventide," for bass, is inserted in the Gospel narrative, where Pilate grants the body of Jesus to the request of Joseph of Arimathea. The purpose of the artist was gradually to calm his hearers from the excitement to which they had been wrought, and by means of a succession of soothing pieces, to dismiss them in hopeful, happy tranquility. Tending to this result is the effect of the choral, "If I should e'er forsake Thee," which is strengthened by that of the present song, and quite confirmed by the final chorus. Allusion to the chief events in Scripture history that have befallen at the close of day gives scope for further colouring; but the variety disturbs not the softness of the hues.

Digitized by Google

The narrative closes with the sealing of the sepulchre, sequent upon which is the concluding piece, the recitative, "Now doth the Lord," and double chorus, "In tears of grief." The first movement is a series of passages, for each of the solo voices successively, divided by short phrases, for the chorus, the former reflecting on the termination of the Saviour's earthly troubles, which were the price of peace to man, and the latter breathing a sweet farewell to Him whose body is departed, but whose spirit, rests with us for ever. The purpose of bringing the oratorio by gentle degrees to so tranquil a close that the hearers may depart from its performance in a condition of perfect peace, is beautifully completed in the final movement. Death is imaged as sleep, and the tomb is the couch of rest, and the music is a lullaby invoking softest slumbers. It is a stream of melody of the most refined character and exalted beauty. One phrase of touching sweetness is set to the words, "Ruhet sanfte, sanfte ruh't" (Rest Thou gently, gently rest); and it derives special tenderness from the commencement of the first syllable upon an unaccented quaver, and its continuance with the effect of syncopation upon the next accent. This character of soft persuasion is lost in the English version, by the assignment of a separate syllable to each of the notes; indeed, the line, "Eternal peace be henceforth Thine," as addressed to the Saviour in the sleep of death, is perhaps anomalous, and as little represents the sense as the accents of the original. If the object of the proposer of the work was to impress the lesson that, however severe our ordeals, the Christian principle brings "peace on earth to men of good will," it could not have been summed up in language more penetrating.

If ever artist poured out his whole heart in his work, that certainly did Bach in the oratorio of the Passion. The man himself speaks and lives in every phrase of it, for such truthfulness, such fervour could not characterize any subjective treatment. Immensely much has to be accomplished before English audiences can do that justice to his wondrous composition which is only to be reached through familiarity with its beauties.

April, 1870. G. A. MACFARREN.

---

BOLOGNA.—The novelties here this autumn in the way of opera will be Il Mercante di Venezia, by Signor Pinzuti, and I Goti, by Signor Gobatti.

TURIN.—In consequence of Signor Verdi's having declined to compose the hymn to be sung at the inauguration of the Cavour Monument, the Municipality have offered a prize, open to any one, for the best setting.

Lines for Music.

THE DUET.*

I.

Ah me! I think I'll ne'er forget
The pleasure I have had,
Just now when playing that duet,
Its memory makes me glad.
How softly yearning was the strain,
So low, and yet so clear,
It ne'er can leave my heart again,'
'Tis ringing in mine ear.
It made my thoughts soar far above
To unseen realms of bliss—
If ever violin made love,
That violin was his.

II.

Why did not I to him respond?
For it was not alone,
That Music said he felt Love's bond;
'Twas in his voice's tone.
Ah! why could not my harpsichord
Admit his fond address?
Too well it knew how he adored,
For plain he did confess.
Ah well! if only he will try
Once more that sweet duet—
I would not let the chance slip by,
If I might answer yet.

ERNEST HOUGHTON.

* Copyright reserved.

THE LORD OF BURLEIGH AND FRIDOLIN.

(From "The Times.")

Birmingham, Sept. 5th, 1873.

We promised to refer again to the new cantatas, written expressly for the late highly prosperous meeting. This can only be done in general terms, as in the case of Mr. Sullivan's oratorio. The book of each cantata is founded upon a more or less familiar legend. That of Signor Schira is based upon the Lord of Burleigh, one of the Laureate's best known poems. The story of the Baron who wishes to be loved for his own sake, and not for his riches or estate, who, in disguise of a painter, wooes and wins a village belle, and, after the pastoral wedding, brings her home to his castle, where, throwing off his disguise, he is welcomed by his retainers, to the astonishment of his lowly bride, need not be recounted. Nor is it requisite to call attention to the melancholy incident of Marian's early death, which throws a gloom over the whole, though giving the composer an excellent opportunity for effective climax, of which he has happily availed himself, something after the manner of one of Sir Julius Benedict's most memorable cantatas, in which St. Cecilia, like poor Marian, is borne up to heaven on angels' wings. Mr. Desmond L. Ryan, in preparing the libretto for Signor Schira, has adopted the story nearly as it stands in Tennyson, without, however, availing himself of a single line of the poet's, save the motto which heads the title-page of the printed edition of the new work—

"He is but a landscape painter,
And a village maiden she."

Thus he has shown commendable judgment, and, further, merits praise for the way in which he has used the materials at hand so as to make them assume a really dramatic shape, and secure for the musical treatment the advantages of contrast and variety. He has with that object invented two new personages—Constance, an early companion of Marian's, and Trueman, steward to the Baron, who goes forth in search of his lost master; and these complete the quartet of solo voices so indispensable to concerted music, without which a cantata of such length as the Lord of Burleigh would be wanting in a very essential element of effect. The solo quartet is represented by Marian (soprano), Constance (contralto), Cecil, the supposed painter (tenor), and Trueman (baritone). In conclusion, Mr. Ryan's verses are free from rodomontade and mawkish sentiment, terse, fluent, and rhythmical in the songs and duets, of which there are, as might be expected, not a few.

Signor Schira has found music for this story in almost every sense tuneful and appropriate. Italian by birth, he is also Italian by predilection; and his cantata everywhere breathes the spirit of the sunny country to which we owe a Cimarosa, a Paesiello, a Rossini, a Bellini, a Donizetti, and a Verdi. He has not fallen into the mistake of endeavouring to counterfeit the old English melody, notwithstanding that he had an English "pastoral" to set to music. He has not gone contrary to his innate feelings, but has illustrated the story, as he could easiest appreciate it, after his own fashion, and from his own unaided resources; so that he presents us with a work as pleasing and satisfactory as it is simple. A musician of ripe experience, who can handle instruments and voices with equal facility and effect, Signor Schira, nevertheless, disdains seeking after elaborate combinations and contrivances where they would be manifestly out of place, adhering with scrupulous fidelity to the character of the situations and sentiments set forth in the text. Hence the cordial reception of his new work, the success of which was never for one instant doubtful. Objection might be taken to certain pieces in which the orchestral accompaniments almost drown the voices, owing to the superabundant employment of big drum cymbals, and other loud instruments, which, unless resolutely toned down by the conductor, persist in making themselves conspicuous over everything else. But here Signor Schira was possibly led into error by the festive character of certain portions of the cantata, and by ignorance of the vast body of singers and players it would be his business to control when once in the Birmingham orchestra, where, we believe, he never was before. A few strokes of the pen, however, may easily remedy this defect, and there will be little more to find fault with in the Lord of Burleigh, which contains much that, once heard, only engenders a wish to hear again. If Signor

Digitized by Google

Schira only consents to modify and somehow "thin" his orchestration the new cantata will be a welcome addition to the repertory of all our English choral societies; and the composer of Nicolo dei Lappi, Mina &c., is hardly the man to be deaf to well-intended counsel.

If the Lord of Burleigh has never previously been treated in the form of a cantata, as much cannot be said of Fridolin, which Signor Randegger selected for his contribution to the Birmingham Festival. Very many years ago, it was made the subject of an opera by Mr. Frank Romer, and, long afterwards, of a cantata, written by Mr. Palgrave Simpson, and set to music by the late Mr. Frank Mori, for the meeting of the Three Choirs at Worcester in 1851. The romantic ballad of Fridolin, or Der Gang nach dem Eisenhammer, is as widely known as any of the poetical works of Schiller. Madame Erminia Rudersdorff, the eminent dramatic vocalist, who prepared the libretto, as Mr. Palgrave Simpson did in 1851, closely follows the story according to Schiller, and has accomplished her task with great skill, both in the arrangement of the materials and the composition of the verse—the last feat remarkable for one not a native born Englishwoman. It is scarcely necessary to narrate in detail a legend which the great German poet has rendered more or less familiar to all the civilized world. Every one must remember how a certain beautiful Countess has two pages, Fridolin and Hubert, the one innocently attached to her as his beloved mistress, the other attached to her with less unselfish motives; how Hubert, furious at the seeming preference given to Fridolin, by artful insinuations, endeavours to arouse the jealousy of the husband of the Countess; how the Count, to avenge his imaginary dishonour, orders Fridolin to proceed to the forge and inquire of the workmen, "Are your lord's commands fulfilled?"—having secretly ordered that whoever might ask this question should be immediately cast into the furnace; how Fridolin, at the instigation of the Countess, suspicious of something wrong, stops on the way and prays for his mistress at a roadside chapel; how Hubert, anxious to know the result of his machinations, hurries off to the forge, unconsciously asks the question designed for Fridolin, and is himself thrown into the furnace by the workmen, deaf to his protestations; and how this unexpected catastrophe brings about a mutual explanation between the Count and Countess, which leads to renewed confidence and happiness. These are the materials which Madame Rudersdorff has combined so skilfully, and which Signor Randegger has wedded to music full of melody, ingenious contrivance, unflagging spirit, and characteristic colouring. An Italian, like Signor Schira, Signor Randegger has, not the less, frequent leanings towards the German tone of musical thought. He more especially inclines to Mendelssohn, a remarkable instance of which appears in the very striking and cleverly-written chorus, "Gift of demons, raging fire," when the smiths, drinking and working at the anvils, drag Hubert, who has delivered the fatal message, towards the furnace in which he is destined to expiate his sins by undergoing the fate he had planned for his rival. In this we are inevitably reminded of the grand chorus, "Come with torches," from the Walpurgis Night, and occasionally of the finale to Loreley, by the same composer. Weber, too, now and then peeps in—as, for example, in the vigorous and inspiriting song of the Huntsmen—"Hark! the horn awakes the morn" (in D major), which, as well as a tuneful and delicate chorus of handmaidens, introducing an air for the Countess, was unanimously encored at the performance. On the other hand, in a charming little chorus, "Sancta Maria," Signor Randegger shows that he has not wholly forgotten his famous countryman, Rossini; while in a short duettino between the Countess and Fridolin, "Above yon sun," which musicians' would technically describe as a "cannon on the octave," he affords convincing proof of having studied the works of the great contrapuntal writers with the happiest result. Nothing could be clearer or better. Without going into further details, we may sum up by saying that Fridolin is a work which must add to the fame of its composer, who has already produced so many excellent things. It is, from end to end, instinct with vigorous life, and reveals sufficient dramatic skill to warrant a belief that the lyric drama may be, after all, its author's most congenial element, and encouraging a hope that we shall one day have an opera of larger proportions from his pen. Signor Randegger is a thorough master of the orchestra; and if here and there his accompaniments are a little over-elaborated, it is never without design and never without a certain effect, the intention of which unfolds itself more and more clearly. Signor Randegger writes for the voices like a well-practised master. His vocal harmony is invariably clear, and not unfrequently rich and sonorous. No more at present need be added. Enough has been advanced to prove that, in our opinion, the cantata of Fridolin is both a credit to its composer and to the great Festival for which he was commissioned to write it. Signor Randegger, like Mr. Sullivan, was happy not only in the splendid chorus and orchestra placed at his disposal, but in the quartet of solo singers—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington (the Countess), Mr. W. Cummings (Fridolin), Signor Foli (Hubert), and Mr. Santley (the Count)—whose zealous endeavours had not a little to do with the enthusiastic reception with which the new work was honoured by the most crowded audience ever, on any such occasion, assembled in the Birmingham Town Hall.

WAIFS.

Miss Purdy, the accomplished contralto, is to make her first appearance before a Manchester audience on Monday, at the "Gentlemen's Concerts."

Miss Ada Lester, the youthful pianist, has been playing with considerable success during the past week at M. Rivière's concerts, Mr. Willie Pape's arrangement of the popular Irish air, "Believe me if all those endearing young charms," and Thalberg's "Home, sweet home," both of which have obtained for the fair artist warm applause and well-deserved recalls.

Signor Arditi has returned from his visit to Italy, passing en route through his native town (Crescentino, in Piedmont), where he was received by the "authorities," en grand seigneur. Signor Arditi leaves for St. Petersburgh on Monday, viâ Ostend, where he will remain a week to recruit himself for his arduous campaign in the Muscovite capital.

Mr. Wilford Morgan left Liverpool for the United States on Tuesday, by the Cunard Steam Ship, Abyssinia, to fulfil a six months' engagement, as principal tenor, with the "Kellogg English Opera troupe."

Signor Foli left London, on Tuesday, for Moscow, to fulfil his engagement in the Muscovite city, at the Imperial Opera House.

Mr. Frederic Penna, the accomplished barytone, has returned from Antwerp, where he has been assisting at the fêtes, which are annually given in that city. The several choral societies of Belgium, Mr. Penna informs us, acquitted themselves admirably, especially the Malines Choir, who obtained the "premier prix," although they were "hard pressed" by the Ghent and the Brussels Cecile Choir.

M. Emile Guimet's "Le feu de ciel," which the composer entitles an Oriental Symphony, was given at M. Rivière's Promenade Concert on Monday evening. The recitatives were delivered by Mrs. Stirling, and the vocalists were MM. Foli, Gustave Garcia, Federici, Pearson, and George Perren. On the same evening Miss Terèse Liebé played a violin solo on airs from Masaniello with so much effect that the young virtuoso was compelled to repeat it; Madame Sinico sang "Ah fore è lui" (Traviata), and was deservedly encored; and Herr Joseph Gung'l conducted two of his new dance pieces.

English Opera.—A vigorous and earnest effort to establish English Opera as a permanent national institution is now being made by Mr. Carl Rosa, who has the advantage of the experienced assistance of his wife, Madame Parepa-Rosa; and the success that has attended the inaugural week, at Manchester, of what is intended to be a long campaign in the provinces, has been such as to give ample promise that the undertaking will be a prosperous one. For a long time past, Mr. Rosa has been engaged in the formation of a company complete in every department, and has, consequently, been enabled to give the opening operas on a scale of completeness that is seldom to be met with. The orchestra and chorus have been most judiciously selected, Mr. Rosa being himself the conductor, and more than ordinary care has been brought to bear on the mise-en-scène. The work selected for the first performance was Maritana, the principal characters being entrusted to Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. Wm. Castle, and Mr. Campbell, and the rendering by these artists of Wallace's melodious music was received with the utmost enthusiasm by a crowded audience. On the following evening, Miss Rose Hersee was to have sung in The Rose of Castile, but illness prevented her appearing, and her place was ably supplied, at a few hours' notice, by Miss Blanche Cole. Other works have also been successfully represented, the répertoire of the new company being extensive and varied, and the theatre has been nightly very largely attended.—Daily Telegraph, Sept. 8.

Digitized by Google

Sontag and Sir Walter Scott.—On one occasion we had the happiness of entertaining the famous Sontag at a large party at our own house—she was enchanting as usual. Sir Walter Scott, who happened to be in London, was present. He was delighted at meeting Sontag, whose introduction to Sir Walter, on the eve of her appearing in the Donna del Lago, was singularly well-timed. In the presence of Sontag, the great man was all ears, and eyes too, I think. When she questioned him about her costume as the Lady of the Lake, he described to her with the utmost minuteness every fold of the plaid, and was greatly pleased when I produced a genuine satin clan plaid, the present of Lady Sinclair, whilst in Edinburgh, the loan of which I was delighted to promise to Sontag. He showed her the particular way the brooch should be fastened at the shoulder, and would not allow any alteration. Henrietta had two worshippers that evening, the second being Clementi, who seemed as much fascinated as Scott. He got up from his chair and said, "To-night, I should like to play also." The proposition was received with acclamation. "He extemporized with all the freshness of youth," writes Moscheles, "and we listened with intense delight; for Clementi very rarely played before company. You should have seen the ecstacy of the two old men, Scott and Clementi; they shook each other by the hand, took it in turns to flirt with Sontag, without seeming jealous of one another; it was a pretty duet of joint admiration, of course the poet, musician, and songstress were the observed of all observers."—The Life of Moscheles.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

J. B. Cramer & Co.—"The Songs of Wales," Part V., edited by John Thomas; "Dearer than all to me," song, by F. Federici; "Words, vain words," song, by Virginia Gabriel; "Don Juan am I," song, by Victor Massé; "Restored," ballad, by Elizabeth Philp; "Angelus et Prière," pour piano, par J. Rummell; "Gavotte," par J. Rummell; "But the Lord is mindful," for the pianoforte, by J. T. Surenne; "The Nemesis Waltzes," by Charles Coote.

Novello, Ewer & Co.—"Te Deum," by Edgar Adams.

W. Morley.—"When night is darkest," by Edward Land, transcribed for the pianoforte by W. Kuhe.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: Hammond & Co. (late Jullien), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Just Published,

"TWO PATHWAYS,"

SONG.

Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.

Price 3s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MARIE ALEXANDROWNA WALTZ.

By CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

Ashdown & Parry beg to announce that this new Waltz will be published in a few days.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY, HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,

National Hymn, 6s.,

Ave Maria, 4s.,

AND

Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Now Ready.

THE

RAISING

OF

LAZARUS.

AN

ORATORIO.

BY

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT

Price, in paper covers, 8s.; bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

NOVELLO & CO.,

BERNERS STREET.

LONDON.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each | 3 | 6 |
| No. 1. Hunting Chorus. | | |
| „ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens. | | |
| „ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers. | | |

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIN, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Sept. 13, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 38. SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—SHILLING SATURDAY, This Day.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY), September 20.—CHORAL FESTIVAL by FIVE THOUSAND VOICES.—The ANNUAL AUTUMN CONCERT of the METROPOLITAN SCHOOLS CHORAL SOCIETY. Conductor—Mr. John Hullah. Organist—Mr. E. J. Hopkins. Admission One Shilling, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!), will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Stretford Road, Old Trafford, Manchester.

MISS ENRIQUEZ begs to announce that she is at liberty to accept Engagements. All letters to be addressed to her residence, 26, Mornington Crescent, N.W. Engaged the following dates:—Leeds, 24th September; Bristol Musical Festival, 20th to 25th October; Glasgow Musical Festival, 3rd to 8th November; Edinburgh, 10th November; Birmingham, 19th November; Sacred Harmonic, Exeter Hall, 21st November; Stoke-Newington, 19th March, 1874.

MR. E. ADAMS, Operatic Comedian, Manager and Author, General Entrepreneur and Director for Comic Opera, Burlesque and First-Class Musical Entertainments, for London and the Provinces.
Complete Tuition for the Stage, with every facility to eligible aspirants.
Foreign Productions Translated and Adapted for English representation.
Personal interviews, from 12 to 3, at Mr. Boosey's, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS' NEW PART-SONG (Dedicated by Special Permission to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales), "LET THE HILLS RESOUND," was magnificently sung by 500 members of the South Wales Choir, on the Lawn at Marlborough House, in the presence of Royalty; also at the Grand Eisteddfod. 1s. London class copy post free for four stamps. As a song, 3s.; and piano solo, 4s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' New Sacred Part-Song, for a full choir, "SOUND THE TRUMPET IN ZION." Sung by the Welsh Choir at the National Eisteddfod, Mold, Flint, and received a hearty encore. Post free for 18 stamps.—London: Sole Publishers, ROBERT COCKS & Co.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury, and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an inferior Medal.
Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| "ALWAYS ALONE" | Sung by Madame Patey | 4s. |
| "THE KING AND I" | Sung by Mr. Santley | 4s. |
| "THE CROSS ROADS" | Sung by Miss Edith Wynne | 4s. |
| "SYMPATHY" | Sung by Miss Enriquez | 4s. |
| "NOTHING" | Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves | 4s. |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

| | |
|---|---|
| "SINCE BABY LEFT US" | 3s. |
| "REQUITED" | (In the Press.) |
| "A MODERN STORY" | (In the Press.) |
| "WRITING TO WILLIE" | (In the Press.) |
| "MY MORNING DREAM" | (In the Press.) |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—RIVIERE'S CONCERTS.—EVERY EVENING at Eight. The following artists will appear during the week:—Miss Annie Sinclair, Mdlle. Demeric Lablache, Mdlle. Petitt, Mdme. Osborne Williams, and Miss Constance Loseby Mdlle. Tèrese Liebe, Mdlle. Nellie Guibert, and Mdlle. Marie Secretain; Mr. George Perren, Mr. J. H. Pearson, Herr Josef Gung'l, Herr Werrenrath, and Signor Federici. Mr. J. Levy, Cornet-à-Pistons.
Conductor—M. RIVIERE.
MONDAY next, New and Popular Music.
TUESDAY, Second Wagner Night (by general desire).
WEDNESDAY, Mendelssohn Night.
THURSDAY, English Ballad Night.
FRIDAY, Handel's "SAMSON."
SATURDAY, Miscellaneous Programme.
Mdlle. CARLOTTA PATTI will positively appear on Saturday next, 27th inst.
Splendid Decorations, Ferneries, Fountains, Plants, Exotics, Flowers, &c. Refreshments by Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. Promenade, One Shilling. Doors open at 7.30; Commence at 8. Acting Manager, Mr. JOHN RUSSELL.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the QUEEN.
His Royal Highness the Prince of WALES.
Her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES.
His Royal Highness the Duke of EDINBURGH.
Her Royal Highness the Princess CHRISTIAN.
His Royal Highness the Duke of CAMBRIDGE.
Her Royal Highness the Duchess of TECK.
His Serene Highness the Duke of TECK.
and
His Royal Highness the Prince CHRISTIAN.

President—The Right Hon. The Earl of DUDLEY.
Principal—Sir STERNDALE BENNETT, Mus. D., D.C.L.

The MICHAELMAS TERM will commence on MONDAY next, the 22nd September, and will terminate on Saturday the 20th of December.
Candidates of admission can be examined at the Institution on MONDAY, the 22nd September, at eleven o'clock, and every succeeding Monday and Thursday at the same hour. By Order, JOHN GILL, Secretary.
Royal Academy of Music,
4, Tenterden Street, Hanover Square.

Just Published, Post free 1s. 8d.,
THE ORGAN.
HINTS ON ITS CONSTRUCTION, PURCHASE, AND PRESERVATION.
By W. SHEPHERDSON, M.C.O.
REEVES & TURNER, 185, Fleet Street, London.

Just Published,
THREE SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.
With English and German Words.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| No. 1, | "THE MINSTRELS' HOME" (Des Sängers Heimath) | 3s. |
| ,, 2, | "THE LOVELY MONTH OF MAY" (Im Wunderschönen Monat Mai) | 3s. |
| ,, 3, | "VISIONS" (Traumbild) | 3s. |

The English Versions of the Words by MARIA XIMENA HAYES.
The Music by WILHELM SCHULTHES.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"BEYOND THE HILLS,"
SACRED DUET
For Soprano and Contralto.
Composed by HENRY SMART.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION,

Digitized by Google

Just Published.

"DREAM ON,"

SONG,

Words and Music by ERNEST HOUGHTON.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"COM' E GENTIL,"

Une FANTAISIE DE SALON,

Sur la Serenade de "DON PASQUALE,"

Pour le Pianoforte,

Par RICHARD HOFFMAN.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"

"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"

("Connais tu le pays.")

Sung by Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,

In the Opera of "MIGNON."

The English Words by JOHN OXENFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"OUR DARLING,"

SONG,

(in C and in E flat).

The Words by ETTY LOVELL.

The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

NEW SONG BY SIR JULIUS BENEDICT,

"LOVE AT SEA,"

Sung by Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Composed by Sir JULIUS BENEDICT.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE RAT DE VILLE,"

ET

"LE RAT DES CHAMPS,"

(FABLE DE LAFONTAINE,)

Chantée par JULES LEFORT.

Musique de ETIENNE REY.

Price 4s.

(Edition de L. Escudier, Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MONS. FAURE'S NEW SONGS.

"VALSE DES FEUILLES" .. .. .. .. .. Price, net, 2s. 6d.

"LE PRESSOIR" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. " 2s. 6d.

Composed and Sung by J. FAURE.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

MIGNON.

Opera in Three Acts,

BY

AMBROISE THOMAS.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| THE OPERA COMPLETE FOR PIANO SOLO ... ... ... Net | 10 | 0 |

All the following arrangements are Sold at HALF the marked PRICES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| BIZET (G.), Six Transcriptions:— No. 1, Danse Bohémienne, 5s.; 2, Romance de Mignon (Connais tu le pays), 5s.; 3, Duo des Hirondelles, 5s.; 4, Adieu Mignon (Mélodie), 4s.; 5, Polonaise de Philène, "Je suis Titania la blonde," 6s.; 6, O Printemps (Mélodie), 4s. | | |
| BATTMANN (J. L.), Op. 271. Petite Fantaisie (sans Octaves) .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| BRISSLER (F.), Two "Pot-Pourris" .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |
| CRAMER (S.), Two "Bouquets de Mélodies" .. .. .. .. each | 6 | 0 |
| CROISEZ (A.), "Styrienne, Andante et Valse" .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| DELAHAYE (L. L.), "Adieu Mignon, et Danse Bohémienne" .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| GODARD (A.), TROIS TRANSCRIPTIONS FACILES:— No. 1, "Recitatif et Romance de Mignon," 3s.; 2, "Danse Bohémienne," 3s.; 3, "Entr'acte Gavotte," 3s. | | |
| HESS (J. C.), Fantasia "Styrienne, Prière" .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 209, Fantaisie brillante ("Marche Bohémienne," "Reveille," "Pastorale," "Danse des Œufs,") &c. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 232, Seconde Fantaisie ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 245, "Grand Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 246, "Petite Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| KRUGER (W.), Op. 142, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| LYSBERG (C. B.), Op. 116, Fantaisie Transcription (Duo des Hirondelles et "Titania") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 71, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance de Mignon" et "Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 81, Seconde Fantaisie Transcription ("Adieu Mignon et Valse de Philène") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| OESTEN (Th.), Op. 400, Fantaisie élégante ("Valse Styrienne, Romance de Mignon, Polacca") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| ROSELLEN (H.), Op. 183, "Polonaise de Mignon," Transcription variée | 6 | 0 |
| TREDHE (G.), Op. 123, "Romance de Mignon," variée .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| VALIQUET (H.), Op. 81, "Deux petites Fantaisies" .. .. .. each | 5 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| BERNARD (PAUL), Op. 90, Deux Suites Concertantes .. .. each | 9 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, Premier Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| RUMMEL (J.), Deux Mosaïques .. .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| SARASATE (Op. 16), "Romance et Gavotte de Mignon" .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LÉVÊQUE (EMILE), "Six Mélodies faciles et Motifs favoris de Mignon" | 5 | 0 |

CORNET-À-PISTONS SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| GUILBAUT (E.), "Pot-pourri sur Motifs favoris de Mignon" .. .. | 6 | 6 |

VIOLIN, HARMONIUM, AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LEFÉBURE-WELY. "Romance de Mignon" Paraphrase .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

DANCE MUSIC—PIANO SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| STRAUSS, 1er Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ARBAN, 2de Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| MEY, 3e Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| GODFREY (CHARLES), "Mignon Waltz" .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 0 |
| MÉTRA (OLIVIER), "Suite de Valses" .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, "Grande Valse" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STUTZ (PHILIPPE), "Polka Mazarka" .. .. .. .. .. | 2 | 6 |
| DESGRANGES (E.), "Polka des Hirondelles" .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ZIKOFF (F.), "Entr'acte Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| STRAUSS, "Mignon Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

THE COMPLETE OPERA FOR VOICE AND PIANO, 20s., and all the Vocal Music of "MIGNON" (separately), can be obtained from DUNCAN DAVISON & Co.

Digitized by Google

HEREFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(From the "Times.")

Hereford, September 11.

The new oratorio, written expressly for this Festival by the Rev. Frederick A. Gore Ouseley, Bart., Musical Professor at Oxford University, was performed, and, so far as we are able to judge, made a decidedly favourable impression. The author has long been well known as a learned and accomplished musician, both practically as a composer and theoretically as a teacher, his book on the Art of Counterpoint and Fugue having obtained general acceptance. His position at Oxford, where he has held for many years the Chair of Music, could only have been conferred upon one possessing exceptional acquirements, and, as noblesse oblige, Sir Gore Ouseley would not be likely to put forth anything to the world unless he had deeply and carefully considered it. Nor has he done so in the instance of the oratorio produced to-day—his last, and so far as we are aware, his largest and most ambitious essay. He has especially vindicated his claims to scholarship, which, before anything else, as a judge and awarder of distinction to others, was expected of him. But Sir Gore Ouseley has done more than this, in showing himself endowed with a certain vein of melody which he can always draw upon with facility and use to graceful purpose, as well as with a knowledge of orchestral treatment and an idea of orchestral colouring which enable him to impart force and variety to his thoughts. At all events the new work establishes his right to come publicly forward and challenge comparison with not a few of his contemporaries in the highest branch of sacred music. Hagar has no pretensions to be styled a "grand oratorio," its plan being limited, and the development of its several sections restricted in proportion; but it is not the less meritorious on that account, and not the less interesting, as the marked attention with which, this morning in the Cathedral, it was listened to, from beginning to end, by a very numerous assembly, sufficiently attests.

The words selected for Hagar, by the Rev. J. R. Gleig Taylor, are chiefly from Holy Writ; and, the subject taken into consideration, they have been selected with great judgment. The oratorio is divided into two parts, and the personages introduced are as subjoined:—Abram (afterwards called Abraham); Sarai, his wife (afterwards called Sarah); Hagar, her bond-maid; Ishmael, son of the bond-woman; the Angel. Perhaps, the episode of Hagar is not exactly the most promising subject for an oratorio; in fact, we cannot but think it unwisely chosen. Scripture assuredly contains many passages that would have better answered the purpose. Sir Gore Ouseley, however, was clearly of a different opinion, and it is only just to let him speak for himself, in the form and language of his own argument:—

"Part I.—After the overture, the history of Hagar is introduced by the well-known hymn, 'Jerusalem on high,' in which allusion is made to that which St. Paul declares to be the spiritual reality shadowed forth by the facts related in Genesis concerning Abraham's two sons, 'which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants: the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Hagar (for this Hagar is Mount Sinai in Arabia), and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. But Jerusalem which is above is free, which is the mother of us all.' The narrative then proceeds with the appearance of God to Abram, and the Divine promise that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for multitude. Sarah laments her childlessness, and, seeing that she is despised by her servant Hagar, deals hardly with her, so that she flees from her face. Hagar wanders into the wilderness, and the Angel of the Lord appears to her as she sits by a fountain of water, and bids her return to her mistress, at the same time promising that she shall bear a son, whose name shall be called Ishmael ('God hath heard')."

"Part II.—Thirteen years after the birth of Ishmael God appears again to Abram, renews the covenant, and changes his name to Abraham ('father of a multitude'). Sarai's name also is changed to Sarah (Princess). God establishes His covenant with Isaac. Abraham beseeches God on behalf of Ishmael, and is assured that he is blessed. Isaac is born. After a time Sarah sees Ishmael mocking, and demands of Abraham that the bond-woman and her son shall be cast out. Abraham is grieved because of Ishmael his son, but God bids him do as Sarah has said, so he sends Hagar and the lad away. They go 'astray in the wilderness; hungry and thirsty their souls faint in them,' Ishmael calls upon God, who hears the voice of the lad, and sends His Angel to succour them. The Angel addresses Hagar by name, and, bidding her raise her son from the ground, tells her not to fear, for God will make him a great nation. Hagar's eyes are opened by God, and she sees a well of water. She blesses God, and her song is echoed in the concluding chorus."

When we bear in mind the scantiness of the materials at disposal, and how, away from its place in the book of Genesis, the history of Hagar can possess for the majority of people little more than a symbolic interest, it must be admitted that Sir Gore Ouseley, or the Rev. Gleig Taylor (whichever may be answerable for the book) has used them with discretion, and arranged them in symmetrical and intelligible order. Nothing, perhaps, in its way, could have been more creditably done. The objection, nevertheless, is likely to remain fixed in the minds of many, that the choice of subject was hardly judicious, the more so inasmuch as in the shape it assumes Hagar appears rather in the light of a sacred musical drama than in that of a sacred oratorio proper.

That the composer was in some degree shackled by his "libretto" may be taken for granted. He could hardly, however, have set it to music otherwise than he has actually done with the means ready at command to which we have alluded. Only a very few opportunities were presented of enlivening his work with that admixture of duets, trios, quartets, and other concerted pieces for the special display of the chief solo voices which, from Handel down to Spohr and Mendelssohn, have been uniformly looked upon as essential to the general effect, except an incidental quartet which forms part of a chorus. Throughout the entire work there is but one thing of the kind—a trio for tenor voices, "a voci equali," "He maketh the barren woman to keep house," a somewhat unsuggestive theme, which at the commencement takes the form of what musicians describe as a "cannon on the octave," but at the end brings the voices together in combination. Strictly considered, this trio is neither more nor less than what for obvious reasons is called a "round." It is, however, no less admirably written than charmingly melodious, and afforded the three tenors, Messrs. Cummings, E. Lloyd, and Montem Smith, an opportunity of distinction of which they took eminent advantage. The rest of the oratorio, after an orchestral prelude, consists almost exclusively of accompanied recitatives and airs, chorals and choruses, whereby a certain monotony is engendered, which need not have been the case had the subject been otherwise handled. What Sir Gore Ouseley has actually done is, therefore, under the circumstances, all the more to be commended. His familiarity with bonâ fide cathedral music has served him in good stead. His choral writing is always effective, and, if the expression may be allowed, "canonic," while his acquaintance with the stricter contrapuntal forms as exhibited in the several fugues—of which for an oratorio otherwise so unostentatiously constructed, he gives, perhaps, too many—has also served him well, and in a work of vaster proportions would have served him even better. Reserving a more detailed notice for a future occasion, we merely reiterate our conviction that, in the composition of Hagar, Sir G. Ouseley has displayed an ability far beyond the ordinary, and that more works of the kind will be anxiously looked for from his pen.

The performance, conducted by Mr. Townshend Smith, was almost in every instance excellent. The choruses were all delivered with spirit and decision, while the orchestra left little or nothing to desire; nor could the composer by any possibility have found more able exponents of the solo passages in his work than Mdlle. Tietjens (Hagar), Miss E. Wynne (Ishmael), Madame Trebelli-Bettini (Sarah), Mr. Santley (Abraham), and Mr. W. H. Cummings (narrator of the story), all of whom strove their utmost to do justice to the music assigned to them, and were successful in proportion. Sir G. Ouseley was happy in such interpreters. The second part of the day's programme comprised the last portion of Spohr's symphony, The Consecration of Sound, which, notwithstanding its "Hymn of Praise," is more in place in a concert-room than in a church. This was followed by the same master's "Christian's Prayer," one of the earliest works he composed for voices and instruments, and the whole terminated with Handel's sixth Chandos Anthem, perhaps the most glorious of the glorious

Digitized by Google

"twelve" composed for his liberal friend and patron, the Duke of Chandos, at Canons. The singers in the first were Misses E. Wynne and Enriquez, Mr. Montem Smith, and Signor Agnesi. In the last, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Edward Lloyd, and Signor Agnesi. A more lengthy selection has rarely been submitted to an audience at a concert. The attendance to-day was 873, and the collection for the Charity £220. The Messiah, to-morrow, will bring the Festival to an end.

---

September 12.

The evening concerts in the Shire Hall have been much of the ordinary sort, with programmes well varied, but with little of new to call for record. The acoustical properties of the hall, always good, are now, through a new arrangement of the orchestra, made very nearly perfect. The arched roof, contrived, we believe, since the last Festival, is an unquestionable improvement, while the bright sun burner in the middle throws a flood of light over the orchestra, and is as advantageous to the singers and players as it is agreeable to the audience. The Herefordshire people like these evening concerts, and come to them in crowds from all the immediate vicinities of the county town. The first concert was somewhat injured by the uncertainty of the weather; but the second—the weather having at last settled itself "fine"—proved a brilliant success. It was difficult to find even standing room for the many amateurs who arrived late. The programme at the first concert began with a selection from Rossini's Semiramide, in which Mdlle. Tietjens as the Assyrian Queen, Madame Trebelli-Bettini as Arsace, and Signor Agnesi as Assur, took part. That among the "numbers" set down were the cavatina, "Ah! quel giorno" (Madame Trebelli-Bettini); the duet, "Bella immago" (Madame Trebelli-Bettini and Signor Agnesi); the cavatina, with chorus, "Bel raggio lusinghier" (solos by Mdlle. Tietjens); the duet, "Serbami ognor" (Mdlle. Tietjens and Signor Agnesi); the duet, "Ebben a te ferisci" (Mdlle. Tietjens and Madame Trebelli-Bettini)—shorn, by the way, of its final movement—and the melodious terzetto, "L'usato ardir," will be taken for granted. How the eminent artists we have named are used to sing this particular music of Rossini's, London readers in the habit of attending either opera or concert-room need not be informed. Of course, the universally-popular overture and the introductory chorus, "Belo si celebri," formed part of the selection; as did also the too frequently omitted scena, with chorus, which Assur (Signor Agnesi) sings at the tomb of the murdered Ninus—one of the finest and most powerfully dramatic pieces in the entire opera.

According to custom, we subjoin the scheme of the second, or miscellaneous, section of the programme, as an example of the kind of entertainment most acceptable to the audiences who attend:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "Der Freischütz" ... ... ... ... | Weber. |
| Romance, "O ma maitresse" (Lalla Roukh) ... ... | F. David. |
| Song, "She wandered down the mountain side" ... ... | F. Clay. |
| Aria, "Nasce al bosco" (Ezio) ... ... ... ... | Handel. |
| Solo Violin, Fantasia on Scotch Airs ... ... ... | Sainton. |
| Song, "When the moon is brightly shining" ... ... | Molique. |
| Air, "When all was young" (Faust) ... ... ... | Gounod. |
| Part Song, "The Sea hath its pearls" ... ... ... | Pinsuti. |
| Aria, "In questo semplice" (Betly) ... ... ... | Donizetti. |
| Old English Ditty, "To Celia" (about 1600). | |
| Recit. and Hunting Chorus (The Seasons) ... ... ... | Haydn. |

There was variety and to spare in the above, and as none of those who had a share in the excerpts from Semiramide were called upon for anything else, the dreary lengthiness so often complained of was comparatively done away with. The marked successes were obtained by Weber's magnificent overture; the pretty romance of Felicien David, which Mr. W. H. Cummings sings so often and so well, and in which Miss Trust played the harp accompaniment; Mr. Frederick Clay's charming ballad, which no one gives with more genuine expression than Miss Edith Wynne, the "Welsh nightingale" (Eos Cymru); Handel's air from Ezio, admirably suited to the voice and style of Mr. Santley; the effective part-song of Signor Pinsuti, by the Bradford Choral Society (encored); and last, not least, the Scotch Fantasia, executed with wonderful dexterity by its composer, M. Sainton, and encored with such persistence that the great French violinist, our modern Baillot, was compelled, after being thrice called back, to repeat the last movement. This, the only solo included in the evening programmes, was decidedly the feature of the concert at which it was introduced. The other singers were Miss Enriquez (accompanied on the violoncello, in M. Gounod's romance from Faust); Mr. Edward Lloyd, to whom was confided the graceful ballad of Molique; Mdlle. Bartkowska and Mr. Montem Smith, to whom were respectively intrusted the aria from Betly and the old English setting of Ben Jonson's famous verses, "Drink to me only with thine eyes." The concert, on the whole, afforded unmingled pleasure.

Still more satisfactory in many respects was the second miscellaneous concert, which came off yesterday evening. On this occasion we had not only an overture, but also a symphony—each a masterpiece. The hall, as we have hinted, was densely thronged, county families arriving from all parts, and the townsmen mustering in larger numbers than usual;—for it cannot be denied that at these music meetings, whether held at Worcester, Hereford, or Gloucester, the townspeople, who derive the most benefit from them, seem, to a certain extent, the least zealous in encouraging them by their support. The overture was that of Mendelssohn to A Midsummer Night's Dream; the symphony was Beethoven's immortal No. 5 (C minor). Both were well performed, the symphony especially, under the direction of Mr. Townshend Smith. Though overture and symphony are equally familiar, the former requires more delicacy of handling in its elaborate and intricate details, while the symphony speaks for itself "in a voice of thunder." Never in our remembrance was a composition of its length and pretensions listened to with more devout attention by a crowded Festival audience. It was a sign of promise for the future, and a guarantee of the fact so important to art, that "the (musical) schoolmaster is abroad." The late Lord Brougham himself, who first set up this cry, and who took great interest in music, would have been pleased to find a work so serious and uncompromising seriously regarded by a "mixed" crowd of auditors. The first part of the concert ended with the famous sestet, "Sola, sola," which, when speaking of Mozart's Don Giovanni, the great Italian, Cherubini, declared to be the finest piece of concerted music for solo voices and orchestra in existence. In this sestet, the singers being Mdlle. Tietjens, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Agnesi, Messrs. Montem Smith and Santley, the result may be easily imagined. Among the miscellaneous pieces in the first part there were many things worthy of notice, and among them not least noticeable was the beautiful air from Cherubini's almost forgotten opera, Anacreon, "Je n'ai besoin pour embellir ma vie," which Mr. Cummings resuscitated, and which he sings with such true sentiment. In this he enjoyed valuable aid from the clarionet obbligato of Mr. Lazarus, as did also Miss Edith Wynne, whose charmingly unaffected delivery of Spohr's "Bird and the maiden," and Macfarren's "Pass clouds away, and welcome day," was among the genuine features of the concert. Balfe's melodious setting of the Laureate's verses, "Good night, good night, beloved," which Mr. Sims Reeves first brought publicly forward, is now too seldom heard, and was all the more welcome on account of the careful and artistic manner in which it was rendered by Mr. Edward Lloyd. There were noteworthy displays in the first part—such as the "O mio Fernando" of Mdlle Tietjens; an air from Handel's Italian opera, Orlando (Signor Agnesi); Haydn's "Spirit song" (Miss Enriquez); Signor Piatti's effective hunting song "When lords and ladies gay," given with such healthy vigour by Mr. Santley that an encore was the result; and our great barytone, in answer to the demand of the audience, returned to the platform and substituted J. L. Hatton's fine song, "Bid me weep and I will weep," which was heard with no less pleasure; and, to conclude, an air from Mercadante's opera, Il Giuramento, which could not have been entrusted to one more competent to do it justice than Madame Trebelli-Bettini.

Between the first and second parts of the concert, Lord Bateman, President of the Festival, appeared unexpectedly on the platform and informed the audience that he had been requested by the members of the chorus and orchestra to express their warm appreciation of the oratorio of Sir F. Gore Ouseley, in the performance of which they had taken part in the morning, and to offer him their united thanks. The proceeding, though somewhat unusual, met with unanimous approval from the audience, who applauded loudly, and still more cordially siastically when the composer of Hagar came forward and said that he felt exceedingly grateful for so unexpected a compliment, and hoped that when he next appeared before the public as a composer his work would be more complete, though he could not hope that it would be more admirably performed. A more becoming speech under the circumstances could hardly have been made.

Digitized by Google

The second part, after the symphony of Beethoven, was made up of materials gathered here, there, and everywhere. Signor Agnesi gave "Non piu andrai" (Figaro); Miss Enriquez sang a very graceful ballad, "He thinks I do not love him," by Madame Sainton Dolby; and Mr. Montem Smith introduced "Rosalind," one of the most genuine Shakespearian settings of Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Then came the somewhat hackneyed duet, "Ai capricci della sorte," from Rossini's Italiana in Algeri (Madame Trebelli and Signor Agnesi); Bishop's florid air, "Bid me discourse," uttered with bird-like fluency by Miss Edith Wynne, who has been earning golden opinions both at the morning and evening concerts; next, Mr. Sullivan's expressive romance, "A life that lives for you" (Mr. Santley); next, Signor Arditi's waltz, "L'Ardita" (Mdlle. Tietjens); next a duet for tenor and barytone, from Donizetti's Betly (Messrs. E. Lloyd and Santley); next a bolero, by Offenbach, "C' est l'Espagne" (Madame Trebelli); next, "Just as of old," an expressive romance by Mr. Cummings, of which the composer himself was the fitting interpreter; and, lastly, "God save the Queen," for chorus, orchestra, and solo voices, the solos undertaken by Mdlle. Tietjens, Messrs. Cummings and Santley. Here was a programme to suit all tastes, and no wonder that the audience separated at the end with the fullest persuasion that they had been delighted beyond measure. The performance of Mendelssohn's St. Paul at the Cathedral on one of the three evenings formally dedicated to entertainment at the Shire Hall, of the scope and calibre we have described, reduced the number of miscellaneous concerts from three to two. The change was found no less acceptable this year than in 1870, when, under the same conditions, an oratorio was given, and the Cathedral lighted up for the occasion. St. Paul, with Mdlle. Tietjens, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Montem Smith, and Signor Agnesi in the chief parts, was a genuine success, and it is to be hoped that at future meetings the new arrangement may be persisted in.

The Messiah, to-day, brought an attendance of no less than 1,815 persons, and a collection for the charity of £277 13s. 8d., thus bringing the amount to be handed over to the widows and orphans, independent of future donations invariably counted on, to £901 19s. 4d. If the assertion of a well-known musical historian about three-quarters of a century ago, that this sublime work has "fed the hungry, clothed the naked, and fostered the orphan," was true when Dr. Burney wrote, how much more so is it true now when, after so long a period, its attraction still remains, and is likely to remain, for three quarters of a century more. The Messiah at one of these festivals is worth coming for, especially when sunshine prevails, as was the case to-day. The streets were thronged by people anxious to see the magnates of the county as they passed up the principal thoroughfares on the way to the Cathedral, and the Cathedral Close itself offered a scene of similar movement and animation. The colossal choruses of the Messiah, by the way, were listened to by numbers of persons outside the church with scarcely less gratification than they were listened to by those privileged to be within. It is unnecessary to describe the performance of this the sacred oratorio without parallel. Enough that it was in all respects good, that the choruses were uniformly well delivered, and that the solo singers—Mdlle. Tietjens, Miss Edith Wynne, Madame Trebelli, Miss Enriquez, Mr. Cummings, Mr. E. Lloyd, Signor Agnesi, and Mr. Santley, among whom the parts were variously distributed—were one and all at their very best. During the performance of the great choruses, "Hallelujah," "Glory to God," and "Worthy is the Lamb," the audience stood up, in accordance with the traditional custom.

If only that these Festivals enable numbers of people to hear the Messiah, the most eloquent sermon ever preached from year to year, who might never be able to hear it in its integrity, still less likely to hear it worthily executed, and unlikliest of all, to hear it in a church, it would indeed be a pity that the Festivals of the Three Choirs should ever be abandoned.

Sept. 13th, 1873.

Little more remains to be said about the 150th meeting of the Festival of the Three Choirs, which has been much more successful than was anticipated. The subjoined table of statistics, published in the Hereford Journal of to-day, showing the comparative number of persons attending the performances, and also the various collections for the Charity on each day in 1867, 1870, and 1873, will suffice to convey some notion of the actual results of the meeting just over:—

| | Number of persons attending. | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| At the Cathedral. | 1867. | 1870. | 1873. |
| Tuesday morning ... ... | 657 | 845 | 1,097 |
| Wednesday morning ... ... | 1,564 | 1,256 | 963 |
| Thursday morning ... ... | 815 | 888 | 873 |
| Friday morning ... ... ... | 2,300 | 1,672 | 1,815 |
| Thursday evening ... ... | — | 923 | — |
| Wednesday evening ... ... | — | — | 869 |
| Concerts. | | | |
| Tuesday ... ... ... | — | — | 298 |
| Wednesday ... ... ... | 733 | 383 | — |
| Thursday ... ... ... | 733 | 711 | 677 |

| | 1867. | 1870. | 1873. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Collections. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. | £ s. d. |
| Tuesday ... | 188 2 1 | 146 9 1 | 179 16 5 |
| Wednesday ... | 153 13 4 | 151 10 7 | 224 8 10 |
| Thursday ... | 268 9 9 | 95 19 2 | 225 0 5 |
| Friday ... | 534 19 11 | 394 9 2 | 277 13 8 |
| | 1,155 5 1 | 788 8 0 | 906 19 4 |
| Additional donations | 247 0 3 | 329 2 6 | — |
| Totals ... | 1,402 5 4 | 1,117 10 6 | — |

"It should be noticed that the Friday's collection in 1867 was augmented by £150, which Mr. Sims Reeves placed on the plate on account of his inability to sing."

The amount of the additional donations to the Charity cannot be known for some time yet; but, although it is not likely that the gross receipts will equal those of 1867, swelled out as they were by the unexpected contribution of Mr. Sims Reeves, it will probably at least show fairly against the sum total of 1870. So that, after all, Hereford still holds its own as among the most liberal supporters of the fund for the widows and orphans.

The concert of chamber music, given in the Grand Jury Room of the Shire Hall last night, afforded, as on previous occasions, an opportunity of testing, in quartet playing, the quality of some of the chief performers on stringed instruments. The selection was as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Quartet in G, Op. 77, No 2 ... .. ... | Haydn. |
| Song, "The Charmer" ... ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Song, "The Lotos Flower" ... ... | Schumann. |
| Song, "The joys of Home" ... ... | Schumann. |
| Quartet in A minor, Op. 13 ... ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Duet, "Silent Prayer," Op. 18 ... ... | Otto Goldschmidt. |
| Quartet in F (No. 1) ... ... ... | Beethoven. |

This was a "Monday Popular Concert," of which Mr. Arthur Chappell himself would have approved. The players in the quartets—admirably selected, by the way—were M. Sainton (first violin), Mr. Ralph (second violin), Mr. R. Blagrove (viola), and Mr. Pettit (violoncello). The singers were Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Montem Smith—the spontaneous and beautiful song of Mendelssohn devolving upon the lady, and the expressive ballads of Schumann upon the gentleman. In Herr Otto Goldschmidt's duet the two combined their voices. Mr. Townshend Smith, who has done such excellent service to this Festival, and well sustained the reputation he has earned by no less than thirty years' zealous and laborious work in the interest of the meetings, undertook the task of accompanying the vocal music on the pianoforte.

The ball at the Shire Hall was comparatively a failure, scarcely 100 persons being present; and it is not at all unlikely that the result may lead to a discontinuance of these festive gatherings, which, coming as they do after a very hard week's music, sacred and secular, morning and evening, seem a little out of place, or, at all events, scarcely as much of a recreation as they might be under other circumstances. In speaking of the second miscellaneous concert we should have stated that, besides his speech referring to the oratorio of Hagar and it composer, the President, Lord Bateman, addressed the audience to the purport that Mdlle. Tietjens had kindly volunteered to sing another song, in addition to the pieces set down for her in the programme. That the audience was gratified with this announcement need scarcely be told; nor was their gratification lessened by the fact that the song chosen by the accomplished lady was Professor Oakeley's thoughtful and expressive setting of the Laureate's well-known stanzas, "Tears, idle tears," which had already been heard with such pleasure at the Birmingham Festival. The song was accompanied on the pianoforte by Dr. S. S. Wesley, whose masterly improvisations at the early services, and whose artistic performance of the organ part in Mendelssohn's St. Paul have been among the most noticeable features of the week. Despite the weather, which has been throughout provokingly uncertain—the only absolutely fine day being the day of the Messiah—the meeting at Hereford has been in all respects an agreeable one. None can have gone away disappointed after attending any of the performances, morning or evening; and none can have questioned the fact that Mr. Townshend Smith, together with all who co-operated with him, had done the very best to make them as good as they could possibly be made. The Bishop of the diocese, who was compelled to be absent during the week, evinced his sympathy for the cause by a donation of 25 guineas. There was, it is true, but one novelty—Sir Gore Ouseley's oratorio, Hagar. That novelty, however, was a deserved success; while the introduction of Handel's Jephthah exhibited both spirit and enterprise in the right direction.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

September 10th, 1873.

"Eh! dis donc Mam'zelle Trognon"—"Quand on conspir!" c'est "Tres jolie, peu polie"—I beg pardon! but La Fille de Mdme. Angot has been repeated so often at the theatre to crowded audiences that I feel unwell, and fancy I really am a conspirator, and keep asserting in tones more or less musical, though I know 'tis very untruthful all the time, that "De Mdme. Angot je suis la fille." Faust was very well put on the stage on Saturday, Mdlle. Poitevin taking the part of Gretchen in a pleasing way. The voice of this artist is thin; the upper register is the best part, and, at times, when she "throws herself into her part," it comes out well. M. Bresson was, as he always is, a good Faust. M. Larrivé, with his good bass voice, sang the part of Mephistopheles in the accurate way it ought to be sung. M. Durant, as Valentine, was true to his notes; and last, not least, Mdlle. Mey, of whom I have already written, played the rôle of Siebel with her usual vivacity and grace.

The Huguenots and Guillaume Tell, as grand operas, make up our operatic summary; M. Cazabon singing in each, but not with the same ease and excellence as he did in the Juive.

And now I must make you up the mixture of concerts (various) and fêtes we have been revelling in. The afternoon concerts have been unusually good; I give you a programme of last Monday's as a specimen:—

"1, Ouverture de Mireille, Gounod; 2, 'Mira la Bianca Luna,' Rossini; 3, Valse sur Hamlet, E. Ettling; 4, Ouverture de La Bohémienne, Balfe; 5, Fantasia sur Rigoletto, Singelée."

The only other concert I have to allude to (and the large attendance at which, though it may have filled the pockets of the artist (?) who gave it, and who is, no doubt, "Great" in his own estimation, only confirms my notes on the taste of people here—"Chaque un a son goût") was that of "The Great Vance." "Old Brown's daughter," "Jolly dogs," &c., delighted an "appreciative" audience, but much disgusted the frequenters of the beautiful salle of the Etablissement, who are accustomed to resort there to listen to real music. It was built as a Temple to the muses, and not to be desecrated by vulgarity.

On Wednesday (the 3rd) the third Fête d'Enfants took place. It was a pretty sight, and to increase the enjoyment of the juveniles, after hopping about in various attitudes and at varied paces, Mr. Spiers, the kind managing director, presented each little one with a souvenir in the shape of a book.

There is a society here, consisting chiefly of trade's-people of the town, which styles itself "La Societé de Bienfaisance"—what kind of "Bienfaisance" it does I do not know, but I do know that it spends a large amount every Monday during the season in illuminating a garden, where dancing and fireworks are the attractions. An energetic gentleman connected with "La Societé" went lately to Brussels, and negociated with, or rather invited, "La Musique des Guides," well known all over Europe for their excellent performances of the best music, to "come over and help us" at a special "three days fête." A display of Belgian banners hung out on our "outer walls," processions (torchlight and otherwise), regattas, concerts, and balls formed the other amusements of the fête. The Society, of course, spends lots of money on these fêtes and in consequence looks after its pennies to realize its pounds; but I think it is a mistake to exclude the press from the free list, particularly when it might do them at times so much good. One last remark: If the "Guides" had received an invitation from the Sous-Préfect and a committee of gentlemen of influence in the town, and accepted it, the fête would have been a success. I have heard, on good authority, that the "Guides" uttered notes of complaint even at their reception.

Shooting has begun, and through the wheat stubble is heard the "frequent gun" of the ideal Alphonse, "got up" in top boots, a white coat, spectacles, a broad-brimmed hat, two netted shooting-bags, a single-barrel muzzle-loading game destroyer, and a shaved poodle rejoicing in the name of "Milord," or "Tom" (the only names I ever heard French dogs called). Boulogne is consequently getting empty. The provoking costumes—(hats made like half a soup-plate in front, with a broken slop-basin as a finale, and celestial blue gauze floating around, are a feature)—still continue, and, as the Alphonses are away, attract, and captivate the hearts of the remaining Augustes or Henris, as the case may be. S. C.

ENGLISH OPERA AT MANCHESTER.

(From the "Evening News.")

The production of The Bohemian Girl at the Theatre Royal drew a crowded house, and the performance was one of the best of the season. It was also, as a whole, one of the finest representations which have been given of the work, though previous performances in Manchester are associated with very pleasant memories. At the time to which these recollections take us back the importance of efficiency in the choral and orchestral arrangements was not so rigorously recognised as it now is, under the bâton of Mr. Carl Rosa; and it was mainly owing to this fact—and not to any lack of taste or skill in solo singing—that English Opera fell into decay. That it will succeed, however, under the condition of competent musical direction, combined with liberal expenditure, is no longer a matter of doubt. The feature of main interest last evening was the first appearance of Miss Rose Hersee, of whose capabilities flattering reports had preceded her début in Manchester. In figure, voice, and manner, she suits the part of Arline so admirably that success was a foregone conclusion. It is evident that she has undergone a sound musical training, and, though very young, her form as an operatic actress is already defined. Her voice, though rather attenuated, is sweet, flexible, and expressive, but its charms are not improved by the vibrato embellishments to which she is prone. She was warmly encored for her singing of "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls;" and, among many other examples of delightful vocalization, the appeal at the feet of the Count, in the third act, may be mentioned with commendation. Miss Hersee's acting was in entire keeping with the spirit of the character, and her appearance in other parts will be looked forward to with interest. Mr. Castle has never acquitted himself more satisfactorily than in Thaddeus, and several of his airs were rapturously re-demanded. As the Gipsy Queen, Miss Franklein sang and acted most excellently, and Mr. Aynsley Cook did himself great credit in the character of Devilshoof. Mr. Campbell, as Count Arnheim, earned a fair share of applause. In other respects, the opera was well put upon the stage, the chorus and band being everything that could be reasonably wished. Balfe's opera of Satanella has also been performed (for the first time in Manchester), with Miss Blanche Cole in the title rôle, and Mr. George Perren in the part of Count Rupert.

Digitized by Google

OPENING OF THE NEW ORGAN AT MALVERN LINK.

(From the "Malvern News.")

The new organ recently erected by Mr. Nicholson, of Worcester, at St. Matthias's Church, Malvern Link, was duly opened on Wednesday, September 2. Divine service commenced at 11.30 p.m., when there was a large attendance, every available seat in the church being occupied. Mr. W. Haynes, the talented organist of the Priory Church, presided at the organ throughout the service. The opening voluntary, an "Andante" for solo stops by Beethoven, and the concluding one, "Austrian Hymn," with pedal obbligato, arranged by E. Chipp, were played in a manner that gave the conductor ample opportunity of becoming acquainted with the powers of the instrument, and his acompaniment to the chants and hymns was most appropriate. After the voluntary, hymn 296 was sung from "Hymns Ancient and Modern," the book used in this church and those in the neighbourhood of Malvern. The service was full choral, the responses being plain song as adapted from Tallis for the festival of choirs at Lincoln Cathedral. The psalms selected were the 47th, 48th, and 108th, and these, with the canticles, were sung to various single chants. The anthem, "O Lord, Thou art great and glorious," was sung spiritedly by the choir; it was composed by J. M. W. Young, organist of Lincoln Cathedral. The hymn before the sermon was the 145th, and hymn 370 was sung during the collection, which reached over £35 15s. The prayers were read by the incumbent, the Rev. E. Acton Davies. The first lesson was read by the Rev. F. Woodward, curate, and the second by the Rev. J. Pearson, rural dean. The Lord Bishop of the Diocese preached the sermon.

The organ chamber, which is a most suitable apartment for that instrument, is built at the east end of the church, on the north side, and to the left hand upon entering the church at the north door. It was built by Mr. Porter specially for the purpose, and, under the careful superintendence of the architect, Mr. H. Haddon, was constructed with due regard to its suitableness to the purpose it has to serve. The organ itself is sweet in tone, and yet powerful. Its situation appears to have been well chosen by the designer, Mr. W. Haynes, who, as organist of the Priory Church of this town, has here displayed his knowledge of acoustics to no very small degree; for the organ, in its present position, while pouring forth its tones with power and resonance throughout the building, is not overpowering for the size of the church, while tones of the softest and most beautiful character can also be produced from it.

The following is the specification of the organ, which has two complete sets of manuals throughout, also full compass pedal organ. It was designed by Mr. W. Haynes, organist of the Priory Church and College Chapel, the cost being 350 guineas:—

GREAT ORGAN, CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

1. Open diapason, metal, 8 ft. 56 pipes.
2. Dulciana, metal, 8 ft. 56 pipes.
3. Stop diapason and clarabella, wood, 8 ft. 56 pipes.
4. Wald flute, wood, 4 ft. 44 pipes.
5. Principal, metal, 4 ft. 56 pipes.
6. Fifteenth, metal, 2 ft. 56 pipes.
7. Preparation for sesquialtra.
8. Preparation for trumpet.

SWELL ORGAN, CC TO G, 56 NOTES.

9. Bourdon, wood and metal, 16 ft. tone, 56 pipes.
10. Open diapason, tenor C, metal, 8 ft. 44 pipes.
11. Lieblich gedact, metal 8 ft. 44 pipes.
12. Stop diapason bass, wood, 8 ft. 12 pipes.
13. Salicional, metal, 8 ft. 44 pipes.
14. Preparation for harmonic flute.
15. Principal, metal, 4 ft. 56 pipes.
16. Preparation for piccolo.
17. Cornopean, metal, 8 ft. 56 pipes.
18. Preparation for hautboy.

PEDAL ORGAN, CCC to F, 30 NOTES.

19. Open diapason, wood, 16 ft. 30 pipes.
20. Preparation for bourdon.

COUPLERS.

21. Swell to great.
22. Great to pedals.
23. Swell to pedals.

At the conclusion of the service a bazaar was held in the National Schoolroom.

---

GRATZ.—Mdlle. Minnie Hauck commenced a short engagement at the Landestheater by appearing as Susanne in Le Nozze di Figaro. She was recalled after every air, as well as at the end of each act, besides having to take part a second time in the Letter-Duet.

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

It was a bold step on the part of M. Rivière to announce a "Wagner Night," seeing that the public on whom he chiefly depends were not supposed to take much interest in the Teutonic "Reformer," or, indeed, to know more of him than that his name has long been synonymous with all that is discordant in the musical world. The manager's boldness, however, was quite justified by the result. No meeting and clashing of Wagnerites and anti-Wagnerites took place; no heads were broken, and if a hat was crushed the cause must have been friendly pressure or heedless enthusiasm. To all appearance, Covent Garden Theatre contained nothing but Wagnerites on Tuesday last. They filled the boxes and "circles," they perspired in the gallery, and got jammed in what is facetiously called the "promenade," all animated by a common willingness to applaud everything, and all seemingly as earnest as Herr Wagner could desire. The value of such a demonstration under such circumstances may not be great, especially as a Promenade audience revels in noise, but it shows, at any rate, that Wagnerian music, while it can captivate solemn, spectacled Germans, and throw owl-wise Anglo-Germans into ecstasies, has a phase which the "many-headed" can admire. The selection presented by M. Rivière was, on the whole, a good one. It began with the March from Tannhäuser, the same opera contributing, also, the recitative, "Like Death's dark shadow," and air, "O star of eve." This vocal piece was admirably sung by Signor Gustave Garcia, who threw into it exactly the right amount and right kind of passion. An orchestral selection from Rienzi was followed by one from Lohengrin, which combined the chorus with the band. Herr Werrenrath obtained an encore for the singing of "The Pilot" (Der Fliegende Holländer), and the Wagner pieces ended with the overture to Tannhäuser and the Kaiser March. All the orchestral music was effectively played, if not in every case remarkable for delicacy of execution. Noise, however, is the grand requisite when Herr Wagner has to be interpreted, and noise enough was forthcoming to produce the enthusiasm already described.

In the miscellaneous part of the concert were introduced Gungl's waltz, "Dreams on the Ocean" (encored), and a Swiss air with variations, by M. Riviere, "La Fiancée d'Appenzal," which seemed to give much pleasure. A Scotch selection was given on Thursday with great success, Miss Newton, Miss Alice Barth, Mdlle. Corneille d'Anka, Mr. George Perren, and M. Gustave Garcia contributing the vocal portion; and Miss Ada Lester a solo on the pianoforte, "Highland Gems," by Mr. Willie Pape, which obtained unanimous and well-deserved applause. The orchestral selections were from Guy Mannering and Rob Roy.

---

BROOKLYN.—A monument is about to be erected in Prospect Park to Robert Burns.

HANOVER.—The season was to be inaugurated on Goethe's birthday, that is: the 28th ult., by his play of Egmont with Beethoven's music.

KARLSBAD (Bohemia).—The chief features of the Curhaus Concerts during the last week have been: Introduction from Fr. v. Holstein's opera, Haideschacht; overture to Gluck's Iphigenie; Adagio from Beethoven's "Sonate pathétique;" overture to Mozart's Titus; Adagio from Beethoven's sonata, Op. 22 (by desire); R. Wagner's "Das Liebesmahl der Apostel;" overture to Der Freischütz; scenes from Wagner's Tannhäuser; "Cavallerie Marsch," by C. Wilhelm. The instrumental solos were, as usual, those of our excellent harpist, Mdlle. Anna Dubez, who played with immense success a very clever composition by her brother, Mr. Jos. Dubez, entitled "Æolian harp," as also Godefroid's "Mélancolie" and "Danse des Sylphes;" and from the rich répertoire with which C. Oberthür has supplied the harp, his brilliant solos, "La Cascade," "Clouds and Sunshine," "Air russe," and "Fairy Legend;" also the same composer's "Une nuit d'été," nocturne for harp and hautbois and two Romances, "The moon is gleaming" and a "Serenade" and "Evening wish." Both these last pieces were originally songs with harp obbligato, the last one having been introduced in London last season by Madame Regan-Schimon. The voice parts were played on the hautbois by Herr Klemke with so much taste and expression that the "Serenade" had to be repeated by general desire. Particular notice is also deserved for a Fantasia for harp and horn, the horn part being finely played by Herr Behr; and Ernst's "Elegie" for harp and violin, the latter played with much feeling and expression by Herr Prantl. Also an "Elegie" by Zamara, for harp and violoncello, played by Mdlle. Dubez and Herr Lang, was received with marked favour.

Digitized by Google

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

CAPT. MARMADUKE TWITCH.—We cannot afford the space in our columns for a full and satisfactory reply to your question, or rather series of questions. We have no doubt the Bandmaster of your regiment could furnish you with the information required.

POOR PILLICODDY.—No. The Sir John Hawkins of Dr. Johnson and Mrs. Piozzi was not, as far, at least, as we are aware, an ancestor of Mr. Hawkins, Q. C. The epitaph which some friends suggested for him ran thus:

"Here lies Sir John Hawkins, Without his shoes and stockings."

The last word must, of course, be pronounced "stawkins," or the Knight's patronymic, "Hockings." Choose according to taste.

LAMPLOUGH BROWN.—Dr. William Croft died in 1727 in his fiftieth year, in consequence of an illness occasioned by his attendance at the Coronation of George II. His master was the well-known Dr. Blow, Purcell's successor as organist of St. Margaret's, Westminster.

PINAFORE.—There are plenty of elementary works published on the subject at an exceedingly moderate price.

CASTLEBAR JONES.—It certainly does not say much for the good sense and taste of the public that they should be amused by such puerilities. It always has been so, however, and, most likely, always will be. A French writer has remarked very pertinently:

"Le monde est vieux, dit-on, je le crois, cependant
Il le faut amuser encor comme un enfant."

A. H.—Yes. The late Mr. Alfred Mellon composed music in almost all forms, from his early youth upwards. The most important pieces we can call to mind are—an opera called Victorine, performed at Covent Garden Theatre by the Pyne and Harrison company; a string quartet, which was played on one of the "English nights" at the Monday Popular Concerts; several orchestral overtures, among which, especially admired, was Romulus, given at the Promenade Concerts and elsewhere, &c., &c. Mr. Mellon studied composition under Molique, at Stuttgardt.

BIRTH.

On September 8th, in Paris, the wife of MAURICE SCHLESINGER, Esq., of a son.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 20, 1873.

THE well-known answer: Non mi ricordo, given to innumerable questions of great moment, put by the learned counsel during the famous, or infamous, trial of Queen Caroline, and the haze which at times envelops matters of primary importance connected with the suit now dragging its slow length along before the Lord Chief Justice of England, aided by Justices Mellor and Lush, proves that memory is no more to be relied on than the word of your particular friend for whom you put your name to that little bill, which he promises so faithfully—and forgets so generally—to take up when it falls due. But not only is memory false; it is eccentric. It will lose its grasp of hundreds of really weighty circumstances in a man's career, allowing them to glide quietly down the stream of oblivion, while it treasures up comparatively trivial and insignificant facts. Thus, for instance, the period of our own boyhood as now reflected upon the retina of our mental eye very much resembles in its general effect an early photographic portrait melting away into hazy nothing, but with the tip of the nose, the left eye, or one of a pair of more than naturally large hands, standing out in bold relief from the surrounding indistinctness. Among the objects dating from the above period, but as vivid as if the period was only yesterday, nay, only yesterday during the summer in the polar regions, when yesterday glides imperceptibly into to-day, and is so like it that there is no telling which is which—among these objects may be mentioned the enormous show bottles in chemists' shop windows. We had already read our Gulliver, and fancied these huge samples of the glass-blower's skill were intended for customers from Brobdignag. We actually went so far as to entertain a most fervent hope that we might happen to be passing when one of the gigantic patrons of the establishment called to have his prescription made up, though we had an inner consciousness that, if unfortunate enough to be so lucky, we should wish to run away, but should most likely fall down in a fit. It was at night, particularly, that the monster bottles impressed us, when the lights behind them displayed with such intensity the deep crimson, fairy-like blue, or other coloured liquids with which they were filled. Then, too, how mysterious, how weird-like, how awe-inspiring, were to us the characters inscribed on them. We are not sure that, even now, those characters do not inspire us with a sort of involuntary reverence, so deep that, if proceeding from our own free will, it ought to be reserved as a tribute for the cuneiform legends on the Nineveh bull. For years did we admire those bottles, and for years did we imagine they contained real medicine for real customers, even though the latter might not be of the abnormal pattern suggested by Dean Swift's story. If we may be allowed to desecrate Moore's well-known lines, even at the present day:

"Whenever a mixture we take, or a pill,
The thought of those bottles adheres to us still."

At length uneasy suspicions began to haunt us. We determined, no matter at what cost, to know the truth. We made enquiries and found that the eye-enticing contents of the bottles consisted merely of cunningly-coloured water, while the mystic characters outside were as devoid of meaning as the productions of our modern would-be metaphysical poets. In a word, we discovered these bottles were a sham, an aqueo-vitrious sham.

But, at any rate, if they were a sham, they were useful; they served to fill up a shop window, and, in our opinion—such is the force of boyish predilection when it does survive,—by their brilliant hues, to ornament them. The same quality of usefulness may be claimed for many other shams with which we became acquainted as we advanced

"Through life's dull road, so dim and dirty."

Whatever the gallant Sir Charles Napier may have thought in his own breast, when the truth was subsequently disclosed, the Russians, no doubt, prized very highly the wooden shams fashioned in the semblance of cannon, and planted on the forts of Cronstadt, to such good purpose, as to prevent the British fleet from quietly sailing up to St. Petersburg and, if necessary, laying it in ashes. Then again the heaps of "fine moist at 4½d. per lb., highly recommended," the mountains of "this year's currants just received, very prime," the towering stores of fragrant old Hyson and equally desirable young Souchong, with which grocers seek to attract thrifty housewives, are most superficial shams, being the thinnest possible layers, the most wafer-like strata of the various articles lightly strewn over the boards beneath; "grattez la cassonade, et vous trouverez le sapin." But as they hurt no one, and are calculated to create an apparent reign of exuberant plenty where, perhaps, only a bare sufficiency might meet the eye, and produce on it a less pleasing effect, we have nothing to say against them.

There are other shams, however, and their name is legion, to which we object most strongly. Not only are they injurious to the interests they are supposed to serve, but are frequently dishonest, and, moreover, stupid. We will confine ourselves to one or two such shams connected with music or the drama. A play is produced, an opera brought out, for the first time. The next day, it is no unusual occurrence for the advertisements in the daily papers to announce a great hit, a tremendous success, and so on, though, perhaps, at the end of the week, the dramatic chef d'œuvre is quietly consigned to oblivion, and the musical masterpiece performed no more. It must be noted, too, that the advertisements appear, as a rule, the very next morning after the production of the belauded works. Either, then, the advertisements were penned before the doors of the theatre were opened, or the whole routine of the papers was deranged in order to insert them, no advertisements being received at 10 or 11 p.m. We leave the reader to decide which of the two alternatives is the correct one. But certain impresarii, theatrical and otherwise, are not contented with thus indulging in prophecy, like the gentlemen who write the tips for the sporting journals. They are partial to inserting "notices of the public press," in a peculiar method, forcibly bringing to mind the individuals who, if they have an opportunity, add 00 to the figure "4," and "hundred" to the equivalent word, previous to presenting a four pound cheque to be cashed. The system is ingenious, but open to the imputation of swindling. One specimen will suffice to convey a clear idea of the peculiar method in question. A critic writes: "When stupidity is sense; obscenity, wit; and flatness, brilliancy, then, and not till then, we may say that the new drama of The Modoc Chief, or Prairie and Fell, is the best and most interesting work of modern times." The critic's opinion as quoted by the manager begins at "We may say, &c.," all that precedes being omitted. The sooner shams of this kind are thoroughly exposed and put down the better. Surely any one visiting a theatre or concert hall, on the force of such a truncated quotation, would be entitled to recover his admission from the manager for having obtained money under false pretences.

Digitized by Google

Another sham connected with the world of art is the bouquet sham. This, however is not criminal; it is only stupid. The heroine of the drama, or the prima donna in the opera, has just finished a scene amid anything but enthusiasm on the part of a far from numerous audience, when a bouquet is flung on the stage. Of course all eyes are turned to see who it is that has so exceptionally enjoyed the performance as to be worked up to bouquet-flinging pitch. But whoever the person may be, he or she, belongs evidently to the class of those who for, as often as not, the floral tribute has issued from an apparently empty box near the stage. This is odd; but something still more odd is that several more bouquets are flung down during the course of the performance seemingly by nobody. At times the process takes place only from one and the same box; at others, it is executed from two or more. Occasionally the dispensers of these flowery emblems of admiration are visible in flesh and blood. In nine cases out of ten, they do not look as though they possessed such a superfluity of this world's goods as would justify them in so costly a mode of manifesting approbation. Sometimes, it is true, a bouquet may proceed from an occupant of the stalls, but these cases are rare.

"Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame;"

In times gone by, the public may have been deceived by this bouquet business. But bouquets now are as much depreciated in value as the paper currency of France was during the first Revolution, when a handful of assignats of a thousand francs each would hardly pay for one's dinner. The system has been worked to death, and the public see through it as they see through the massive canvass walls of a stage dungeon not properly backed, with a hundred gas jets flaring away behind in readiness for the next scene. It is a sham which had better be allowed to fall into disuse as soon as possible. Bouquets, even when contracted for, cost a great deal. If fair artists would set aside for competent professors, and the expense entailed by a longer period of serious study, the sums which now find their way to Covent Garden florists and suburban nurserymen, they might not perhaps receive quite as many bouquets as they do, but those that did fall to their lot would be more highly prized by the recipient and respected by the public, because fairly and honourably deserved. L.

---

We understand that at the end of the year Mr. George Grove will retire from the post of chief executive officer of the Crystal Palace, which he has filled since the formation of that company in 1852. We are glad, in the interests of the Crystal Palace and its visitors, to hear that the directors will then propose to the shareholders that Mr. Grove should take a seat at the Board of Direction, so that his experience may not be lost to the Company.—Times.

---

Madrid.—Herr von Flotow's opera: L'Ombre, is to be produced at the Teatro della Zarzuela.

Dresden.—In the official report just published, we have a highly satisfactory account of the Tonkünstlerverein for the year 1872-73. The Honorary Principal is Herr F. A. Kummer; the Presidents are Herren A. Blassmann and J. Ruhlmann. In addition to 13 honorary members, there are 152 ordinary and 91 extraordinary members. Four grand public concerts are given every winter season. In the concerts of last season, 39 instrumental works, by 29 different composers, were performed; 15 for the first time.

New York.—The Broadway Theatre has opened with Charles Lecocq's buffo opera, La Fille de Mdme Angot, which has achieved a genuine triumph. The principal characters are very well sustained by Mdlles. Aimée, Stani, MM. Juteau, Duchesne, Deschamps, and Duplan. —The Olympic has inaugurated its new season by Mephisto, with Miss Lydia Thompson and her company.—An Italian dramatic company, with Herr Maurice Grau as manager, and Signor Tommaso Salvini as first star, was to open on the 16th inst., for a short series of performances at the Academy of Music.—Mr. P. S. Gilmore, of Jubilee notoriety, is to the fore again. He is about to erect a monster Concert Hall upon a plot of unoccupied land in Fourteen Street, just opposite the Academy of Music.

Ratisbon (Bavaria).—About C. Oberthür's Grand Mass, St. Philip di Meri, which has recently been performed here, the Ratisbon Morgenblatt of the 11th inst. writes:—"The celebrated harp-virtuoso, Charles Oberthür, has composed a Grand Mass, which was performed at Wiedermunster Church, on the 24th of August. This composition is rich in phrases of imposing effect, in which the sacred words are deeply felt and expressed with dignity by the music. The clever instrumentation produces powerful effects. An Ave Maria by the same composer is full of devout feeling, and, under the skilful direction of our chorus-regis, M. J. Hanisch, was particularly well sung. The question whether, and how far, both compositions are in church style, we leave open, but give free expression to our delight at this, as far as we know, the greatest product of Mr. Oberthür's talent consecrated to the praise of his Creator."

Vienna.—The series of revivals at the Imperial Operahouse will be brilliantly inaugurated, about the end of October, by C. M. von Weber's Oberon. This will be followed, shortly afterwards, by R. Schumann's Genoveva, as the second novelty of the season, also with a new and magnificent mise-en-scène. The scenic department, for both operas, will be entrusted to the celebrated artists, Herren Burghardt, Brioschi, and Kautzky, who hold the same position here that artists like Grieve, Beverley, and Telbin, hold in London. With regard to Herr Goldmark's Königin von Saba, which was said to be definitely accepted, nothing is as yet settled.—Among the novelties secured by the management of the new Comic Operahouse there is a three-act comic opera, Ines, die Wallfahrt der Königin, the last work of Herr Joseph Foster, a local composer of very good repute. The principal female part is especially intended for Mdlle. Minnie Hauck.

Digitized by Google

CHOICE OF A HUSBAND.*

Having taken care by means of education to eradicate all incipient faults in women, to confirm her health, to increase her powers of attraction, and fit her for the station which her talents and virtues entitle her to fill, we take the best means to ensure that the maiden shall at the proper age marry the man most pleasing to her, and most likely to secure the happiness of both. In every district a council of ladies, who have passed through certain ordeals, and a council of elders, regulate all matters relating to marriage. Over each of these presides a man of a certain age, and of spotless character, whose qualities, actions, and mode of life have been observed and recorded from early youth.

Let me more particularly describe how the lady makes choice of a husband.

During thirty-one evenings in succession the girl intended for the marriage state is placed in an assemblage composed of eighty-five young men, one of whom she is expected to choose, but however quickly her mind may be made up she is not allowed to announce her decision till the thirty-first evening has arrived. The eighty-five young men are selected by the councils from those only who have declared their intention of marrying. Any man of the same rank as the lady, who is desirous to be one of the eighty-five, is generally nominated at once, and if the girl has any especial liking for one particular person, she is allowed to communicate the fact privately to one of the ladies of the council. In cases, however, where both the councils are of opinion that there is any serious objection to the eligibility of the young man, they have the right to withhold the summons. This right they rarely exercise, and never until after communicating with the lady when she has named the gentleman. Every contingency is well considered; besides, the regulations which govern every step connected with these meetings, and the sacred feeling with which the councils regard the delicate trust confided to them, prevent any inconvenience which might otherwise arise from their proceedings. At these meetings the girl wears a peculiar head-dress with a star in front, to distinguish her from other ladies who are allowed to be present, but who, however, are expected not to pay court to the gentlemen. It would have been unreasonable to require the exercise of so much self-denial under the old system, but an acquisition of the power of self-denial forms part of the training prescribed by my system of education, and is now ordinarily practised when needed. This privilege of being present is highly prized and eagerly sought by ladies, if only for one of the thirty-one chosen evenings.

The gentlemen who wish to have their pretensions favourably viewed pay court to the young maiden of the star, and any gentleman who it is thought may prove agreeable can be called by the lady of the council, one of whom is always seated near the girl. On occasions, when some of the gentlemen present would rather not be amongst the aspirants, it is amusing to see them retire behind the others, hoping to escape without offence against the rules of good breeding. Should one of these be called by the lady superior, he will probably give himself awkward airs, and endeavour to be as little engaging as possible. The maiden generally looks modest and blushing, and needs the assistance of the lady superior, who is not unfrequently obliged to represent her in conversation. Before a week has elapsed the maiden of the star has generally intimated by look who is likely to be the selected one. Sometimes, however, she is fickle, and when one, encouraged by her expressive glance, has paid her court, she will encourage another, and another, and another,—for on these occasions she has full liberty of action.

It is amusing to see the efforts of pretenders, and the expression put on, whilst overwhelming the lady with amiabilities when her thoughts, and perhaps her glances, lie in another direction. She, in turn, may be obliged to use all her power to attract the one she desires to select. If she be a coquette, each one of many will think that he himself is the fortunate swain on whom her choice will fall. The doubts existing in these instances cause great excitement and amusement, and between the meetings pearls against rubies, diamonds against diamonds, and other precious stones are staked on the event. Great is the agitation on the thirty-first evening, when the maiden is expected to declare on whom her preference has fallen. She proclaims it by presenting the elected one with an appropriate flower, and thus is spared the pain of a verbal declaration. A band of music then announces, through a particular and well known strain, that the choice is made, and a march is played, to the measure of which the chosen one leads his intended to a throne on a slightly raised dais. Each of the gentlemen then approaches, successively presenting to the maiden a flower, which he lays on the table in front of the dais, wishing her at the same time happiness and joy. The lady will, perhaps, kiss the flower presented, when anxious to show regard for the giver, whom, however, she has not been able to choose. This ceremony of presenting flowers having been concluded, the future bride and bridegroom lead the way to the banqueting-room.

On the evening following, a meeting of three hours' duration takes place between the chosen one and the maiden, who is accompanied by the lady superior of the marriage council. The two converse, and if after mutual explanation anything incongruous is found, either party is at liberty to object, and the marriage does not take place; but if the three hours pass without objection, no further question can be raised. The two are then looked upon as betrothed, and after a certain interval the marriage takes place.

It sometimes happens that at the meetings of the eighty-five the maiden, distracted between contending aspirants, is unable to give the preference to any. In that case she is put back for another year. At the end of the year another assembly of young men is called; the number invited is limited, however, to forty-five, and the evenings are reduced to twelve. Should the lady again fail to select—a very improbable occurrence—another and final assembly would be called for the following year, the number of gentlemen being reduced to twenty-one, and the evenings to seven, and if the lady should still remain undecided she must be content to enjoy single blessedness during the rest of her life. For my own part I do not recollect more than one case where the selection was postponed beyond the second year.

* "Women are the mothers of the nation. The happiness of our life depends on theirs. They have much to bear. If we neglect them we neglect ourselves."

MUNSTER.—Der lustige Schuster, a "Singspiel," or musical burletta, nearly 120 years old, by "father Hiller" was lately produced by Herr Carl Thalheim, at the Summer Theatre "on the Island," and was enthusiastically received. Der Dorfbarbier, by Jos. Schenk, Rothkäppchen, by Dittersdorf, Doctor und Apotheke, by the same composer, and other admirable works of a past generation, have also been revived by Herr Thalheim.

MILAN.—Signor Borri's ballet, Il Figliuol prodigo, has proved a hit at the Scala. It is very splendidly placed upon the stage, and the principal parts are well sustained by Signora Trevisan, Signori Menzotti and Mendez. The music is by Signor Giaquinto.—Signor Aramburo has appeared as Fernando in La Favorita at the Teatro Dal Verme. Among the operas shortly to be produced at this theatre are Un Ballo in Maschera, Otello, and L'Ebreo. A new ballet, also, Clarina, by Signor Martinelli, is in active preparation.

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

No less than fifteen journals devoted exclusively to music and the drama are published in Milan.

THE Chicago Jubilee Orchestra attempted to play Herr R. Wagner's Tannhäuser overture, but failed utterly. Which was to blame? The orchestra or the overture?

"AH!" said a great connoisseur, suddenly stopping the other day before a picture dealer's window, "There's a dog after Landseer!" "What's the dog after him for?" enquired a country friend.

WHY is it, enquires an American contemporary, eager for knowledge, that lightning never strikes organ grinders, that they never fall into the river; that they never starve to death, and are never bitten by mad dogs?

ACCORDING to the Gazzetta Musicale, an interesting discovery has lately been made by a French clerical journal. This estimable print, guided doubtless by divine inspiration, asserts that the recent German laws affecting the Roman Catholic Church are the work of Meyerbeer and of Halévy, whose operas, Les Huguenots, Le Prophète, and La Juive, sowed the seeds of certain damnable and blasphemous opinions on religion. If the whole clerical press of France shares the above opinion, what a valuable band of allies Herr R. Wagner possesses for his attack on Judaism in Music.

As musicians are as much interested in, or disgusted at, the present cause célèbre pending in the Court of Queen's Bench, as other people, they will be delighted to learn, or annoyed on being informed, that the Tichborne family was one of great importance in Hampshire before the Norman Conquest, its surname being derived from the well known river Itchen, that runs into Southampton Water, along the eastern skirt of Southampton town. The name was formerly De Itchenborne. Then there was Sir Roger de Tichborne, Kt., in the reign of Henry II. The "de" was dropped in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and the name was spelt as it is now, the Sir Benjamin Tichborne of that day being Sheriff of Southampton, and Knight of the Shire for Hants, in the 35th year of the same queen's reign. In 1620, James I. made this gentleman a baronet, and knighted his four sons, on account of the father, as Sheriff, proclaiming the king's accession at Winchester. He had also the fee-farm of the Castle of Winchester. The crest of the family is a hind's head between two wings, and not a bird's, as has been stated. The supporters are lions, and the motto is Pugna pro patria. The name of Doughty came into the family in 1826, in lieu of Tichborne, and, finally, "Doughty-Tichborne," in 1853.

No pen, says Señor Castelar, the new President of the Spanish Republic, can describe the solemnity of Palestrina's "Miserere" as executed at St Peter's:—

"The night advances. The Basilica is in darkness. The altars are uncovered. Through the open arches there penetrates the uncertain light of dawn, which seems to deepen the shadows. The last taper of the tenebrario is hidden behind the altar. The Cathedral resembles an immense mausoleum, with the faint gleaming of funereal torches in the distance. The music of the 'Miserere' is not instrumental. It is a sublime choir admirably combined. Now it comes like the far-off roar of the tempest, as the vibration of the wind upon the ruins or among the cypresses of tombs; again like a lamentation from the depths of the earth, or a moaning of heaven's angels breaking into sobs and sorrowful weeping. The marble statues, gigantic and of dazzling whiteness, are not completely hidden by the darkness, but appear like the spirits of past ages coming out of the sepulchres and loosing the shroud to join the intonation of this canticle of despair. The whole church is agitated, and vibrates as if words of horror were arising from the stones. This profound and sublime lament, this mourning of bitterness dying away into airy circles, penetrates the heart by the intensity of its sadness; it is the voice of Rome supplicating Heaven from her loads of ashes, as if, under her sackcloth, she writhed in her death agony. To weep thus, to lament, as the prophets of old by the banks of the Euphrates, or amongst the scattered stones of the temple, to sigh in this sublime cadence, becomes a city whose eternal sorrow has not marred her eternal beauty. Thus she is enslaved. David alone can be her poet. Her canticle is majestic and unequalled. Rome! Rome! thou art grand, thou art immortal, even in thy desperation and abandonment! The human heart shall be thy eternal altar, although the faith which has been thy prestige should perish, as the conquests that made thy greatness have departed! None can rob thee of thy God-given immortality which thy pontiffs have sustained and which thy artists will for ever preserve!"

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

MISS FLORENCE ASHTON AND MR. COMPTON'S ENTERTAINMENT.—The young artist above mentioned has given performances at Margate and Chatham with great success. The larger amount of appreciation was shown in the former place, the latter not being a locality at all remarkable for its interest in matters either musical or theatrical—"a word to the wise." The performance of which we are now writing consists of recitations, comic and otherwise, by Mr. Edward Compton, son of the celebrated comedian of that name, who also sang some buffo-scenas most effectively, joining Miss Ashton in Parry's funny "A B C" duet. The fair contralto (mezzo-soprano) contributed a variety of English, Irish, and Scotch ballads, among which we may particularize, as having pleased most, "Home, sweet home," "The last Rose of Summer," "Katty Moyle," and "Robin Adair." If "a thing of beauty is a joy for ever," surely Miss Ashton's claims to popularity must be acknowledged by all but the deaf and blind. At Margate, Mrs. Percy Montague presided at the piano; while at Chatham, Mr. Norman, an exceedingly clever local professor, officiated at that instrument; Miss Ashton, whose powers as a pianist are of no contemptible kind, accompanying the musical comicalities of Mr. Compton.—W. S. J.

THE TONIC SOL-FA CHOIR.—The concert of the Tonic Sol-fa Choir at the Crystal Palace on Saturday last, although well attended, did not attract so numerous an audience as its merits warranted. True the choir, 3,500 strong, made a grand show, but we should like to have seen four times as many listening to the music derivable from the concert of Saturday. The singers were only members of an amateur musical association, and the principle upon which they had been trained is still debateable land. But no matter; the voices were young and fresh, the intonation was true, and the conducting admirable. The selection had merit, variety, and novelty. It included songs and choruses of Handel, chorales of Sebastian Bach, illustrations of sacred themes from French composers, and glees and part-songs of our English school. The first piece that brought forth general applause was a solo with chorus, "The Martyrs of the Arena," by Laurent de Rille. The audience, liked it, and were with difficulty prevailed on to forego an encore. The singing of "Judge me O God" (Mendelssohn) by a "select" choir was very good; whilst the Samson chorus which followed, by the whole choir, was even better. The bright ringing notes of the young girls pervaded the whole building. Perhaps, however, the most emphatic success of the first part was the chorale of Bach, sung with a steadiness and correctness which would have charmed the great composer himself, and was much indebted for the pleasure it gave the audience to the conducting of Mr. W. C. McNaught. The sentiment, time, the light and shade, were fully appreciated, and the intelligence of the conductor communicated itself to the vast body of choristers. The "sight-singing test" was conducted by Mr. Proudman; and that it was efficient was proved by the unanimous demand for an encore from an audience, every member of which held a copy in his or her hand. The "Comrades' Song" (Adolph Adam), was the great success of the second part of the concert. The military flavour was in place here. Taken altogether, and judging "by results" as directed by the late Chancellor of the Exchequer, we should say that this year's concert was a success for the Sol-fa system, and showed its fitness for the teaching of sight-singing. The concert marked the re-commencement of the musical season at the Palace. The eighteenth series of Winter Concerts will commence on the 4th proximo, the programme including some novelties.

PROVINCIAL.

EXETER.—The Theatre Royal opens on Monday next, under the managerial auspices of Mr. Frederick Neebe, to whose unceasing efforts its present prosperity is mainly attributable. We shall mention the names in our next.—Miss Ellen Horne, Miss Marion Severn, Mr. Henry Guy, and Mr. Wadmore, appear on the 30th inst., at the Victoria Hall, in Barnett's Ancient Mariner, and Handel's serenata, Acis and Galatea. —Mr. Vance also announces a visit.—W. S. J.

BRIGHTON.—A service of sacred song, illustrative of Bunyan's "Holy War," has been given in the Pavilion Dome, under the auspices of the Committee of the Brighton Sunday School Union. About 500 children took part in the vocal illustrations. Mr. A. Habens was the conductor, and Mr. C. T. West presided at the organ. The Rev. A. Foyster and the Rev. J. Martin furnished the connective readings. There was a large audience. The singing of the children was effective, and reflected credit upon the instructors and conductor. The city is rapidly filling with the fashionable world, and musical entertainments are "looming" in the distance. Mr. Kuhe has already announced his "Grand Annual" Concert for Monday the 29th inst., with Mdlle. Albani, Miss Edith Wynne, Signor Caravoglia, and Mr. Santley as principal vocalists, and Mr. Lindsay Sloper as "conductor."

Digitized by Google

MANCHESTER.—At the first Gentleman's Concert this season, Miss Purdy made her début before a Manchester audience, and the Guardian thus writes about her:—

"The other vocalist of the evening, Miss Purdy, had to pass through a trying ordeal by the side of a veteran singer like Mr. Santley. In spite of this, however, by the sweetness of her voice and the unaffected simplicity of her style, she won her way to the hearts of her audience. Possessed of a mezzo-soprano voice of good though not remarkable compass, of pleasing quality throughout, and even beautiful in her middle register, she governs it with taste, and displays no little feeling in what she attempts. Singing during the evening in three languages, she showed a facility in each, though perhaps her selection was not on the whole the happiest that could have been made. The French song by Niedermeyer at once won the favour of the audience, and her duet with Mr. Santley was also warmly received. A slight nervousness that was observable is most natural in one so young; but extended experience will soon enable her to overcome this. We hope we shall soon have the pleasure of hearing Miss Purdy again."

BARMOUTH.—The Cambrian News informs us that—

"The concerts which have been given by a number of visitors—including the following professional and amateur singers and instrumentalists: Mrs. Ellis Williams, Mrs. William Williams, Miss Bessie Waugh (Eos Mynwy), Miss Lucy Williams, Miss Clara Elliot, Miss Goodered, Miss Madeleine Williams, the Rev. Arthur Trowman, Willert Beale, Griffith Edwards—for the benefit of the Church, and which are now drawing to a close, have added considerably to the pleasures of that popular resort. There has been an originality of conception about the performances which has given them a special character; but, apart from that, they suggest the enquiry whether the same kind of thing could not be oftener attempted, to increase the amusements of holiday-seekers and help a good cause at the same time. In every town like Barmouth there must, in the summer season, be visitors capable of getting up attractive entertainments and giving their fellow creatures, sometimes almost driven to despair by the weather, a large amount of amusement. It is to be regretted that there are so few visitors who put their talents to the same good purpose as the amateur performers at Barmouth."

BIDEFORD.—A grand concert has been given at the Music Hall by Mr. E. Reynolds. The following well-known artists were engaged:—Madame Thaddeus Wells, Mr. Christian, Mr. Nicholson (solo flautist to the Duke of Rutland), &c. The weather was very unfavourable, and the attendance in consequence was limited. The evening's entertainment commenced with a grand duet from Il Trovatore, most successfuly performed by Madame Thaddeus Wells (piano) and Mr. Nicholson (flute). This was followed by the ballad, "A Father's love," nicely rendered by Mr. Christian. This gentleman's fine bass voice was heard even with better effect in his rendering of "The desert," which was received with great applause. The duet, "La ci darem" (Mozart), ably performed by Madame Wells and Mr. Christian, was well received; and the excellent voice of Madame Wells was heard to perfection in her rendering of the well-known ballad, "Kathleen Mavourneen." The first part of the programme included, in addition to the above, a flute solo by Mr. Nicholson, and a duet (piano and flute) on Scotch airs, by Madame Wells and Mr. Nicholson. The beautiful and exquisite tone which Mr. Nicholson brings from his instrument is extraordinary. His fame as a superior performer on this instrument is so well-known in the musical world that no words of ours could add to his merit. In the second part of the programme Henry Smart's beautiful duet, "When the wind blows in from the sea," (Madame Wells and Mr. Christian), Formes' famous song, "In sheltered vale" (Mr. Christian), and other well-known pieces were capitally rendered by the several artists.

MANCHESTER.—In the Weekly Times of September 13, we read the following remarks about Instrumental Music in English Presbyterian Churches:—

"The effect of the recent decision of the Synod of the English Presbyterian Church, leaving to individual congregations the decision of the formerly much-vexed question of the introduction of instrumental music into their churches, has been, in Manchester, that at least three churches have built organs as aids to improvement in the musical portions of their services. On Sunday a new organ was opened in the church in Grosvenor Square, under the pastorship of the Rev. J. A. Gardiner. The English Presbyterian Church at Withington will shortly bring an organ into service, and for the New Bridge Street congregation, in whose church instrumental music has formed part of the services for some time, a new organ is, we believe, being built. Next Sunday, in the United Presbyterian Church in Brunswick Street, Oxford Road, an organ will be opened. The organ opened on Sunday in Grosvenor Square has been built by Mr. F. W. Jardine, and its construction and erection has cost about £800. It has three manuals and pedals, and 28 stops. The mechanism is after the newest systems. The case is of pine, and is constructed from the design of Mr. Medland Taylor, Manchester, and has front pipes elaborately decorated by Messrs. Best & Lee, of John Dalton Street. The organ is blown by hydraulic power. The organist is Mr. J. W. Cockcroft. Collections were made at both diets of worship on Sunday, after sermons by the Rev. J. A. Gardiner and the Rev. Dr. M'Kerrow, in aid of the organ fund, towards which all but £250 had been previously collected."

LIVERPOOL.—We learn from the Daily Albion of September 18th that—

"Sir Julius Benedict's morning concert at the Philharmonic Hall, on Saturday the 27th inst., will inaugurate the musical season in Liverpool. Mdlle. Albani, the Canadian prima donna, whose metropolitan triumphs are fresh in the recollection of our musical readers, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mdlle. Nita Gaetano, Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Edward Lloyd, Signor Caravoglia, and Mr. Santley are the vocalists announced, and the instrumentalists are: the distinguished violinist, M. Sainton, and four pianoforte players, Mrs. Beesley, Mdlle. Michaels, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, and Sir Julius Benedict.—The performances of the combined choirs of St. Anne's, Liverpool, and St. Laurence's, Birkenhead, of the musical portion of the services in connection with the laying, on Sunday last, of the foundation-stone of the new Catholic Church at Birkenhead, dedicated to the latter saint, were not so satisfactory as they might have been. It was evident that there had been few, if any, rehearsals, and the consequence was that while one section of the choristers followed the band, the other adhered to their own idea of time, the result being destructive to the fine music they had undertaken to sing. The band, that of the Boys' Refuge, Liverpool, though somewhat crude in execution, acquitted themselves very well indeed. Mr. Argent, the organist of St. Laurence's, was nominally the conductor, but he and Brother Tertullian, the director of the band, did not seem to understand each other, hence the confusion of sounds was increased.—On the evening of Friday the 5th inst., a choral festival, in connection with the Liverpool Sunday School Union, took place in St. George's Hall. The selections contained in the service of praise, compiled for the occasion, were excellently delivered. To Mr. J. B. Clarke, the conductor, and to the various masters who imparted to the youthful choristers a knowledge of the divine art, the credit of the admirable performance is due. Mr. Best accompanied the choruses on the organ."

—o—

M. WIENIAWSKI.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—In one of your late numbers I perceived a statement, quoted from the New York Music-Zeitung, that M. Wieniawski, notwithstanding all that the "newspapers had stated about the crowds attending his concerts, had refused to play in San Francisco on one occasion because there was not sufficient money taken." M. Wieniawski, who became aware of this notice of the New York Musik-Zeitung only through the columns of the London Musical World, asks me to trespass upon your valuable space in order to rectify this statement, which is incorrect. He gave, in San Francisco, nine concerts in two weeks with the most extraordinary financial results. He left there and gave concerts in Sacramento, &c. In Ogden, a little Californian town, he gave a concert with receipts unheard of in that locality, that is 3,000 dols. gold, after which, without his consent, another concert was announced, and 400 dols. subscribed, when he refused to play, being about to leave. This is the truth about it.—Yours, M. T.

New York, Sept. 6.

A DINNER TO CLEMENTI.—We artists gave a dinner and musical entertainment to old Clementi. Cramer and I received him; he was greeted with rounds of applause, and ninety of us sat down with him to dinner. He was placed between Sir G. Smart and myself, and when the cloth was removed we had speeches, toasts, and music. Of course, a wish was expressed, and rapturously applauded, that Clementi, the father of pianoforte playing, should be heard upon this occasion, and thus prove his right to the title. Clementi rose from his chair; Smart, Cramer, and I led him to the instrument. The excitement was great, the whole party eagerly listening. Clementi had not been heard for years. He extemporised on a theme from Handel, and completely carried us away by his fine playing. His eyes gleamed with youthful fire; those of many of his hearers were dimmed with tears of emotion. Amidst shouts of applause, and the heartiest congratulations, he resumed his seat. Clementi's pianoforte playing, when he was young, was famed for the exquisite legato, pearliness of touch in rapid passages, and unerring certainty of execution. Even now, the remains of these qualities were recognised and admired, but what chiefly delighted his audience was the charm and freshness of his modulations in improvisation.—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

Boosey & Co.

Bird of the Wilderness. Song. Words by the Ettrick Shepherd. Music by Louis Diehl.

Hogg's "Bird of the Wilderness" has often engaged the attention of composers, but in no case, so far as we know, with better results than in the present work. Mr. Diehl's music is characterised by studied simplicity, and relies for effect, in great measure, upon a charming theme, tempo di valse, which once heard haunts the ear, and cannot with ease be got rid of. A better song for teaching purposes, or for family use, does not often appear, and we commend it as certain to be a favourite wherever it goes.

Duncan Davison & Co.

'Mid the Scented Clover. Song. Composed by Louis Diehl.

The words of this song call up a vivid picture of those happy days in the country which all of us remember, and, if we be much "in populous city pent," remember with keen delight. Mr. Diehl's music reflects the spirit of the words to perfection. It is music bright, fresh, and free, like the breezes to which the clover-blossoms bend as it sweeps over the scented fields. Written with musicianly taste and skill, the song before us is one that will please the cultivated amateur, while it pleases, also, those who love music simply for the emotional enjoyment it brings.

Sunday School Union.

Te Deum, in D. By Madame Weiss.

Madame Weiss's appearance as a church composer is marked by extreme unpretentiousness. Her Te Deum, a plain and simple work, is well adapted for use in village choirs, and has the further advantage of being music in which the congregation can easily learn to take part.

J. B. Cramer & Co.

The Songs of Wales; with Accompaniments for Piano or Harp. Edited by John Thomas. Part V.

This work keeps up the interest, and justifies the expectation called forth by its early numbers. The Part before us contains "Gruffydd's Feast," arranged by John Parry for a solo voice, and by C. H. Purday for a quartet; "The Chant of the Bards" (Parry) as a trio for male voices; "The Flowers of the Heath," and "The Fairy Banquet," arranged by Haydn; "Oh! Cambria" (Parry), "The Monks of Bangor's March," and "The Blackbird," arranged by Beethoven; together with several other songs of equal interest. The Editor's notes throw a good deal of light upon the traditions connected with the melodies, and notes and melodies together bid fair to make up a really valuable work.

Henry Klein & Co.

Electricity Valse. By Henry Klein.

The themes of this waltz are very graceful and pleasing, and the pianoforte arrangement presents no difficulty to amateurs of moderate skill. Whether used for dance purposes, or played for its own sake, it cannot fail to please.

Robert Cocks & Co.

Recollections of Wales. No. IV. By Brinley Richards.

Mr. Richards' brilliant yet comparatively easy variations on "The March of the Men of Harlech" have been so often played by their composer that we need do no more than call attention to them here. So popular a tune would make a less effective morceau acceptable; being as effective as it is, the work before us ought to be very acceptable indeed.

Let the Hills Resound. National song. Words by L. H. F. du Terreaux; Music by Brinley Richards.

This song, described on its title-page as "the second great success of Mr. Richards," was so prominently noticed on the occasion of its performance, as a chorus, by the Welsh singers at Marlborough House, that further expression about it would be superfluous. There is no musical reason whatever why "Let the hills resound" should not enjoy as much popularity as "God Bless the Prince of Wales."

---

Hamburgh.—A company for drama and operetta sailed hence in the Frisia a short time since. Its destination is the German Theatre, New York.

Geneva.—It is rumoured that, with a portion of the money left this city by the late ex-Duke of Brunswick, the Municipality intend erecting a magnificent theatre.

WAIFS.

Signor Vianesi has left London to fulfil his engagement as conductor of the orchestra at the Italian Opera, Paris.

Mr. Jefferson, says an American paper, will probably return to England, later in Autumn, and re-appear on the London Stage.

The Cunard steamship, Cuba, conveying Madame Nilsson and Mr. Henry Jarrett, arrived safely at New York after a quick and, we hope, an agreeable passage.

M. Maurice Strakosch has definitely settled to be the lessee of the Italian Opera in Paris, and will commence his season on October 2. Signor Vianesi is appointed conductor of the orchestra.

Mr. Wilkie Collins left Liverpool on Saturday for New York, by the Cunard steamship, Algeria. Mr. Wilkie Collins is engaged by the Literary Bureau of New York, to give lectures in the United States.

Herr Weissenbach, described variously as a great "concertist on the drum," and "a great professor and drumist," has been playing on "sixteen harmonically-tuned drums" at the Central Park Concerts, New York.

Tamberlik will appear in William Tell, the Huguenots, the Prophet, and the Trovatore, during the Lucca season, at the Grand Operahouse, New York, in October. Mdlle. Ilma di Murska will appear in Lucia di Lammermoor.

A fascinating young lady, at one of our summer resorts, on being asked recently if she had ever read Shakespeare, tossed her pretty head, with the answer—"Shakespeare! Of course I have; I read that when it first came out."

Miss Blanche Tucker, of Chicago, a young amateur vocalist, has arrived in Paris, bringing warm letters of introduction from Lucca to Mdme. Viardot Garcia, who is to have the entire charge of Miss Tucker's musical education.

The magnificent peal of thirteen carillon bells, chiming by machinery, and recently erected in the tower of the new Bradford Town Hall, chimes, among several melodies of all nations, our new national anthem, "God bless the Prince of Wales."

The Editor of Brainard's Musical World, replying to a correspondent, says:—"Only a sketch of the Ninth Symphony by Schuberth is in existence. The seventh (in C) is his best work. If our contemporary be right, then he has not written Schuberth instead of Schubert, and Schuberth is a prolific symphony composer whose acquaintance we have yet to make.

The Babil and Bijou scenery, machinery, &c., used in the grand spectacle produced by Mr. Boucicault during his autumn and winter campaign at Covent Garden Theatre were sold at public auction in the arches of the South Western Railway (whence they had been removed from the theatre for that purpose) on Tuesday last. The sale comprised 80 lots, which, excepting the first few, did not realize any large prices.

Mrs. Jennie Van Zandt (Mdme. Vanzini), the American prima donna, has just sailed for Europe. Previous to her departure, a company of her friends, including a number of literary ladies and gentlemen of New York, gave her a complimentary banquet at Delmonico's Mr. Francis D. Moulton presiding. One of the features of the occasion was the addition of a piano to the banqueting-table, and songs and impersonations by the accomplished artist.

Mr. L. Stockley, of Birmingham, is arranging to give a series of subscription orchestral concerts during the coming season. The want of a good local band in Birmingham is felt by all lovers of instrumental music. There is a certain amount of good executive material in the town, which, supplemented by efficient outside aid, ought to make a good orchestra, capable of interpreting the best works of the great masters. Mr. Stockley has had many years' experience as a conductor, and is in a position to know and bring together the best local material available for orchestral performances. The details of his scheme are not yet made public, but his enterprise deserves encouragement and support.

Sir Walter Scott and the Bagpipes.—Scott's conversation was extremely animated and delightful. He told us many anecdotes, but when he asked me, "How do you like my cousin, the piper?—you know, we Scotch are all cousins," I am afraid my answer must have done violence to his sense of music, which by nature was very limited. It was impossible for me to pretend to any enthusiasm for the bagpipes. Sir Walter had expected as much, but expatiated on the wonderful effect the national music has on the native Highlanders, arguing that a wandering piper would attract crowds in the streets of Edinburgh; also, that in battle the sound of bagpipes would inspire Scotch soldiers with a desperate valour. "You should hear my cousin, the piper, play and sing 'The Pibroch o' Donald Dhu,' but with the Gaelic words," said he; "those words are the only appropriate ones to convey spirit and animation, but the melody itself carries one away."—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

SCHMALKALDEN.—Carl Wilhelm, the composer of "Die Wacht am Rhein," was buried with great ceremony on the 29th ult. The coffin was ornamented with laurel wreaths, branches of palm, ribbons, and inscriptions. It was preceded by the senior pupils of the schools, and surrounded by young girls, dressed in white, with white and black scarves, and green garlands. Before it were carried upon a cushion the insignia of the Order of the Crown; behind it came, in addition to the local friends and connections of the Deceased, a deputation of friends and admirers from other places, as well as the government and municipal authorities, the Musical Associations, the War Association, the Turnerverein, and a numerous crowd of persons belonging to all classes. The funeral service was read in the church attached to the cemetery. Then, amid the strains of instrumental music, the coffin was borne to the grave, where a final speech was made, and the benediction pronounced by the officiating clergyman. Herr Seyffarth, one of the Deceased's most intimate friends when at Crefeld, then approached, and uttered a few valedictory words serving as an introduction for the last song Carl Wilhelm ever composed. Herr Seyffarth sang the song with great feeling and emotion, and it produced a deep impression upon all present.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

GODDARD & Co.—"To God, ye choir above," by C. Gounod; "Spring am I," and "In dreams, at least, I'm still with thee," songs, by Joseph Goddard; "Part Night, part Day," and "Tears," songs, by J. H. L. Glover; "Star of India," Grand Valse de Concert, by Sophia F. Hellbron; "That fond Smile," song, and "Les Sylphes," valse, for piano, by Henry Gothard.

E. EDGAR.—"Watt's 146th Hymn," music by E. Edgar.

ROBERT COCKS & Co.—"The Torrent Galop," and "The Moselle Quadrilles," by W. Smallwood; "Twilight Song," for piano, by Adam Wright; "Let the Hills resound," national song, by Brinley Richards; Recollections of Wales, No. 4, "March of the Men of Harlech," for piano, by Brinley Richards.

REEVES & TURNER.—"The Organ:" Hints on its construction, purchase, and preservation, by William Shepherdson, M.C.O.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Just Published,

"TWO PATHWAYS,"

SONG.

Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each 3 6

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expresaly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

BIRMINGHAM

MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,

National Hymn, 6s.,

Ave Maria, 4s.,

AND

Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Digitized by Google

Now Ready.

THE

RAISING

OF

LAZARUS.

AN

ORATORIO.

BY

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT

Price, in paper covers, 8s.; bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

NOVELLO & CO.,
BERNERS STREET.
LONDON.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MARIE ALEXANDROWNA WALTZ.

BY CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

ASHDOWN & PARRY beg to announce that this new Waltz will be published in a few days.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIN, AND FENNER, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Sept. 27, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 40. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY) October 4th. FIRST SATURDAY CONCERT and AFTERNOON PROMENADE of the Eighteenth Series. Commence at Three. Symphony, "The Scotch" (Mendelssohn); Pianoforte Concerto in F minor (J. S. Bach); Overture, "Nurmahal" (Spontini); Festival Overture (Dr. Julius Rietz). Mdlle. Leontieff, Mr. Vernon Rigby. Solo Pianoforte, Herr Pauer. Full Orchestra. Conductor, Mr. MANNS. Transferable reserved stalls, for the Twenty-five concerts, Two Guineas each; reserved stalls, for this concert, Half-a-Crown. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto) will sing Benedict's "BY THE SAD SEA WAVES," &c., at the City Hall, Glasgow, October 4th.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR. ARTHUR THOMAS will sing the Popular Song, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at St. John's, City, October 6th; Chelsea, October 11th; Poplar, October 14th; and Sutton, October 16th.

"LISCHEN AND FRITZCHEN."

MR. ARTHUR THOMAS will play "FRITZCHEN," and sing the famous Duet, "I'M AN ALSATIAN," in the above Operetta, at the Town Hall, Poplar, October 14th.

"KILLARNEY."

MISS BLANCHE RIEVES will sing "KILLARNEY" at Margate, This Day, October 4th, being her last appearance previous to her departure for the United States.

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!) will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

MADAME HELENA WALKER begs to announce that all Communications respecting Engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., must be addressed to her residence, 6, West Bank Road, Edge Lane, Liverpool.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Stretford Road, Old Trafford, Manchester.

MISS JULIA ELTON begs to announce her return to town for the Winter Season.—14, Gloucester Road, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR. TRELAWNY COBHAM begs to announce his return to town. 23, Somerset Street, Portman Square.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce his Return to Town from the Continent. Young rising Artists desirous of appearing in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., ought to write at once to Herr Schuberth, care of Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, and send particulars as to their abilities.

MR. E. ADAMS, Operatic Comedian, Manager and Author, General Entrepreneur and Director for Comic Opera, Burlesque and First-Class Musical Entertainments, for London and the Provinces.
Complete Tuition for the Stage, with every facility to eligible aspirants.
Foreign Productions Translated and Adapted for English representation.
Personal Interviews, from 12 to 3, at Mr. Boosey's, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

REMOVAL.

MR. VERNON RIGBY begs to announce his Change of Address to St. George's Villa, 26, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

NEW SONGS by the most Popular Composers.
Just Published.
SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S "The Sailor's Bride." 4s.
VIRGINIA GABRIEL'S "A Shadow." 4s.
SCHIRA'S "He was her only Son." 4s.
ARTHUR CECIL'S "I hear thee speak of a better land." 4s.
WILHELM GANZ'S "Camelia and Rose." 4s.
In D flat for Soprano, and in A flat for Contralto.
WILHELM GANZ'S "A damsel fair was singing." 4s.
Post-free at half-price.
HENRY KLEIN & Co., 6, Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—M. RIVIERE'S CONCERTS.—EVERY EVENING at Eight. The following artists will appear during the week:—

Mdlle. CARLOTTA PATTI.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mdlle. VICTORIA BUNSEN (the Swedish Contralto). | Madame CORANI. |
| Miss ESTELLE EMRICK. | Mr. J. H. PEARSON. |
| Miss CONSTANCE LOSEBY. | Signor CELLI. |
| | Mr. GEORGE PERREN. |

Instrumentalists:—
Mons. DUBOIS (French Horn).
Mr. G. CLINTON (Clarionet).
Mr. J. LEVY (Cornet-à-Pistons).
Conductor—M. RIVIERE.

MONDAY next, Herr Meyer Lutz's Cantata, "A LEGEND OF THE LYS."
TUESDAY, Rossini Night.
WEDNESDAY, Mozart Night. Conductor—Sir Julius Benedict.
THURSDAY, English Ballad Night.
FRIDAY, Mozart's "TWELFTH MASS." Conductor—Mr. William Carter.
SATURDAY, Miscellaneous.

Splendid Decorations, Ferneries, Fountains, Plants, Exotics, Flowers, &c. Refreshments by Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. Promenade, One Shilling. Doors open at 7.30; Commence at 8. Acting Manager, Mr. JOHN RUSSELL.

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE & OPERA HOUSE.
Licensed by the Lord Chamberlain to
Mr. T. THORPE PEDE, 20, Haverstock Hill.
OPEN FOR THE SEASON, UNDER THE DIRECTION OF MADAME ST. CLAIRE.

AN Original Comic-Opera, in Two Acts, entitled THE MAGIC PEARL. The Libretto written by E. FITZBALL. Music composed, and the Opera produced, by T. THORPE PEDE. The Rajah of Delhi, Mr. Gordon Wallace; Arcan, Mr. Clifford; Carchea, Mr. Hilston; Tippoo and Zanga, Messrs. Marler and Morton; Ben Hassan, Mr. E. Danvers; Fadleen, Mr. J. W. Turner; Sahib and Zule, Messrs. H. Harley and Simpson; Aphdal, Madame Marion St. Claire; Nocta, Miss Costin; Palma, Miss Alice Barth; Princess Zalouna, Miss Gertrude Ashton.
Act 1, Scene 1—A valley of the Himalaya. Scene 2—Palma's Hut. Scene 3—The Spirit's haunt in the Himalaya. Scene 4—Palma's Hut as before. Scene 5—The Grand Square at Delhi. Act 2, Scene 1—A Rajah's tomb. Scene 2—Corridor in the Rajah's Palace. Scene 3—Grotto in the Royal Gardens.
Preceded by the favourite Comedy, by J. B. BUCKSTONE, Esq., entitled THE HAPPIEST DAY OF MY LIFE. Messrs. E. Danvers, Scott Barry, Morton, H. Harley, Wilson, and Hilston; Misses Kate Nott, Rose Laurence, Millie Cooke, F. Rivers, and Mrs. Montague. Concluding with a Divertissement, LES ROSES D'AMOUR.
New and elaborate Scenery, designed and painted by Mr. William Maugham and assistants.
Private boxes for four persons, One Guinea; family boxes to hold six persons, One Guinea-and-a-Half, and £2 12s. 6d.; Stalls, 6s.; dress circle, 4s.; box seats, facing stage, 3s.; upper circle, 2s.; pit, 1s.; reserved pit, 1s. 6d.; gallery, 6d. Box Office open daily from 11 till 5, under the direction of Mr. Bell. No charge for booking. Doors open at Seven o'clock; curtain to rise at half-past.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury, and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an inferior Medal.
Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

"THE SACRED HEART." The beautiful Processional Hymn sung by all the Pilgrims to Paray-le-Monial. Arranged as a piece for Pianoforte or Harmonium by J. Pittman. Price 2s.; or, for one or four voices, with French and English words, 1s.—London: E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyle Street, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Digitized by Google

Now Ready, in Two Vols., With Portrait, 24s.

LIFE OF MOSCHELES,

WITH SELECTIONS FROM HIS DIARIES AND CORRESPONDENCE,

By his WIFE.

THE TIMES.—"These volumes will be hailed with particular delight. They are as well 'a record of the life of Moscheles' as 'a chronicle of the musical history of his time'—a period of sixty years."

ATHENÆUM.—"This 'Life of Moscheles' will be a valuable book of reference for the musical historian. The Volumes are full of amusing anecdotes."

HURST & BLACKETT, Publishers, 13, Great Marlborough Street.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20th, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

A SIMPLE CATECHISM

ON THE

RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

In the form of Question and Answer, and written in familiar language.

BY

E. ELLICE JEWELL.

Price 1s., Cloth Cover.

LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS' NEW PART-SONG (Dedicated by Special Permission to H.R.H. the Princess of Wales), "LET THE HILLS RESOUND," was magnificently sung by 500 members of the South Wales Choir, on the Lawn at Marlborough House, in the presence of Royalty; also at the Grand Eisteddfod. 1s. Class copy post free for four stamps. The song, 18 stamps; piano solo and duet, 24 stamps.

SOUND THE TRUMPET IN ZION.—Words by S. C. HALL. "Mr. Brinley Richards has achieved another signal success in his sacred part-song for a full choir."—Vide Graphic. Post free for 18 stamps.

READING AT SIGHT.—Musical Cards, for Learning to Read Music quickly at Sight. Invaluable to all Teachers of Music. Post free for 25 stamps.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

THE "TIMES" on HERR JOSEF GUNG'L and his Compositions.

"Herr Gung'l is a thorough master of his art. He writes melodies, rhythmical as well as catching—melodies that amateurs of dancing must love to dance to, not merely on account of their tunefulness, but because of their marked and unmistakable accent.

HERR GUNG'L'S FAVOURITE WALTZES

Are played nightly at M. RIVIERE'S Concerts at Covent Garden Theatre.

Catalogues, post free, on application to A. HAMMOND & Co., 5, Vigo Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| "ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. | Sung by Madame Patey .. | 4s. |
| "THE KING AND I" .. .. | Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. | 4s. |
| "THE CROSS ROADS" .. .. | Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. | 4s. |
| "SYMPATHY" .. .. .. | Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. | 4s. |
| "NOTHING" .. .. .. | Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. | 4s. |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

| | |
|---|---|
| "SINCE BABY LEFT US" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 3s. |
| "REQUITED" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | (In the Press.) |
| "A MODERN STORY" .. .. .. .. .. | (In the Press.) |
| "WRITING TO WILLIE" .. .. .. .. .. | (In the Press.) |
| "MY MORNING DREAM" .. .. .. .. .. | (In the Press.) |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"GARDE-MOI TA FOI,"

("BE TRUE TO ME.")

ROMANCE.

COMPOSÉE, ET DEDIÉE À SIGNOR GARDONI,

Par IGNACE GIBSONE.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"

SACRED DUET,

For Soprano and Contralto,

By HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

THREE SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

With English and German Words.

No. 1, "THE MINSTRELS' HOME" (Des Sängers Heimath) .. .. .. 3s.
,, 2, "THE LOVELY MONTH OF MAY" (Im Wundorschönen Monat Mai) 3s
,, 3, "VISIONS" (Traumbild) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s

The English Versions of the Words by MARIA XIMENA HAYES.

The Music by WILHELM SCHULTHES.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUET

For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"COM' E GENTIL,"

Une FANTAISIE DE SALON,

Sur la Serenade de "DON PASQUALE,"

Pour le Pianoforte,

Par RICHARD HOFFMAN.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"

"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"

Sung by

Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,

In the Opera of "MIGNON."

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"IN THE MORNING,"

SONG

The Words by F. ENOCH.

The Music by HENRY SMART.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"THE PET LINNET,"

BALLAD,

Sung with great applause by Miss LINA GLOVER at the Royal Albert Hall.

Composed by J. W. GLOVER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"LE VALLON NATAL,"

MELODIE.

De Mdme. WILLY DE ROTHSCHILD.

Price 2s. 6d. net.

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"TWO PATHWAYS,"

SONG.

Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

DRAMATIC MUSIC IN PERSIA.

In a recent article devoted to M. Chouquet's excellent work on the history of dramatic music in France, we observed that among all nations the stage always began by taking a religious form, and Persia now furnishes us with another case in point. This country, which counts so many centuries of existence, has not been acquainted with dramatic performances for more than fifty years, and the performances sprang up at the festivals in memory of Hussan, the venerated martyr, one of the sect of the Schiytes. Hussan, the last descendant of the Prophet, found himself deprived of the supreme power by the usurper Yesid. Determined to uphold his rights, he was surrounded by his enemy's forces in the desert of Kerbela, situated near Babylon. A frightful drama was enacted there. In the tents of Hussan, there were more women and children than men. The water failed, and the heat was suffocating. The girls came before Hussan's tents, and, crying with despair, flung down their empty water-skins. The Imâm Abbas mounted his horse, and, taking a water-skin in his hand, rode to the river Tigris, and tried to fill the skin. He was killed. Hussan's son shared his fate. All perished in the same manner, under the most tragical and touching circumstances. The women were tied to the horses' tails, and the soldiers tore off their ears to obtain possession of the jewels in them. Thus, after an agony of six days, disappeared all that was left of the family of Mahomet.

These adventures, or we might say this Passion, of the Prophet's descendant, are the only theme yet turned to account upon the Persian stage. The first ten days of Moharrem, which is the first month of the Mussulman's year, are devoted to the festivals of this anniversary. Up to the commencement of the present century, the festival consisted exclusively of prayers, lamentations, canticles, and sermons, before altars erected at every street-corner. Gradually one or two voices alternated with the chorus; from this to a real drama, to a stage performance, there was only a step; it is thus that the reading of the epistle, of the gospel, and of the lessons, in the service of the Roman Catholic Church led to the performance of Mystery-Plays, at first acted in the Cathedrals themselves. At the present day, the martyrdom of the family of Ali is represented during the festival of Moharem on the numerous tekyëhs in Teheran and the other cities of Persia. The tekyëhs are sites especially set apart for religious performances, which bear the name of tasiehs; they belong to certain cities, certain quarters of the cities, and sometimes to private individuals, who have made over sums for religious purposes, as people give money among ourselves to endow churches, convents, or hospitals. We who see in the theatre only an amusement or a display of wit, can with difficulty form any idea of the effect produced by such performances in Persia, just as in France or in Greece. When the Furies appeared upon the stage in pursuit of Orestes, the terror of the spectators was so great that they fled in dismay. An old chronicler, speaking of the Bretons who flocked to see the Mysteries says: "They went singing and came back weeping." The impression is even more profound among Orientals, whose imagination is more easily excited, and whose fanaticism is blinder. It would be very interesting to compare with each other a performance of the Erinnyes at Athens, of the Grand Mystère de Jesus in the Cathedral of Saint-Pol-de-Léon, and of the Marriage of Kassem, Hussan's son-in-law, in the tekyëh of Weli-Kahn at Teheran. Here we have to do with only one thing: the part played by music at these performances, and of the future reserved for dramatic music, if, as there is every reason to believe, a taste for the stage continues to increase among the Persians.

We must divide the music of the liturgical dramas into two parts: that of the choruses, of the religious fraternities, in a word, the canticles sung for centuries at the festival of Hussan, and the dramatic music, properly so-called, sung as solos or duets by the principal personages, and composed very recently. During the whole period of the festival, various fraternities go from one tekyëh to another, singing canticles, and preceded by a large flag all black, or formed of shawls and enveloped in crape. The melody of these canticles is monotonous but strongly rhythmical, and frequently interruped by cries of: Hussan! Hussan! as a sort of burden. They are accompanied by a savage and strange custom, which is, however, highly effective: it consists in the singers striking their breasts in a very peculiar manner. They form a kind of shell with their right hand, and, keeping time with the music, beat themselves violently under the left shoulder, on their naked breasts—for, during these expiatory festivals, most Persians go about the streets with their shirts half opened, as a sign of mourning. There arises from these blows a dull sound, which, when produced by a great many hands, is heard a very long way off. At one time, the blows are far distant from each other and heavy, appearing to lend ponderosity to the rhythm; at another, they are quick and rapid, exciting the performers. Thus, when the religious fraternities have begun, it is seldom that nearly the whole audience, the women especially, do not imitate them. The songs, cries, sobs, and blows, produce an indescribable effect, and act powerfully upon the nervous system.

The excitement is worked up to its highest pitch by the arrival of the fraternity of the Berberys, with the upper part of their bodies perfectly naked, their heads uncovered, and their feet without shoes. In their hands they carry iron chains and sharp needles. To the accompaniment of various sized tambourines they unite violent blows of the fist upon their breast, the clanking of the iron chains flagellating their naked flesh, and the sight of the long needles, which they thurst into their cheeks and arms, then, after the cry "Ya, Allah!" pronounced in a powerful voice and with a kind of despair, they suddenly stop, and go to another tekyëh, where they repeat the same performance. It is to an assembly prepared by these violent emotions that the arrival of the actors and the commencement of the drama are announced by the Komas, trumpets six feet in length, which produce the full, prolonged sound of a bell.

As to the performances themselves, let us listen to the Count de Gobineau, one of the most recent travellers in Persia, where he resided three years as Attaché to the French Embassy. He thus speaks of them in his work entitled: Les Religions et les Philosophies de l'Asie Centrale:—

"This language is here employed for the construction of short and supple lyric verses, sung to a sort of melopœia, rather cleverly elaborated. Cadences and portamentos abound. What the authors have attempted, in this unaccompanied singing, is to imitate the Persian nightingale, which is more simple in its modulations than ours, and exceedingly melancholy; the modulations have been combined with the divers tones of the human voice lamenting and groaning. The effect is exceedingly searching, and causes so vivid an impression of sadness, even when the words are not heard, that you are moved despite yourself. There are, also, duets, and sometimes choruses, but, in conformity with Oriental custom, always in unison. As a general rule, the parts most highly decorated with cadences are those of the principal personages, for which reason, as well as for many others, they are sustained by the best singers in the company. The public soon learn the names of these virtuosos, who are greatly run after. Each company tries to secure them, and pays them as liberally as possible. But it is only the important personages of the drama, the Imâms, the saints, the prophets, and the angels, who sing. The odious characters, like Iba-Said and Schemz, do not sing. They merely declaim. This is an element of variety interpolated in the poem, and producing an effect analogous to that of prose in Shakespeare's plays."

The effective parts are usually sustained by boys of fourteen or fifteen, some of whom earn as much as three or four thousand francs during the ten days of the Moharrem festival. Might they not be compared to the head singers in the old cathedral choirs, who executed show pieces and introduced into the celebration of the service elements completely foreign to the songs of the liturgy?

At the termination of the drama, there generally appears a company of highly trained dancers, who form a chorus. Dressed in cotton robes, with printed flowers, and adorned with silk sashes, and cachemire caps, they carry in their hands wooden disks, flat on the upper side and round underneath. They are accompanied in their exercises by the tambourines, the blows on the breast, and the song of the spectators, who repeat a canticle in which the names of the Imâms frequently recur as a burden. They jump alternately on each foot, in measure, and exactly at the same time, proving they have been long trained. At the same time they strike their disks together, now before their breasts like cymbals, and now behind their heads, reminding one of the attitudes so often seen on Grecian vases.

Digitized by Google

Though these facts are not of a technical or very precise character, they suffice to prove that dramatic music exists in Persia, and that, as in France, it sprang from the religious drama. True, it is only just beginning, but we are justified in believing that it will rival in progress the stage, which is borne along by an irresistible desire for innovations. On the background, which is always the same, of the martyrdom of Hussan, as was in our Mystery-Plays the Passion of Christ, the imagination of the poets has already begun embroidering episodes more or less foreign to the subject; now it is a French ambassador who espouses the side of Hussan, and suffers martyrdom with him; now it is a Christian maiden, who is enlightened by the true faith, and becomes a Schiyte. The music will also gradually emerge from its conventionality and indefinitely extend its horizon. All that will then be necessary will be for it to change its system of tonality, which cannot be better characterised than it is by Fétis in his Histoire de la Musique. What would lead us to suppose that this is one of the points in which the influence of the West upon the East will be most speedily felt is that the Persians are passionately fond of music. M. Flandin, the Count de Gobineau, and the Chevalier Lycklama, who is one of the most recent travellers in the country, bear witness to the fact of music forming part of all ceremonies and of all festivals, public and private; but they add that Persian ears are the only ones which discover a charm in strains with a uniform rhythm, interrupted by piercing notes, and accompanied by the drum, the mandolin, and the tenor violin called Kamouncha. In this particular, the Royal Musicians in Ordinary are not superior to others, and the distinguished foreigners whom they come to serenade can be grateful only for their good intentions.

Before feeling astonishment at music making such little progress among a people passionately fond of it, the reader must know that public opinion, guided by the mollahs, or Islamite priests, ranks this art, like that of dancing, among dishonourable occupations, and leaves it to persons called the Lotis, members of a despised class. But there are many things, beginning with Babysm, which is a return towards the ancient religion of Zoroaster, a protest against the invasion of Islamism, which may modify the normal condition of Persia, and regenerate that once flourishing empire—unless they bring about its complete dissolution.

ADRIEN DESPREZ

(Revue et Gazette Musicale).

Times for Music.

MILES' VOW.

(From the "Penny Trumpet.")

Young Miles the farmer at his plough
(The morning star alone was peeping),
He made to love a random vow
(Discreetly all the birds were sleeping),
That he would win proud Ruth, or die—
Fair Ruth the squire's lovely daughter,
Tho' countless suitors, rich and high,
In vain for her great beauty sought her.

Miles sang a strain so loud and sweet,
While passing near her morning bower,
He made the rose leaves at her feet,
Fall trembling in a fragrant shower.

O music, in thy magic spell
A witchery lies, there's no denying,
As who so well as Ruth could tell?
But in her secrets there's no prying.
Love, sweet conqueror of pride,
Is often in thy cadence stealing,
Made two sit closely side by side,
Where one had only dreamt of kneeling.

Young Miles that day had kept his vow,
Two doves in realms of love were winging,
The morning star alone knows how
Discreetly loud the birds were singing.

V. G.

Copyright reserved.

BEFORE THE CURTAIN.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—Your two leaders touch upon points worthy the serious consideration of both managers and public—the "feeing system," which should be in some way settled as far as the paying public is concerned; no fees of any kind should be allowed to be taken, upon pain of instant dismissal. But those persons who have free admission I don't think should object to, say, sixpence each for a bill. I have been told, upon the best authority, that as much as £1,500 per annum is paid for what is called the front of an ordinary sized theatre—that is, for the refreshment departments and box fees—independently of this sum, a staff of box-keepers and attendants have to be paid. I fear, Sir, as long as the managers let the fronts of their theatres, fees will and must exist, or how is the tenant to pay the heavy rent and other expenses. Then, again, the exorbitant charges made for bad—in some instances very bad—refreshments is very bad policy. Twopence for a stale halfpenny cake; sixpence for a penny bottle of ginger beer; vile stuff, called "Bass's pale ale" and "Irish stout;" a composition of methylated spirits of wine, and heaven knows what, sold for whisky or brandy, at sixpence per good-sized thimbleful; an ice, worth about twopence, charge made—one shilling. Instead of the refreshment bar being a boon to the public, and a profitable investment to the manager, it invariably turns out a serious loss. Those who would like refreshment go without rather than be imposed upon; and the main portion go out and get what they want. I am quite certain managers would find it pay cent. per cent. more if they only supplied a good article at the usual rate of charges.

There is another thing we want "before the curtain," and that is "public opinion," which is now stifled by the police officer. In my young days, Sir, such rubbish as is now produced and puffed so shamefully—one of the "shams" you so ably point out in your leader—would have been nightly hissed and yelled at until the manager knew that "public opinion" had been insulted, and wisely withdrew it. This made managers cautious, and a young author had a chance of getting his piece read and produced; but now, the most arrant rubbish is put before the public, if only written by one who has a stock name. Arrangements are made before a word is written: the scenes painted, properties and dresses made, and I have known the piece announced to be played on a certain night, and the last act not sent in until two days before the piece was produced. This accounts for hitches in the first night's performances, and for requiring such excisions, and cuttings, and gag to make it go, for want of proper rehearsals. Then comes the flaming puff advertisements. The public pay, and are disgusted, but sit in silence for fear of being locked up for creating a disturbance if they were to express their honest feelings. What hope is there for the drama, or opera, while this state of things exists? None!—Yours &c.,

AN OLD PLAYGOER.

CANOVA'S VIOLIN.

(From "Dwight's Journal of Music.")

Curiously, just as we are translating Wasielewsky's account of the old violin makers, comes Dr. Henry Thayer, of Cambridge, having in his possession a very fine Italian instrument, made by the earliest master of them all, Gaspar di Salò, of Brescia. The following certificate from the American Consul at Trieste (and the biographer of Beethoven) gives its history:—

"This violin was purchased by the undersigned, August 3rd, 1872, of Anton Krisch, a paymaster and clerk in the Austrian Naval Service at Trieste, who sold it, acting as agent for his wife's mother, the widow of Pietro Zaccagna of Treviso. The Zaccagnas were an old Venetian family, long settled at Treviso, of which Signor Maurizio Z. in the early years of the century was the head.

"The village of Possagno, in the province of Treviso, and some two hours' drive from the city of that name, was the birthplace of Antonio Canova, the celebrated sculptor, who was born November 1, 1757. In his later years, Canova, having purchased, or built, a fine villa there, made his native village his home, and was in the habit of visiting his intimate friend Maurizio Zaccagna, and playing in violin quartets at his house. The sculptor was possessor of a noble violin, constructed by Gaspar di Salò, which, from motives of friendship, he, sometime before his death (Oct. 12, 1822), sold to Maurizio Zaccagna. On the death of Maurizio, the instrument passed into the hands of his son Pietro.

"Mr. Krisch, the husband of the daughter of Pietro (who died in 1870 or 1871) relates with what delight his aged father-in-law, daily, after dinner, amused himself with this violin, which he cherished with an affection almost as for a sentient being. Canova is the authority for considering the instrument a genuine Gaspar di Salò.

"No Zaccagna being left to make use of the violin, the widow caused it to be sold, and it was purchased, as above stated, by

"Trieste, May 30, 1873. "ALEXANDER W. THAYER."

Digitized by Google

RUSSIAN OPERA.

GLINKA AND DARGOMIJSKI.

Glinka, our Weber, is the founder and the chief of the Russian school. His opera, Life for the Czaar, is a monumental work, especially from a national point of view, and his Rousslan and Loudmilla is no less so, musically considered. His first opera proves very clearly how the nationality of different races may be rendered by music, and this question of nationality in musical art is so important that I propose, at some future period, devoting to it a special article. I shall, to-day, content myself with saying that, despite the new tendency of the composers who have succeeded him, the path pointed out by Glinka is the path which will have to be followed to ensure for Russian opera a prosperous and brilliant future. It is true that, in his great work, Glinka yielded to Italian influence; he could not avoid the forms of Italian opera. Well—let the innovators modify forms as they choose, but let them not seek in lyrical music impossible forms, if they would not destroy what has been done by a man in so many respects their superior.

Alas! they will not listen to reason. There has lately arisen a somewhat numerous fanatical party, who are exerting themselves to destroy the whole work of Glinka and Dargomijski. Yet the latter, shortly before his death, experienced the fatal influence of this newly-born party; while seeking to attain truth in art, he strayed from it in his Stone Guest. Impelled by the example of Wagner, he dreamed of an ideal sort of musical drama, though his ideal was different from that dreamt of by the German reformer. Rousalka was the fruit of this dream, and is a real revelation in the history of Russian music. Though the composer was unable to escape the influence of Glinka, and though, in his last act, he has absolutely fallen as low as the Commonplace (which weakens the character of originality in his work), he succeeded in bringing out the dramatic element so strongly, that composers would only have to follow the path traced by him in his first three acts, to reach the Ideal so ardently pursued by them all. But they wanted to go still further, and they have strayed from the right way, and consequently from truth. The Stone Guest is in many respects a remarkable work, full of curious details, and interesting as a study. But never will it be to the taste of the great mass of the public. It is not an opera; it is, with few exceptions, an eternal recitative. The dramatic situations are depicted in lively and true colours in the uncommon orchestration of M. Remski-Korsakow. But, such being the case, what need have we of the stage? The Stone Guest is, more than aught else, a symphonic work, which would be understood far better than it is, were we to content ourselves with simply reading Pouchkin's fine poem to the orchestral accompaniment, which is quite up to the poem.

I shall be told, in reply, that the orchestra cannot express everything, and that the human voice is indispensable for rendering properly the different situations. Why then not profit largely by a resource so precious for a dramatic composer? Why smother the inspiration, the melody? Provided the melody corresponds to the text, and the composer does not derogate from truth, he will succeed in producing a musical drama without falling into sterile exaggerations. The Stone Guest was given last year for the first time, and analyzed by all our critics. Some raised it up on a pedestal, while others denied that it possessed any merit at all. I shall not, therefore, indulge in repeating what was said, especially as it is imposible to enter into details in a general summary. The score, I repeat, is very interesting as a study, and the careful edition of it published by M. Bessel, does great honour to him. M. Bessel is a young music-publisher, who has already rendered signal service by his numerous publications containing the works of our Russian composers. He has set an excellent example, which will, I hope, find imitators. He is now about to publish the Pscovitanka, a new opera by M. Remski-Korsakow.

Seroff pursued the same object as Dargomijski, but he took a very different path. His most remarkable work is Judith, which is distinguished for its dramatic action, and masterly instrumentation. At the time he wrote it, he was swayed more especially by the influence of Wagner, but certain combinations revealed in the choral and instrumental masses bear evidence that, spite of himself, he followed Meyerbeer, to whom as a musical critic, he was adverse. Rogneda followed Judith. In it the composer made large concessions to the masses. Notwithstanding incontestable beauties of detail (particularly in the third act), Seroff has been unable to avoid effects unworthy of himself and of his own profession of faith, published as a preface to the libretto. The public were grateful, and Rogneda achieved a great success.

At length, by dint of searching, our composer found, a short time before his death, a subject worthy of the aim he had set up for himself, namely: to attain to the ideal of musical drama and produce a national work. The idea of Ostrowski's drama: "We must not live as we like, but as God commands," inspired Seroff. He changed—and he was wrong in doing so—the catastrophe, and entitled his work, Fatality. He had not time to complete it, the last act being scored (with great talent) by M. Solowieff, a young composer and pupil of the St. Petersburgh Conservatory. The opera was brought out two years ago, immediately after Seroff's death, and has been very successfully revived this season. The story is a reflex of popular manners, but it is open to the charge of realism, a fact which wounds our æsthetic sentiment. This is an excess into which the composer, also, has fallen. Despite the incontestable beauties with which his work is filled, Seroff failed to attain his end in it.

We are living at a time when research is the order of the day; we are incessantly yearning after progress. But to achieve it, a man of genius, another Glinka, is needed. We must have patience; we must wait. All the essays of innovators have merely enhanced the merit of Life for the Czaar, and especially of Rousslan.

MAURICE RAPPAPORT.

THE OPERA AT SAN FRANCISCO.

(From our Correspondent, V. P.)

These few lines of a critique of an Italian Opera Company which arrived here from Mexico I hasten to communicate to you. It opened with Il Poliuto. The prima donna, Ida Visconti, is about the stature and age of Mdlle. Tietjens, and possesses a clear voice, under control, but lacks sweetness of tone. She is a good actress. In the duetto, "Il suon del arpa" she was twice recalled to the footlights. The tenor, Verati (Poliuto), pleased the audience very much. He has a sweet voice but is not a tenore robusto. The baritone Signor Grossi, made a good impression. The basso, Signor Rego, sang well. The rest of the company executed their parts creditably. The orchestra, although small, was good, under the conductorship of Signor Spadina. I send you by this mail a newspaper, containing an anecdote of Charles Schultz, the conductor of the orchestra at the California Theatre, also the dimensions of a new operahouse building here. Lucrezia Borgia is announced for to-morrow night. I will give you more particulars hereafter. V. P.

San Francisco, Sept. 9, 1873.

P.S.—The affair in your last M. W., from the Musiczeitung, respecting Wieniawski, did not take place in San Francisco, but in Oakland, a village three miles from here. The writer of the said notice is in connection with a very small paper, a "Bail leg paper," called the News Letter.

VIENNA.—Herr Swoboda, the manager of the new Komische Oper, will shortly commence his first season. Among the earliest works to be produced is Le Roi l'a dit, by M. Léo Délibes, brought out so successfully, a short time since, at the Opéra-Comique, Paris.

BRUSSELS.—Tannhäuser is to be revived at the Théâtre de la Monnaie. According to report, Le Roi l'a dit is to be one of the next novelties.—Yielding to the urgent solicitations of his friends, M. Vieuxtemps has withdrawn his resignation as Director of the Concerts Populaires.

MILAN.—According to report, the opera d'obbligo at the Scala is to be Lia, by Signor Schira.—The principal event lately at the Teatro Dal Verme has been the production of Otello, with Pardini, the patriarchal tenor—Pardini, the Monsieur Dejazet of the Italian operatic stage—as the jealous Moor. In private life, Pardini is rather more than seventy, and his face shows a few (premature) wrinkles. Behind the float, he looks a man of thirty, at the most. His voice still retains its freshness in some of its notes; while art conceals the ravages time has made in the others. He was enthusiastically applauded throughout. Signora Casanova de Cepeda was a most graceful and interesting Desdemona, while that indefatigable artist, Signor Buti, appeared to great advantage as Iago. La Juive, with Signora Wanda Miller as the heroine, is in rehearsal.

Digitized by Google

REPORT FOR THE YEAR 1872.

By John Hullah, Esq.,

Inspector of Music, on the Examination in Music of the Students of Training Schools in Great Britain.

My Lords,—I have the honour to lay before your Lordships the results of the examinations in Music of the past year, together with some considerations which have been suggested by them.

The theoretical examinations have been conducted (on paper) in the same manner as in former years. To these, however, have been added under your Lordships' sanction, practical examinations which, without exception, I have conducted in person. Between the end of August and the beginning of December I visited all the training colleges receiving grants from the Committee of Council on Education, and examined individually more than 1,500 students, of either sex, in the practice of singing from notes.

Save on two occasions (both remote) when I examined the training college at York, and Professor Sterndale Bennett, St. Mark's College, Chelsea, no authorised inspection in practical music had ever before been made in a training college. As a test to which these colleges had never yet been subjected, and as a trial, the notice of which had of necessity been short, it seemed but fair that the practical skill of the students should be estimated by a standard somewhat lower than that which under other circumstances might have been, and in future years may be, desirable. This opinion, I rejoiced to find, was held very strongly by your Lordship's Secretary, who fully authorised me to act upon it.

At the close of each examination I was careful to explain this to the students, then of the first, but now of the second year; adding that they must expect to be judged by a standard somewhat higher than that applied to their fellows who were just leaving.

My course of examination was this:—

(1). I heard the students—sometimes those of the first and second years together, sometimes those of each year separately—sing, under the direction of their own musical instructor, some two or three pieces of choral music previously studied.

(2). I then put into the hand of the second year students (only), a piece of music, a copy of which (Appendix III.) follows this report, with which (it having been prepared expressly for the examination) it is certain they were previously unacquainted. Of this they sol-faed and sung (again under the direction of their own teacher) such parts as suited their voices, sometimes separately, sometimes simultaneously.

(3). After this I began the individual examination which was the principal object of my visit. For this I had selected a number of pieces, ranging from the simplest and easiest attainable to others of considerable difficulty. Of one of the former I put into the hands of the student before me the part suited to his voice, playing (myself) on the pianoforte or harmonium the other parts necessary to complete the harmony, but never that which he was to sing. If he sol-faed (on any method) or sung this fairly, I applied a somewhat severer test; never dismissing him till I had fully satisfied myself as to the extent of his capabilities.

(4). After hearing every second year student sing, I heard those who could do so, on whatever musical instrument, play.

(5.) When time allowed it I had the second year students re-assembled, and, by way of revising my judgment of their powers, I wrote on a board various passages, generally involving some common modulation or rhythmical succession. These were sung by volunteers—almost always, it proved, those to whom I had already given the best marks.

The particular results of the application of these tests—of the third especially—are recorded elsewhere. Of the general impression I derived from them I will now speak.

(1). The organisation of most of the training colleges is not favourable to the study and practice of choral music. A college composed exclusively, whether of female or of male students can only furnish each an imperfect choir. The stock of existing music, whether for female voices or for male voices only, is not only limited, but inferior to that for the full and therefore mixed choir. It is impossible for either an exclusively male or exclusively female choir to make more than a partial, and, therefore, unsatisfactory, acquaintance with the music of all others best fitted for their study—the choruses of Handel and other great masters of sacred harmony, and the best glees and part-songs of contemporary composers. The very natural desire to overcome this difficulty in any degree has, in some colleges, induced a practice which it is to be hoped will not be persisted in, that of singing soprano parts (in male colleges) an octave too low, and tenor parts (in female colleges) an octave too high. Both these practices will assuredly prove injurious as well to the voices as to the ears of those who are concerned in them.

The only efficient remedy for these imperfections in colleges of one sex I have suggested elsewhere. Where this cannot be adopted,—and I am not insensible to the difficulties of adopting it,—the practice of full choir music should be limited, in the female colleges, to the soprano and alto parts, and in the male, to tenor and bass. In consequence of this incompleteness of their choirs, it is only in the mixed colleges, Cheltenham, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Homerton, that general effects at all commensurate with the pains brought to bear upon the instruction of those who produce them can be realized. The combined singing of the male and female students in some of these, Cheltenham especially, is really admirable, and must exercise a very refining influence on those who engage in it. Among what I must call the imperfect (or half) choirs, I should place in the first rank, Bishop Stortford, the Borough Road, Edinburgh (Episcopal), the Home and Colonial, Liverpool, Swansea, Westminster, Whitelands, and York. My connection till very lately with St. Mark's and Battersea must not oblige me to omit them from this list. Too much value, however, should not be attached to this distinction. The best of choirs contain many members only harmless because they do nothing.

(2). The piece of music (Appendix III.), a copy of which in the Tonic Sol-fa notation is also subjoined, was attacked by the second year students, under the direction of their own teacher, in every conceivable fashion. It was sung, sol-faed—here on the "fixed," there on the "moveable" principle—to syllables, figures, letters, and inarticulate vocables. The result was generally unsatisfactory. The students in the training colleges have evidently not been sufficiently habituated to dealing, well or ill, with fresh music. Their reading is, for the most part, marked by the hesitation which results from an inability to take in more than one or two notes at a time. As a rule they do not turn over a page till they have actually sung the last note upon it,—an unfailing sign of a slow reader. It is greatly to be desired that more time be given in all the training schools to the reading—not necessarily to the "getting up"—of fresh music.

(3). The results of the individual examinations are exhibited in Appendix IV. They have been obtained from numerical values assigned at the time severally to the "voice," "ear," "style," and "reading" of every student brought before me. At my express invitation the musical instructor in each college was generally with me during these individual examinations; only occasionally withdrawing when his presence seemed to embarrass the student under examination. It seemed desirable, with a view to future examinations, that he should see how the present one was carried on; and, with a view to the preparation of future students, how, and in what, students of this past year were deficient. And here I must record the fact, that from the musical instructors, without exception, I received the most frank and cordial co-operation, and that the close of each day's examination was accompanied by the strongest possible expressions of their sense of the advantages likely to accrue from it. The timidity of many, especially of the female students, at times made this part of the examination exceedingly difficult and protracted. Had I dismissed, after their first attempts, many who, by dint of a good deal of encouragement, did at last fairly well, I must have reported them as being utterly deficient in knowledge and skill. It is to be hoped that, as the idea of individual examination in music becomes more familiar, it will become less appalling.

(4). My instructions in respect to instrumental music were limited to dealing with those who might be able to make amends for a partial or absolute incapacity for vocal performance by some skill in instrumental. These proved to be very few; so few, indeed, as to have been hardly worth providing for. My recent inspection has simply confirmed what, if once only an hypothesis, is now a theory deduced from many years' experience: that the number, even of adults, who, were they to take sufficient pains, could not be made to appreciate time and tune is very small indeed; that of the cases of those who could "never imitate three consecutive sounds," "never be got to tell God save the Queen from Rule Britannia," and the like, there is not one in a thousand that would not break down under ten minutes' skilful cross-examination; and that these supposed cases are less often attributable to natural deficiency, or even want of early culture, than to affectation and love of singularity. That, from causes over which they have had no control—race, parentage, culture unconsciously received in childhood—some are found to have much greater aptitude than others for music, as for other objects, no one would deny; but that every child may be taught to read music is, I believe, as certain as that every child can be taught to read his native tongue. Irrespective, therefore, of any conclusions drawn from previous experience, the examinations just brought to an end justify me in saying that provision for the cases of those who have "no voice or ear" is needless. The majority of such, I believe, only exist because it is taken for granted that they must do so.

If I were to point to any single shortcoming which in the course of these examinations has struck me more frequently and forcibly than any other, it would be, not in what is called "a feeling" for tune, but for time. I attribute this in a great degree to the insufficient attention given to "beating time" with the hand. The indisposition of English students to do this, and their clumsiness in doing it, are the best possible tributes to its usefulness.

Digitized by Google

In regard to instrumental music in the training schools, I have ventured to go beyond the letter of my instructions, and without making—what there was no time to make—any comparative estimate of the students' powers, I have ascertained with my own ears how many in each college had skill enough, on any instrument, to be at all useful in their calling as school teachers. The number so far qualified is very large, much larger than I had expected. The amount of their skill is of course very various, ranging from considerable facility—as well of execution as in reading—to a laboured and incorrect presentation of the most simple tune. This has been exhibited on a somewhat surprising variety of instruments. The majority of students have wisely chosen for their practice the organ, harmonium, or pianoforte; but as well as on these I have heard performances on the violin, violoncello, flute, clarinet, concertina, and cornet-à-piston. Nor is this all. In one instance I was favoured with a solo on the chanter (the bagpipe minus the drones), and in another with one on the trombone! It is, I think, very desirable that this aptitude,* often considerable, for instrumental performance should be encouraged, and if encouraged, directed. The amount of instruction in playing given in the training colleges varies greatly. In some—Bristol, Carnarvon, Liverpool, York, Winchester, Culham, Peterborough—every student, without exception, is taught; in others the subject is left to take care of itself, which, of course, it does very badly. The evident aptitude and desire to learn of many had, I found, for lack of even the smallest aid, brought forth no result; while by some I was told that, before entering their colleges, they had possessed a fair amount of facility, which they had entirely lost, not so much for want of teaching as of time for practice or access to an instrument. In the Borough Road, for example, which numbers 128 students, the only instrument, save the violin of the musical instructor (which he uses with much skill and to excellent purpose), is a single harmonium. If instrumental music is to be cultivated in the training colleges to any good purpose, some, however little, systematic teaching, and some time for practice, must be allowed to those students who desire it. The latter will involve the supply of a larger number of instruments than any college is, I think, as yet furnished with. This need no longer involve anything like the cost it would once have done. Harmoniums quite fit for elementary practice can now be purchased for a few pounds each, and an eminent musical firm, that of Messrs. Chappell, has, at my suggestion made many years since, succeeded in perfecting a form of pianoforte which is to be had for a few pounds more. I commended the latter instead of the former instrument for practice, wherever there is any choice in the matter.

(To be continued.)

* At St. Mark's 16 students can accompany the chapel (choral) service.

SALZBURG.—A concert was given at the Mozarteum, on the 10th Sept., for the benefit of the pension-fund of the institution. The overture to Le Nozze was finely performed by the band. Herr Sadler, from St. Petersburgh, played Weber's "Concertstück," and Madame Frederike Grün, from Berlin, sang an air from the above opera, "Es blinkt der Thau," by Rubinstein, "Das Mädchen an den Mond," by Dorn, and "Ich grolle nicht," by Schumann. Both artists, as well as Herr Wihan, violoncellist from Prague, were rapturously applauded. The concert wound up with Beethoven's D major Symphony.

PESTH.—The committee of management for carrying out the festival in celebration of the Abbate Franz Liszt's fiftieth artistic anniversary is composed of Archbishop Haynald (President), Count Albert Apponyi; Count Guido Karacsonyi, member of the Hungarian Parliament; Count Emerich Szechenyi; Baron Anton Augusz; Emerie Huszar, member of the Hungarian Parliament; Herr Hans Richter, Capellmeister at the National Theatre; Edmund Mihalovich; and Rosavölgyi & Co. The following will probably be the programme: On the evening before the day of the Festival—which is fixed for the ninth November—a monster torch-light procession, with several military bands, the whole under the direction of the members of the Hungarian Musical and Literary Club, will take place in honour of the "Jubilant," i.e., the hero of the Jubilee, in other words, the Abbate Franz Liszt. The next day, as announced in last week's Musical World, the Abbate's greatest "polyphonetic" work, Christus, will be performed, measures having been taken to render the performance as perfect as possible. Medals will be struck in honour of the event. Of these, one will be in gold, for the Composer, and the others—for those assisting in the proceedings—in silver and in bronze. In the evening there is to be a grand "festival-eating," or dinner. The Committee have issued special invitations to the Countess Muchanoff, Madame Mademoiselle Marie Lipsius (of Florence), Madame Joachim, Madame Schumann, Herren Börsendorfer (of Vienna), Richard Wagner, Bülow, Brahms, Herbeck, Hellmesberger, Krejci (of Prague), Bach (director of the Mozarteum, Salzburg), Mikuli (of Lemberg), Lassen (of Weimar), Leon (also of Weimar); Bronsart (of Dresden), and Wilt (of Regensburg).

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

October 1, 1873.

As I have not written for some time, and on the last occasion of my doing so I finished my letter with a notice of the shooting season having begun, entering into details of ideal individuals and quadrupeds, I think you will excuse me if I commence my present epistle by stating the fact that we are all "game" here, both as regards food and music (may I say: as regards body and soul?). The poulterers, and others, now sell tempting birds and game. Hares, of course, are in abundance, and I saw, last week, in the market, the skin of an ancient Tom cat alongside the carcase of a—hare (?). Carcases of Tom cats naturally suggest Revenous à nos moutons, or, rather, Revenous à nos boiseaux! for what should we do without cat-gut, the foundation of the principal instruments of an orchestra? This pathetic, and, at the same time, "feline," sentiment has "led me up" to the thought that I must now tell you all I can about music at Boulogne-sur-Mer.

Since last I wrote, I have only to report the repetition of many operas—such as Mignon, La Favorita, Charles VI., La Muette, and last, not least, for the 11th time out of 26 representations, and ALWAYS to crammed houses—admission to many being refused at the doors, and extra nights being "put on" to serve for such exigencies—La Fille de Madame Angot. I heard it again last night, but was not at all pleased with the way it was given. To begin, the dialogue was cut, the orchestra was thinner than I have yet seen it, the chorus was ditto, and not so good as it was. M. Clement has had a great success with this opéra-comique, and, as the public has made that success for him, I think he ought to keep La Fille up to the mark. Le Domino Noir, Martha, and Le Cheval de Bronze have been our new "features," none, however, attracting large houses, or "getting over" La Fille.

Boulogne is getting rather more empty than it was a month ago. I have noticed not only that the musicians have diminished in numbers in the orchestra at the theatre and casino; but even the number of horses that plunged so boldly into the briny ocean with the bathing machines have either struck or been knocked off. Whether they have been knocked down to the hammer, or literally so, in order to provide soup and meat for the immense quantity of visitors who have made Boulogne there summer holiday place, is an open question. Who can tell? S. C.

Lines for Music.*

It was here that we lingered, Carina,
One sweet summer night by the sea,
When the world seemed an Eden of gladness,
And only for you and for me.

It was here that your blue eyes, so tender,
Gave back all I whispered of love,
As we gazed at twin stars that together
Were smiling in heaven above.

But your little hand trembled, Carina,
For we wished what was never to be;
As one star fell, and only the other
Kept its watch over you and me.

You are far from my side now, Carina,
And I linger alone by the sea,
For my lone dream is o'er, and a shadow
Has come now between you and me.

And I try to forget you, but ever
There smiles, thro' the midst of my tears,
Your old look of love, like a sunbeam,
Gleaming out of the byegone years,

And I think of the two stars, Carina,
And the wish that was never to be,
Till a voice at my heart whispers softly
Of a heaven yet for you and me.

LOUISA GRAY.

* Copyright.

Digitized by Google

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

FIRST CONCERT—THIS DAY—OCTOBER 4th, 1873.

PROGRAMME.

OVERTURE, "Nurmahal" .. .. .. .. .. .. Spontini.
RECIT. and ARIA, "Lascia ch'io pianga" (Rinaldo)—Mdlle. LEONTIEFF .. .. .. .. .. .. Handel.
PIANOFORTE CONCERTO in F minor (first time)—Herr PAUER J. S. Bach.
ARIA, "Una aura amorosa"—Mr. VERNON RIGBY .. .. .. Mozart.
SYMPHONY, "The Scotch" .. .. .. .. .. .. Mendelssohn.
SONGS, { a. "Tre giorni son che Nina" / b. Russian song, "She is Mine" } Mdlle. LEONTIEFF { Pergolesi. / —
PIANOFORTE SOLOS—
a. Variations on Osmin's Song in the "Seraglio" of Mozart .. .. .. .. .. .. } Herr PAUER { Pauer.
b. Finale from First Sonata for Pianoforte .. } { Weber.
RECIT. and AIR, "The gray dawn steals" (The Lord of Burleigh) —Mr. VERNON RIGBY .. .. .. .. .. .. Schira.
FESTIVAL OVERTURE, composed for the "Golden Wedding" of the King and Queen of Saxony (first time in England) .. Dr. Julius Rietz.
Conductor .. .. .. .. .. MR. MANNS.

BIRTH.

On the 29th ult., at Clyde House, Lancaster Road, Notting Hill, the wife of SIGNOR LI CALSI, of a son.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Owing to press of matter, several interesting articles, including that on the re-opening of the Royal Alexandra Theatre and Operahouse, are unavoidably postponed until next week.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 4, 1873.

"HALF-A-GUINEA," said the Young Lady behind the counter.

"I beg pardon," observed the Gentleman to whom she addressed herself.

"Half-a-guinea," repeated the Young Lady. Then, as the Gentleman looked as if he did not understand her, and thinking, perhaps, he was not acquainted with a mode of reckoning based upon an obsolete coin for its unit, she added: "Ten-and-sixpence."

"What! ten-and-sixpence for a half bottle of champagne!" exclaimed the Gentleman, stopping as though paralyzed by astonishment, in the act of opening his porte-monnaie.

"Ten-and-sixpence!" reiterated the Young Lady, with slow, calm, and unusually clear articulation. "Champagne has gone up since the war in France."

If we desired to stray in the least from the strict text of our present subject, if we wished to indulge in a little accessory fioriture, here would be a fine opportunity. We might inquire what the late war had to do with champagne, since, as a rule, the liquor purchased as such, except from old-established firms of proved reputation, has no more seen the French province whence it usurps its name, than the great mass of Epping sausages come from the pleasant town of Epping, or the overwhelming majority of Turkey carpets are the products of Mussulman looms. We might remark that English turnips, gooseberries, and currants, combined with certain chemical liquid triumphs achieved by modern science, have a deal more to do with the general run of the fluid Claimant to the title of Champagne than any grapes ever grown in France—or elsewhere. But we have no wish to indulge in digressions. We want to keep as much as possible to the main facts of the case.

We beg, therefore, at once to inform the reader that the conversation quoted above took place in the saloon of the —— Theatre. Never mind exactly which. With a proper respect for the law of libel before our eyes, we prefer being locally vague, and merely stating that the conversation aforesaid occurred in the saloon of one of our leading Metropolitan theatres, without naming the precise theatre. A gentleman, holding a high position in the world of art, happened to meet another, also belonging to the same sphere, in the box-lobby, between the acts. "How are you, old boy," &c., &c. The upshot was, the first friend offered the second friend a glass of champagne, and was naturally staggered when he became aware how much he had to pay, namely, half-a-guinea, or ten shillings and sixpence. What was the consequence? Though one of the most liberal, open-handed of men living, he considered the sum demanded a downright imposition. On paying the money, he added another to the long list of articles, including mangling-machines, dogs' biscuits, black lead, reading lamps, omnibuses, and reversible great-coats, which, as we learn from the daily advertisements, their inventors or proprietors have duly registered; he, too, registered something; he performed that process on a vow never thenceforth to purchase champagne, or aught else, in the saloon of the Metropolitan Theatre in question, or of any other, as long as the existing state of things continues. As he always means what he says, he will keep his word, and, if there is not a speedy change introduced, the public generally will follow his example, so that grasping speculators will once more mourn over a repetition of the folly embodied in the fable of the Goose with the Golden Eggs.

In days long gone by, never, alas, to return—

O mihi præteritos referat si Jupiter annos!

but that is neither here nor there—when in particularly high favour with some young lady, ætat. 7 or 8, we have been invited to tea with herself, a few synchronous friends of both sexes, and her Doll. Even at that period, though feeling honoured by the invitation, and pretending to be thoroughly delighted with the repast, we experienced some slight degree of irritation at the Lilliputian dimensions of the tea-pot, cups and saucers, and plates, so out of keeping with the dimensions of our appetite, and acting so prejudicially on the size of the refreshments composing the banquet. Being a guest, however, and having nothing to pay, we did not possess the right of complaint. But such is not the case at present, and at the counter in the refreshment room of a London theatre. There we are loosened from the fetters with which Hospitality held our will captive, and from the gag which, in the absence of more appetising morsels, she gently inserted into our mouth. We are at liberty to protest, and we do protest accordingly. We object most decidedly to a petit verre unable to sustain a competitive examination with an ordinary thimble as regards capacity; to a sandwich suggesting nothing more substantial than a thickish wafer; and to every other article exposed for sale on the glass-bedecked, marble-topped counters of the establishments to which we refer. So much for size. As to prices, the proprietors of these refreshment-rooms, or saloons, appear to be influenced by the principle obtaining at dog shows. All dogs entered at these exhibitions are nominally for sale, and must have a selling price affixed to their names in the catalogue. For this price they must go if it is offered. To obviate the little difficulty, those persons who exhibit their canine pets for the honour of the thing, but would be horrified at the idea of parting with them, affix fancy prices to them. Thus we may see a fat, pursey, wheezing King Charles, utterly deficient in breed, and worthless to any one save the owner, ticketed at a thousand pounds, and a mongrel terrier marked up fifteen-hundred guineas. Of course, purchasers are unknown, and the object of the numerical fiction is attained.

Digitized by Google

If the aim of those who rent the saloons is, also, to drive away customers, they have done perfectly well in adopting the system just described. Certain millionaires, certain foolish young men who may wish to talk nonsense to the dame du comptoir, and likewise those individuals who have taken ladies with them to the theatre, may still be found paying at the rate of a few hundreds per cent. beyond the fair value of what they consume. But by far the greater number of the audience, desirous of recruiting their waning strength, rush off to the Bagpipe and Bellows, the Gold-beaters' Arms, the Porcupine and Pincushion, the Middleshire Hotel and Tavern, or some other place in the neighbourhood, where wholesome refreshment is to be obtained at a moderate charge. Were the cost the same in the refreshment-room of the Theatre, the chances are that the stream of custom would not be diverted to the popular establishments outside just named.

If the lessees of theatrical refreshment-rooms would quietly think over this, and, if at all undecided, just reflect what a difference there is between the income of the Post-Office at the present moment and the income derived from it when eightpence was the price for conveying a letter to, let us say, Ramsgate or Margate, they could scarcely hesitate what course to pursue. We merely throw out a hint. Franklin has told us that men may pay too much for their whistle; the Theatre-going Public are beginning to discover that they may pay too much for even wetting it. L.

—o—

GUNG'L.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Sir,—Who knows not Gung'l knows nor Strauss père, nor Strauss fils, nor Lanner, nor Labitzky, nor Jullien; for, Gung'l is their worthiest compeer; and, I therefore am glad you have said of him what you have said (or have said).—I am, Sir, yours in obedience,

Stephen Buddlebridge.

Fish and Volume, Axminster, September 29th.

Mendelssohn's Respect for Spohr.—Mrs. Moscheles had alluded in one of her letters to a newspaper article, in which some busybody had indulged in ill-natured comparisons betwen Mendelssohn and Spohr. To this Mendelssohn replies: "The only thing that vexes me in your charming letter is that you have taken any interest in the strange comparison and the 'cock-fights' which have been started in England between Spohr and me. These things are unaccountable, and I heartily deplore them; in truth, not the slightest idea of such a competition has ever entered my mind. You will smile or be angry with me for answering so seriously such a ridiculous matter, but something serious lies at the bottom of it all, and this competition, suggested Heaven knows by whom, does good to neither of us, but injures both—let alone the fact that I never can or should like to be pitted as an opponent to a master of Spohr's standing. Even from boyhood I have had far too deep a respect for his character and person (this has not bated a jot with my riper judgment) to choose to enter the lists with him now."—The Life of Moscheles.

Pips from "Punch."

Pip 1st.—The Adelphi Theatre to let, for a term of years! Shades of Maiden Lane, is it possible! Shades of Reeve, O. Smith, Wright, and Paul Bedford, can such things be! Yes, and Mr. Benjamin Webster is going a-starring in the provinces. He quits town, bids adieu to the Adelphi, but seeks the country, so that he may be once more happy among The Willow Copse, The Hop-Pickers, and The Green Bushes. Well, "we used to was, didn't we, Jack?" "I believe you, my b-o-o-oy!" Exeunt Omnes.

TO MUSICAL CORRESPONDENTS.

Pip 2nd.—No; all wrong. The Cors de Chasse, at M. Rivière's concerts, are not performed on by Chiropodists, nor does it mean that the Cors in question have arisen from going out to the Chasse in tight boots.

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

Robert Linley, the violoncellist, died at 83. John Braham lived far beyond the usual age of singers, namely: to his 82nd year. He died February 17th, 1856; he first sang in public when he was ten years old. Charles Macklin, the oldest English actor and playwright, died in 1797, at the age of 107. For his last twenty years, he never took off his clothes, except to change them, or to be rubbed over with warm brandy or gin. He ate, drank, and slept without regard to set times, but according to his inclination.

Some one asked Rossini, towards the end of the latter's life, why he did not resume the pen which had written Guillaume Tell. Rossini replied: "I often thought of doing so, and a good libretto would, perhaps, have furnished the necessary impetus; but I never had one. I was offered two or three 'Joans of Arc.' One author represented her as beloved; another as herself in love. I understood neither the one nor the other. What has love to do with the legend of Joan of Arc?"—"Why, you see," was the reply, "when there is no love the author must invent some."—"I beg your pardon," answered the composer of Il Barbiere with a sarcastic smile. "There is something better than that to be done: when a story has not the charm of love in it, it ought to be laid on one side, and not thought of again—and that is just what I did."

We read in the Arcadian, concerning Mr. Maretzek's new operatic venture:—

"Mr. Maretzek will open with Poliuto—Signor Tamberlik in the title rôle, and Madame Lucca as Paolina, in which parts both these artists will have ample opportunity for the display of that impassioned acting and singing in which they excel. Mr. Maretzek's season does not commence till a week later than that of Mr. Strakosch, and, naturally, his preparations are hardly so far advanced. The chorus, however, is at work, and the orchestra engaged, with Mr. Charles Goffrié, a thorough musician and excellent player, as the chef d'attaque. A handsomer resting-place for opera than the Grand Opera House could not be found, and, as far as could be judged from the concerts last year, it is quite as satisfactory with regard to sound. The extent of the stage and the great amount of scenery at the manager's control give scope for splendid setting of all the operas that can be produced in the short space of three weeks. As the first New York season will be so limited, opera will be given five nights a week, with a matinée each Saturday. Mdlle. di Murska will probably arrive in this city before this paper is in the hands of our readers, as she embarked in the Weser on the 6th inst."

A correspondent of the Rock asks the question, "What's amiss at St. Pauls?" and proceeds to answer it by statements which are curious if true. Among other things he says:—

"Recently, also under the advice of counsel learned in the law, the Dean and Chapter suspended for three months one of the vicars-choral for alleged neglect of duty, insisting, as one of the terms upon which he might resume his stall, that he was to acknowledge their power to mulct him of his salary to any extent they might choose, and, also, that he should admit his liability to be punished for non-attendance at some extra services. But he, being advised by a clever ecclesiastical lawyer, withstood them so successfully that he has resumed his duty long before the conclusion of the three months' suspension, doubtless much to their annoyance, for it is believed he defeated them, not for the first time, on every point urged against him. It may be argued that discipline must be maintained, and that the senior vicars ought to show an example to the juniors. But the form of discipline insisted upon by them is a despotism of the worst form. Again, they say that to keep themselves right in the eyes of the public, the services of the cathedral ought to be as perfect as possible, and in order to prove their anxiety in the matter they have appointed their organist—scarcely more than fifteen months in their service—who cannot sing, to a vicar's place intended for a singer, and have ignored the claims of those who accepted inferior places in the hope and actual promise of promotion. This is despotism tempered with injustice. A Sunday or two ago one of the assistant-vicars failed to attend the service in consequence of the death of a near relative. He was told such a matter would not be accepted as an excuse, that he must provide for his turn 'even if he fell down in a fit at the door.' This is despotism tempered by cruelty. There is not much more to be said, as these facts speak for themselves. One thing more may be mentioned that may interest your readers, as small things tell of greater, and 'little chinks let in much light.' The advisability of 'enforced confession' is not only preached from the pulpit, but has actually been attempted to be put into practice; for the newly-appointed master of the boys has invited some of the elder ones to present themselves to him for the purpose of 'confessing.'"

These be queer tales, which the Cathedral authorities cannot long permit to go uncontradicted, if contradiction be possible.

Digitized by Google

THE Germans have been subscribing money for a statue to Marschner, and all the while, if we may trust a report in the Gazette de Spener, Marschner's daughter has starved. The poor women tried hard to support her husband (a disabled officer) and a numerous family by means of a school. She failed; and, beaten at all points in the struggle for life, she hanged herself. We will not say harsh things of German charity in presence of this very hard fact, but surely the money intended for Marschner's monument will go to the support of Marschner's grandchildren. Otherwise we shall believe that somebody is anxious to make a speech at the "unveiling."

OUR New York contemporary, the Arcadian, kept its second birthday a little while ago, and was as self-congratulatory as though it never expected to live so long. Having survived two years, it means now to attain old age, and certainly may do so if perfect admiration of one's self and one's doings favour existence. Here is the tail-end of the birthday article:—

"Everybody who takes the Arcadian keeps a file. Not to do so would be like buying attar of roses and having no handkerchief to perfume with it. We advise every subscriber to take down that file, to turn over the leaves, to let the thousands of happy thoughts and images that flutter there shower across his memory fragrantly, and then to ask himself: 'Has not the Arcadian kept its early promise? Has it not won the right to live?'"

How's that for high?

"ONE morning," says the author of the following anecdote, "I paid a visit to my friend Strauss of Vienna, the King of the Waltz. He was very busy arranging a concert which was to take place the same evening. Suddenly there was a slight tap at the door, and a man entered. He stooped somewhat, was meanly dressed, and led by the hand a little girl, pale and emaciated, about seven or eight years old.—"Have I the honour of speaking to Herr Strauss?" he asked in bad French. "That is he," I said, pointing to my friend. "I want to ask you a favour," the man said timidly to Strauss. "Would you kindly allow my little girl to play this evening at your concert?"—"Impossible," replied Strauss, to whom I interpreted what the old man said; "I have too many pieces already." "Humph! humph!" murmured the old man sadly. "You do not happen to have any instrument here, do you?—an old violin?"—"Yes, I have mine," replied Strauss, reluctantly handing the instrument to the child. The latter seized it quickly, placed it against her shoulder, and, raising her black eyes, began to play. Strauss and I listened, growing more astonished every minute. The old man smiled. When the child had finished we both applauded rapturously. "You shall play this evening," cried Strauss with enthusiasm, "and every evening that I give a concert in this sublunary world. What is your name, my dear?"—"Theresa Milanollo," she replied, in a low voice.

WE observe that the Eisteddfod, recently held at Menai Bridge, had its "lively time." A local paper, referring to the matter as an "unfortunate incident," said:—

"The subject of the chair prize was an owdl (ode) on 'Silence,' and the winner was announced by the adjudicator, Ioan Arfon, to be Dr. Williams, Llansantffraid. Preparations were in progress for chairing the bard "according to the ancient rites of the bards of the isle of Great Britain," when the decision was challenged on the ground that Dr. Williams's contribution had been purchased from a William Cowley. This both Dr. Williams and Cowley denied, but for nearly an hour the dispute waxed 'fast and furious,' nearly every bard on the platform taking part in the wordy warfare. At length it was decided to refer the matter to a small committee. Mr. Lloyd, who was chairman of the committee appointed to investigate the charge with respect to the chair prize, announced their decision, namely, that they considered that Dr. Williams had established his authorship of the ode. At the same time the committee censured Mr. Tudno Jones, one of the adjudicators, for not communicating certain facts which had come to his knowledge; and for accepting the post of adjudicator after having previously seen the composition. They also thought that great blame attached to Cowley for not disabusing the minds of the adjudicators."

Really, if the Welsh cannot manage their peculiar institution without so much quarrelling, Colonel Henderson will have to send among them a detachment of his A's—veterans in the art of pacifying a mob.

FLORENCE.—Signor Danesi, ballet-master at the Teatro del Principe Umberto, is busily engaged upon a new ballet. The subject is taken from Milton's Paradise Lost.

PROVINCIAL.

BRADFORD (Yorkshire).—In the Bradford Observer, of September 29, we read that:—

"Notwithstanding the excellent bill of fare provided by the St. George's Hall Company and the favourable state of the weather, the hall was only thinly attended on Saturday. The entertainment was of a vocal and instrumental character, the following forming the company: Madame Thaddeus Wells and Mr. Christian, vocalists; Mr. Nicholson, solo flute; Mr. Carrodus, solo violin; and Mr. John Eckersley, organist and pianist. The programme was a long and varied one. Mdme. Thaddeus Wells' 'greatest hit' was 'Lo! hear the gentle lark,' with flute obbligato by Mr. Nicholson, which received an encore, in response to which the last verse was repeated. Mr. Carrodus was twice recalled. Mr. Christian creditably occupied no small part in the programme. Mr. Eckersley accompanied with his usual precision, and performed several pieces on the organ."

OUR CONTEMPORARIES.

OUSELEY'S "HAGAR."

The following noteworthy observations on Sir F. A. G. Ouseley's new oratorio appeared in the Malvern News. It will be seen that our otherwise acute contemporary puts quite an innocent faith in the degree of Mus. Doc.:—

"And now as to the work 'Haugar,' or 'Hagar,' as some of the great guns pronounce the word! It had as good a band as England could produce; an equally good chorus; soloists of the very first order; a conductor second to few in this country; but—and there is the great secret—the composer lacked that very necessary, owned by all the great masters—melody! We do not wish to detract from the work; the composer is a master among musicians; but he lacks the 'one thing needful' to make his work lasting—melody. It matters not how correctly an oratorio may be scored; nor how cleverly such a work may be harmonized—these are the bones, the sinew, the muscle, the flesh, the skin; without melody it lacks life, and is, therefore, as a dead man. We have a great respect for the genius of Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, that he is a musician of a first class order, or he would not possess the 'Mus. Doc.' to his name, but if nature has not gifted him with the power of melody he cannot expect any work he may write to become immortal. Other adjuncts may be given to protract a work in the estimation of the public, but lacking melody, or melodial phrasing, such a work lacks life, and therefore duration—existence. We have known the composer for many years; sung some of his anthems; helped others to do the same; and on Thursday morning went to the cathedral in this old-fashioned city with the expectation of hearing Ouseley in A, or any other key or scale in the entire Plagal circle. Nor were we disappointed. Strictly correct in the harmony, even to a C sharp and a C natural, which occurs during the oratorio, as well as others of a similar class, we expected to find the scholar, the man of taste, the man of refined judgment in all he wrote. We found it, and even more, for we found the Christian and the pious man. There can be no doubt not only Sir F. A. G. Ouseley, but his coadjutor, did their best to produce a work that should last. Possibly, in the precincts of a cathedral such will be its fate, but till some congenial spirit comes forth and writes a few melodies, we shall hear no more of Hagar. Yet the work contains some scholarly points—points that please musicians; but oratorios are written for the public, who simply know what is pleasant to the ear, not musically correct. It is pleasant to listen to a speaker whose words flow fluently, but the man who is always looking for his rules of grammar becomes a bore. We do not say the composer is a bore—far from it, but not being gifted by nature with the power of melody, his works cannot become popular. If he has not written for popularity, then we can excuse him for writing as he has; and can, therefore, only suppose he has written for the few."

MENDELSSOHN AND MOSCHELES.—They often play to one another Beethoven's sonatas, which not unfrequently diverge into joint improvisations of the maddest kind, and musical caricatures. On one occasion the nursery song, "Polly put the kettle on," is chosen for a subject on purpose to please the two little girls, with whom Felix liked to laugh and play; in a jovial mood he would take them to the Zoological Gardens, and amuse them with all kinds of jokes. Amongst the many kind friends who visited at Chester Place, the children had the discrimination to fix on Mendelssohn as prime favourite. He and Moscheles were mutually attracted to one another as much by kindred tastes and sympathies as by music. Moscheles admired his friend's genius, and watched, without a particle of envy, the steadily increasing fame of the young composer, his former pupil; Mendelssohn, on the other hand, was all devotion, all gratitude for the rich treasure of experience which the older master had stored up in his pianoforte works. They loved and esteemed each other, these feelings were reciprocated mutually in the two families, and the strength of this friendship was proved when the days of sorrow came.—The Life of Moscheles.

Digitized by Google

A PAPER ON THE HARMONIUM.

(Continued from page 475.)

OF THE MODES OF PRODUCING CERTAIN LEGITIMATE EFFECTS UPON THE HARMONIUM, WHEREBY THE STUDY OF THE INSTRUMENT IS RENDERED ADDITIONALLY INTERESTING TO THE STUDENT.

In playing the harmonium the taste and feeling of the player are not conveyed directly from the fingers to the keys, as is the case with the pianoforte; but indirectly through the means of certain mechanical contrivances, also placed in action by the player; and it is in the management of these contrivances that the performer reveals whether he has obtained a mastery over his instrument or otherwise. The fundamental contrivance of all is, of course, the bellows. By their means the air-chest is filled with air, which, escaping through the vibrators or reeds, causes them to utter the various sounds according to their size. Now the management of the bellows is an all-important point, and one that must be carefully mastered before attempting to play any music but that which consists of the simplest movements. The essential point is to keep the air-chest full of wind, by a regular alternative motion of the footboards (harmoniums with only one footboard are practically useless for anything but the simplest playing upon), wherein no break should be allowed; but always while one footboard is going down the other should be rising up. When all the valves are open the movement may be accelerated; but on no account must its regularity be broken. This is the use of the simple bellows, in which, when the student has perfected himself, he will have advanced the first step towards mastering the instrument.

But the regular motion of the bellows alone, however perfectly attained, will be found disappointing in effect, on account of the difficulty of increasing or diminishing the wind in the air-chest with the sufficient suddenness necessary for obtaining delicate shades or great contrasts of sound. Yet it is certainly advisable that the pupil should try to gain, by practice, the attainment of such an amount of control over the bellows themselves, as to produce as much expression in the sound as is possible without putting into action the ingenious appliance known as the expression stop.

On the pianoforte, expression is obtained by the action of the player's fingers upon the keys; on the harmonium, it is obtained by the action of the player's feet upon the bellows. The bellows act upon the harmonium with the same effect as the bow acts upon the violin; a use of more or less power causing a crescendo or a diminuendo. However, there is this difference:—in the pianoforte, the power of expression goes direct from the player's fingers to the keys; whereas, in the harmonium, the effect is not the direct result of the cause, as there intervenes the before-mentioned ingenious appliance, the expression stop, over which to obtain a proper amount of control is the most important point of all.

Without its being necessary to describe the construction of this appliance, it will be sufficient to explain its effect when in action, which is to render the bellows susceptible of the least shade of change in the power brought to bear upon them by the action of the feet, thus rendering it possible to obtain the most delicate degrees of power in the sound. The great drawback which the use of the expression stop presents to the student is, that its effect upon the bellows is such as to materially increase the difficulty of maintaining that regular alternative motion which must be maintained, as a series of spasmodic jerks and sudden stoppages will immediately take place.

All sforzato effects, phrasing, and accent, must be produced by the action of the foot upon the bellows, after the same principle as the bow is made to act upon the strings of the violin. There are three pieces of music which may be mentioned as especially suited to illustrate the manner in which these effects can be produced upon the harmonium—viz., a Musette and a Pifferari by Ch. Gounod, and the overture to La Dame Blanche. In the Musette, the time in the accompaniment is sustained for two beats in the bar, and marked on the third, and it is much more effective to accent the third beat by a sforzato pressure of the foot upon the bellows than to raise the hand and re-strike the chord. Again, in the Pifferari, the powerful accent required, the crescendo and diminuendo, with the distant effect at the conclusion, must all be managed by means of the bellows and the expression stop; while no better exercise for phrasing can be obtained than the famous Dame Blanche overture, care being taken to emphasize each phrase on the bellows. Again, all such dramatic effects as echoes, &c., must be obtained by a careful management of the bellows, and we think no better study of these effects can be procured than that contained in M. Louis Engel's morceau, "The Hunter's Prayer."

It is, also, most necessary that the student be able equally to control the expression stop while using the grand jeu, or full power, when only a few stops are open, or it will be impossible to obtain the sudden crashes necessarily so frequent in dramatic music. The best illustration of this is "Let there be light," from Haydn's Creation; also the same composer's Surprise Symphony, and Rossini's overture to Semiramide. It has been rendered a much easier matter to obtain these effects on the harmonium since the introduction of the knee method of opening the grand jeu.

Choruses from operas—such as the "Huntsman's," in Der Freischütz; the "Gipsy" and "Anvil" choruses, in Il Trovatore; the sotto voce in the bedroom scene of La Sonnambula—should always be played on the grand jeu, the requisite degrees of piano and forte being regulated by the careful management of the expression stop. The reason for this is that you never lose the depth of tone that denotes a full chorus. The plan of playing the soft parts on a few stops and opening full power for the loud portions renders the whole effect unequal as to the general tone. Imagine the tenors and basses ceasing to sing in the soft parts of a full chorus at the opera, and joining in with the sopranos and contraltos only at the forte passages.

And now to say a few words upon the stops proper: by which I mean those stops that represent the various orchestral instruments introduced into the harmonium.

Intending purchasers of harmoniums should bear in mind that many of the stops introduced into the instrument are virtually "dummies." Suppose a harmonium to be advertised as containing thirteen stops, at least four of these may be counted as dummies: that is to say they do not represent any orchestral instrument, and therefore, though very necessary and convenient, cannot be looked upon as stops proper. These four will consist of two forte stops, and a tremolo and the grand jeu. Now the grand jeu is very convenient; but as the same effect may be produced by pulling out all the stops in the instrument, it can hardly be looked upon as a stop proper, but only as an easy means of obtaining an end. The same may be said of the tremolo, which merely causes a tremulous effect in the sound produced by the flute reeds. The soprano (a less decided tremolo), causes the same effect in a more delicate degree. The simplest explanation of a dummy stop is one that does not indicate the existence of a row of vibrators.

I consider the forte stops so important, that I should not class them under the head of dummies, if it was not for the fact that, by some means or other, these stops, in nine harmoniums out of every ten, simply make no difference at all in the power of the sound when they are opened. Now it is a matter of very great importance that the forte stops should really act as such, as it is requisite that one be able to render the treble or bass, as the case may be, especially prominent without altering the nature of the tone. This is particularly desirable when a melody (which of course must predominate over its accompaniment) chances to go beyond the middle F; in which case, the stops only reaching in compass one half of the instrument, the tone of the melody will immediately change when taken below the range of the stop on which it is being played. Of course, the way to avoid this is to always use the stops in the bass that correspond to those in the treble; but this is not always practicable. For instance, the bourdon is the corresponding stop to the clarionet—but its tone is so powerful that it invariably drowns the clarionet entirely. The voix celeste and the clarionet are the most tiresome treble stops to equalise in the bass; but there are two ways of obviating the difficulty. Firstly, by using the forte stop. Secondly, by playing the melody (if intended to represent a tenor or bass voice) in the bass by crossing the hands. This mode of arrangement is often resorted to by M. Louis Engel.

From the foregoing the reader will understand the importance of having a pair of genuine forte stops in the harmonium.

Digitized by Google

And now as to the modes of producing various effects by means of different arrangements of the stops. For full choruses or orchestral imitations use the grand jeu, supplemented by open forte in the upper half, except when there is a sustained accompaniment, in which case, the full power must not be used in the lower half of the instrument. For arias—soprano and treble: flute, hautbois, forte, accompanied by cor anglais and bassoon. For arias—contralto: flute, fife, and forte, accompanied by cor anglais and forte. For tenor arias: voix celeste and flute, accompanied by cor anglais and forte. Basso: clarionet, flute and forte, accompanied by bourdon; or, if the melody does not come below the range of the clarionet stop, by cor anglais and forte. This applies to the use of the voix celeste as well. Trios and duets are formed by the requisite combination of the above—care being taken always to preserve a uniform quality of tone between the treble and bass, though the former should predominate in power. The tremolo should only be used in pathetic or death scenes as—the dying song in La Traviata, etc.—the more delicate tremolo, designated the soprano stop, is preferable to the coarser of the two—the one marked plainly—tremolo. Elaborate harmoniums have in addition fancy stops, such as the musette, the dulciana, etc., the use of which must be left to the discretion of the player. For sudden bursts of power, open the grand jeu by the knee method. The voix celeste is a most desirable stop to use in playing a waltz, as it gives the necessary prominence to the melody; but it must not be used if the melody be taken out of its range.

Lastly, a few words about the percussion action. We do not think this appliance is appreciated at its proper worth; indeed, it is hardly possible that it can be while people continue to play such drowsy dirges as one usually hears.

There are three effects which, to obtain properly, the use of the percussion action is indispensable. Firstly—for quick staccato passages, especially when they are syncopated. Secondly.—for the arpeggio effect. Engel's fantasia on Don Pasquale illustrates this effect admirably. Thirdly—for producing the orchestral effect of a pizzicato (Ital. pizzicare, to pinch) accompaniment, that is when the strings of the violin are pinched with the fingers. This very pretty effect can be closely imitated on the harmonium by the use of the percussion action, and will be found exceedingly useful in accompanying melodies.

We have penned this paper with the sole object of endeavouring to arouse the interest of beginners by showing them how numerous are the effects which may be produced on the harmonium by means of persevering application in conquering its difficulties and obtaining acquaintance with its capabilities. If our words shall have the effect of stimulating to renewed efforts some despairing student, we shall feel amply rewarded for the trouble the composition of this essay has given us.

F. A. Laidlaw.

---

Bologna.—The Teatro Brunetti, thoroughly repaired and re-decorated, has just opened with Il Trovatore.

Der Freischütz was to be performed in Rome, on Wednesday last, for the first time. Priestly rulers kept Zamiel away as long as possible, on the principle that "Two of a trade," &c.

The works set down for performance at the Zurich Musical Festival are—Brahm's Triumphlied, the third part of Schumann's Faust, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, and Handel's Joshua. A very good programme, impartially representing both old and new schools.

Beethoven's Last Moments.—He is in an almost constant state of insensibility, or rather stupor—his head hanging down on his chest, and his glazed eyes fixed for hours together upon the same spot. He seldom recognizes his most intimate friends, except when people tell him who is standing before him. In fact, it is dreadful to look at him. This state of things, however, can only last a few days longer, for all the bodily functions have ceased since yesterday. He, and we with him, will, therefore, please God, soon be released. People come in shoals to see him for the last time, although none are admitted except those who are bold enough to force their way into the dying man's room. The letter to you, even to the few sentences at the introduction, is, word for word, written at his dictation. I expect this will be his last letter, although to-day he contrived to whisper to me in broken accents, "Smart, Stumpff, write:" if possible for him even yet to sign his name on the paper, it shall be done. He feels his end approaching, for yesterday he said to me and Herr von Breuning, "Plaudite, amici, comedia finita est!" —The Life of Moscheles.

WAIFS.

Mr. Carl Zerrahn is ruralizing at Chicago.

Mr. Nelson Varley "summers" at Long Branch.

Herr Strakosch will open, at the Theatre Italien, with Don Pasquale.

Herr F. Boscowitz, the pianist, has removed from Montreal to Boston.

A western critic speaks of a singer who "slings thirty yards of store clothes behind her."

Herr F. X. Ascher, the doyen of music-publishers, died on the 5th of September, at Vienna.

Signor Tamberlik has arrived at New York, to join the Maretzek Italian Opera Company.

A subscription is being made in Paris for a nephew of Boieldieu, whom sickness has disabled.

The Boston Handel and Haydn Society has $1,088 in the treasury, and a permanent fund of $10,053.

There are said to be thirty-five male sopranos connected with the Roman Catholic churches at the present time.

Herr Theodore Formes, brother of Carl Formes, has become insane, and is now in an asylum at Dusseldorf.

M. Halanzier has engaged Mdlle. Jeannie Fouquet, the prize-winner in the Opéra-Comique Class at the Conservatoire.

Mr. John Francis Barnett, we regret to hear, has had a severe attack of illness. He is, we are glad to say, fast recovering.

The Paris Athenée re-opened, on September 13th, with The Barber of Seville. Adolph Adam's Bijou Perdu is in rehearsal.

Mr. Trelawny Cobham, after visiting the Exhibition at Vienna, and making the tour of the Austrian lakes, has returned to town.

The organists of Germany are forming a union for charitable and other purposes. The first meeting was held recently at Berlin.

The Menus-Plasirs proposes to bring out Donizetti's comic opera, Rita, ou le Mari battu, last heard in the Rue Favart, May, 1860.

Mdme. Nilsson, says the Arcadian, has announced her intention of not returning to Her Majesty's Opera, unless the conductor lowers the pitch.

Mdlle. Carlotti Patti is announced to sing, for the first time, at M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts, at the Royal Italian Opera House, this evening.

Marseilles is without an opera at present, the Municipality having refused a subvention. The Théâtre Valette has been transformed into a circus.

During his stay in Vienna, the King of Italy conferred the Cross of the Crown of Italy upon Signor Marchesi, the well known professor and composer.

It is said that Miss Virginia Gabriel is engaged to be married to Mr. George March, a gentleman who has long been in artistic collaboration with the fair composer.

Dexter Smith is glad to learn from English papers that "Mdme. Nilsson is dropping her mannerisms, and bids fair to become a thoroughly good artist."

All the members of Mr. Strakosch's company have arrived in America, and are in excellent health, the weather on the voyage having been very favourable.

Let it be conceded at once that every English actor of eminence is going to visit the United States. A great deal of speculation will thereby be saved.—Arcadian.

Mdme. Adelina Patti left Paris on Monday last for Vienna, en route to St. Petersburgh. She will sing in the Austrian capital on behalf of the Artists' Association there.

Mdlle. Virginie Gung'l, daughter of the waltz composer, has made her debut on the operatic stage at Schwerin, as Agatha (Der Freischütz). She is said to possess hopeful talent.

The Appleton St. girl who received the prize for an essay, entitled "Set not thy heart on earthly things," almost cried her eyes out the next day because she couldn't go to the circus.

The overture to Mr. Kettenus's opera, Stella Monti, which met with success at the Theatre de la Monnaie, Brussels, was announced to be played at M. Rivière's Promenade Concert, on Monday evening.

M. Henry Litolff has just married a young lady at Nogent-sur-Marne. According to the Gazette Musicale, the new Mdme. Litolff is the fifth bearer of the name of the author of Héloise et Abeilard.

Mr. and Mrs. Rousby are engaged to appear at the Princess's Theatre in a comedy by Miss Braddon, and a one-act drama on an interesting Russian subject, written expressly for them by Mr. Wellington Guernsey.

Digitized by Google

A workman in the employ of Messrs. Broadwood & Co., the pianoforte manufacturers, was assisting at the Foreign Office on Saturday afternoon in the removal of a pianoforte, when he fell over the baluster from the top to the bottom of a grand staircase, and was killed instantaneously.

Mdlle. Victoria Bunsen, the interesting young Swedish vocalist, who gained much favour among musical amateurs last season in London, has returned from her tour through her native country, where she was everywhere received with enthusiasm, and will make her début this evening at M. Rivière's concerts, at Covent Garden Theatre.

A music-dealer in Lancaster, Pa., with the name of Kevinski, who, by the way, keeps the very best kind of strings, received the following letter from a Lancaster County fiddler: "Mr. Hawinskey if yere sell that cind of astring for istallion Strings, you had bettar shut up shop and pedal penuts if you dont Choose to send my money back you can keep hit."

A romantic and impulsive young man sent his girl the piece of sheet music entitled "I will meet you at the Beautiful Gate." Her father saw the piece when she opened the package, and after daubing a bucketful of tar over his gate, quietly remarked to her: "He can wait for you if he wants to, but you won't either of you swing on that gate if tar will keep you off."

The Buffalo Courier was bothered to find vehicles for its ideas of the Rubinstein-Wieniawski-Thomas concert, given in that city lately. It chose these at a venture: "The concert as a whole was grandly massive, Titanic, imposing—to an almost painful degree. It was oppressively colossal and fearfully classical." It superfluously adds that everybody didn't understand what most of it meant.

One of the Lord Lieutenant's Aides-de-camps (who is well-known on the Dublin Staff for his scientific acquirements), during the recent Italian operatic performances, was asked by Mdlle. Elena Corani, the prima donna at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, what was phonography? He took his pencil and wrote the following, stating it was the newest system of phonography out: "U R A BUTE, LNA."

Mr. Willem Coenen played Litolff's concerto symphonique entitled "National Hollandois" at M. Rivière's Promenade Concert on Wednesday evening, and was warmly applauded and recalled for his fine performance. It may be remembered that Mr. Coenen played with success the same concerto at one of the Daily Musical Performances in the Royal Albert Hall, under Mr. Barnby's direction, some few weeks back.

Mr. Oberthur's "Legend," Loreley, for orchestra and two harps obbligati, was given for the second time at M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts, on Tuesday, and met with even more success than on its first performance. The youthful harpists, Misses Annie Wade and Alice Molteno were evidently less nervous than before, and played their respective parts admirably. On the occasion under notice, the "Legend" had the advantage of being conducted by its accomplished composer.

A district festival of parish choirs was held recently at Christ Church, Govilon, near Abergavenny, on Thursday, when upwards of 150 choristers took part, members of the choirs of Llanfoist, Llandilo, Pertholey, Llantillio Crossenny, Llandewi Rhydderch, Llanfair, Llanfrechfa, and Govilon. The singers assembled in the church a little before three o'clock, and took up the greater portion of the front seats, the congregation and visitors from Abergavenny occupying the side aisles and back seats. A procession of surpliced choristers, formed at the rectory, and proceeded slowly towards the church, singing the 322nd hymn, from "Hymns Ancient and Modern." In front of the procession, composed of a number of young men and boys, besides the officiating clergy, walked an acolyte, bearing an emblem of the crucifixion carved in oak. Several banners were carried, each bearing an ornamental representation of the cross, and a suitable motto. Immediately on entering the church the organ commenced playing, and the choristers and congregation rose, the latter in response to the bâton of the Rev. A. Hogan, leader, joining in the 330th hymn. The foremost part of the procession having finally reached the altar, upon which stood a row of wax candles, the whole came to a standstill, and remained until the conclusion of the hymn. They were then relegated to the positions in the sanctuary, and the service, which consisted of the ordinary lessons, with a selection of hymns and psalms, then commenced. The singing was of a most hearty and spirited character, and though the music was not "classical," it was gratifying to note the steadiness and zeal with which the youthful assemblage performed their task. The Rev. J. G. Tetley preached the sermon, taking his text from the 3rd verse of the 14th chapter of the Revelations of St. John—"And they sang as it were a new song before the Throne." The service then concluded with the singing of a hymn by the choristers, who proceeded with their banners in procession along the road to the school-room where the members of the various choirs sat down to tea.

Miss Ada Lester, the youthful pianist, who has been playing on several occasions at M. Rivière's Promenade Concerts with well merited success, repeated, on Thursday evening—a "Scotch Ballad Night"—Mr. Willie Pape's "Highland Gems" (introducing the airs "Annie Laurie" and "Bonnie Dundee"). We need scarcely say that the natives of North Britain, as well as the Southerners, were highly delighted with her brilliant performance.

It is well known that, if we sing near the aperture of a wide-mouthed vessel, some one note (which is in unison with the air in the vessel) will be reinforced and augmented, and sometimes to a great degree. That is what is meant by the resonance of the mass of air contained in the cavity of the vessel, or as it may be termed, resonance of the cavity. This has been known from the earliest times. The ancients are said to have placed large brass jars under the seats of their theatres to reinforce (one does not well see how) the voices of the actors.—Pierce on Sound.

Mr. P. S. Gilmore is to remove from Boston to New York, having been engaged as band-master of the N. Y. 22nd Regiment. The position will be a remunerative one, and will offer Mr. Gilmore the opportunity of carrying out any musical project which he may desire to undertake. The band is to consist of sixty-five members, and will be known as "Gilmore's Twenty-Second Regiment Band." According to accounts, Mr. Gilmore is to have a band room, private office, a musical library, and everything that can in any way promote the efficiency of this band, which is to be made the finest in the country. He is to give ten concerts and ten parades each year, and is to receive half the profits of the concerts after 7,500 dollars.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 88, Wimpole Street.

"ST. PATRICK AT TARA,"

CANTATA,

With characteristic words from Ossian, Moore, Clarence, Mangan, &c.

Composed, and dedicated by express permission, to

His Royal Highness PRINCE ARTHUR PATRICK

By J. W. GLOVER.

Price 5s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

MIGNON.

Opera in Three Acts,

BY

AMBROISE THOMAS.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| THE OPERA COMPLETE FOR PIANO SOLO ... ... ... Net | 10 | 0 |

All the following arrangements are Sold at HALF the marked PRICES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| BIZET (G.), Six Transcriptions:— No. 1, Danse Bohémienne, 5s.; 2, Romance de Mignon (Connais tu le pays), 5s.; 3, Duo des Hirondelles, 5s.; 4, Adieu Mignon (Mélodie), 4s.; 5, Polonaise de Philène, "Je suis Titania la blonde," 6s.; 6, O Printemps (Mélodie), 4s. | | |
| BATTMANN (J. L.), Op. 271. Petite Fantaisie (sans Octaves) .. .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| BRISSLER (F.), Two "Pot-Pourris" .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |
| CRAMER (S.), Two "Bouquets de Mélodies" .. .. .. .. each | 8 | 0 |
| CROISEZ (A.), "Styrienne, Andante et Valse" .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| DELAHAYE (L. L.), "Adieu Mignon, et Danse Bohémienne" .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| GODARD (A.), TROIS TRANSCRIPTIONS FACILES:— No. 1, "Recitatif et Romance de Mignon," 3s.; 2, "Danse Bohémienne," 3s.; 3, "Entr'acte Gavotte," 3s. | | |
| HESS (J. C.), Fantasia "Styrienne, Prière" .. .. .. .. .. | 5 | 0 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 209, Fantaisie brillante ("Marche Bohémienne," "Reveille," "Pastorale," "Danse des Œufs,") &c. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KETTERER (E.), Op. 232, Seconde Fantaisie ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 245, "Grand Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| KRUG (D.), Op. 246, "Petite Fantaisie" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| KRUGER (W.), Op. 142, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance et Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| LYSBERG (C. B.), Op. 116, Fantaisie Transcription (Duo des Hirondelles et "Titania") .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 71, Fantaisie Transcription ("Romance de Mignon" et "Duo des Hirondelles") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| NEUSTEDT (C.), Op. 81, Seconde Fantaisie Transcription ("Adieu Mignon et Valse de Philène") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| OESTEN (Th.), Op. 400, Fantaisie élégante ("Valse Styrienne, Romance de Mignon, Polacca") .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| ROSELLEN (H.), Op. 198, "Polonaise de Mignon," Transcription variée | 6 | 0 |
| TREDHE (G.), Op. 123, "Romance de Mignon," variée .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| VALIQUET (H.), Op. 81, "Deux petites Fantaisies" .. .. .. each | 5 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE DUETS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| THOMAS (A.), Overture .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |
| BERNARD (PAUL), Op. 90, Deux Suites Concertantes .. .. each | 9 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, Premier Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| RUMMEL (J.), Deux Mosaiques .. .. .. .. .. .. each | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| SARASATE (Op. 16), "Romance et Gavotte de Mignon" .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

VIOLIN SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LÉVÊQUE (EMILE), "Six Mélodies faciles et Motifs favoris de Mignon" | 5 | 0 |

CORNET-À-PISTONS SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| GUILBAUT (E.), "Pot-pourri sur Motifs favoris de Mignon" .. .. | 6 | 0 |

VIOLIN, HARMONIUM, AND PIANO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| LEFÉBURE-WELY. "Romance de Mignon" Paraphrase .. .. .. | 7 | 6 |

DANCE MUSIC—PIANO SOLO.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| STRAUSS, 1er Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ARBAN, 2de Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| MEY, 3e Quadrille .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| GODFREY (CHARLES), "Mignon Waltz" .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 0 |
| MÉTRA (OLIVIER), "Suite de Valses" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STRAUSS, "Grande Valse" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 6 | 0 |
| STUTZ (PHILIPPE), "Polka Mazurka" .. .. .. .. .. | 2 | 6 |
| DESGRANGES (E.), "Polka des Hirondelles" .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| ZIKOFF (F.), "Entr'acte Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |
| STRAUSS, "Mignon Polka" .. .. .. .. .. .. .. | 4 | 6 |

(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)

LONDON:

DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,

244, REGENT STREET, W.

THE COMPLETE OPERA FOR VOICE AND PIANO, 20s., and all the Vocal Music of "MIGNON" (separately), can be obtained from DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

---

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each 3 6

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

MARIE ALEXANDROWNA WALTZ.

BY CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

ASHDOWN & PARRY beg to announce that this new Waltz will be published in a few days.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

---

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

---

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Now Ready.

THE

RAISING

OF

LAZARUS.

AN

ORATORIO.

BY

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT

Price, in paper covers, 8s.; bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

NOVELLO & CO.,
BERNERS STREET.
LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Oct. 4, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 41. SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1873. PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY) October 11th. SECOND SATURDAY CONCERT and AFTERNOON PROMENADE of the Eighteenth Series. Commence at Three. The Eroica Symphony, (Beethoven); Meditation for violin and orchestra, first time (Gounod); Overture, "Oberon" (Weber); Overture, "A Winter's Tale" first time (John F. Barnett). Mdlle. Eugenia St. Alba, Mdme. Demeric-Lablache, and Mr. Werrenrath. Solo Violoncello—Mdlle. Gabrielle Platteau (Laureate du Conservatoire Bruxelles). Full Orchestra. Conductor—Mr. MANNS. Transferable serial stalls for the series of concerts, Two Guineas; reserved stalls for this concert, Half-a-Crown. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

MONDAY NEXT, OCTOBER 13th.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Under the special patronage of Field-Marshal H.R.H. the Duke of CAMBRIDGE, K.G., Commanding-in-Chief, H.S.H., Prince EDWARD of SAXE-WEIMAR, C.B. GRAND MILITARY FETE, MONDAY NEXT. The managers of the Crystal Palace having proposed to set apart a day on which to give a Grand Military Fete, they have great pleasure in stating that H.R.H. the Field-Marshal Commanding-in-Chief has been pleased to authorize commanding officers to grant leave to well-conducted soldiers to attend, and has also consented to the attendance of several Military Bands at a Special Concert which has been arranged for that occasion.

A GRAND MILITARY CONCERT will be given, in which more than 100 performers, selected from the Royal Artillery and other Military Bands, will be engaged. Conductor, Mr. Smyth, Senior Bandmaster, Woolwich Garrison. MILITARY ATHLETIC SPORTS: the competitors confined exclusively to representatives of the several regiments in and around the metropolis. Lieut. Torkington, R.A., Superintendent of Gymnasia, Woolwich, has kindly consented to act as director of this part of the programme. In the Opera Theatre will be performed Donizetti's favourite opera, "THE DAUGHTER OF THE REGIMENT," supported by Mr. Henry Guy (his first appearance on the stage), Mr. H. Corri, Miss Annie Goodall, Miss Fanny Heywood, &c.

A DISPLAY of GREAT FIREWORKS, and General Illumination of the Gardens and Grounds, with special military devices; after which the Illuminated Promenade and an Organ Performance. Senor ROMAH, Mexican Athlete of the Golden Wing, will give his marvellous performance in the Great Transept, at a height of sixty feet from the ground. There will be a grand display of the entire system of FOUNTAINS, including the great jets (280 feet), the Water Temples, Cataracts, Cascades, &c.

The celebrated Collection of Pictures known as the Victoria Cross Gallery will be on view.

On this occasion Soldiers or Volunteers in uniform will be admitted at specially reduced rates. See future announcements.

Admission, One Shilling; Children under twelve, Sixpence; Guinea Season Tickets free.

BRIGHTON.—MR. KUHE'S FIRST PIANOFORTE RECITAL (Annual Series of Three), on WEDNESDAY Morning, October 15, at the DOME. Mr. Kuhe will play Mozart's Sonata in A major, Beethoven's Sonata in C, Op. 53, J. S. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G major, Mendelssohn's Capriccio in E, Kirchner's Feuillet, Schumann's Whims, Liszt's Transcription on Schubert's Serenade, Stephen Heller's Intermede in E, Schulhoff's Caprice, &c. Programmes at Pott's & Co.'s.

"MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY."

MR. ARTHUR THOMAS will sing the Popular Song, "MY SWEETHEART WHEN A BOY," at Chelsea, This Day, October 11th; Poplar, October 14th; and Sutton, October 16th.

"LISCHEN AND FRITZCHEN."

MR. ARTHUR THOMAS will play "FRITZCHEN," and sing the famous Duet, "I'M AN ALSATIAN," in the above Operetta, at the Town Hall, Poplar, October 14th.

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!) will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

NEW SONGS by the most Popular Composers.
Just Published.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S "The Sailor's Bride." 4s.
VIRGINIA GABRIEL'S "A Shadow." 4s.
SCHIRA'S "He was her only Son." 4s.
ARTHUR CECIL'S "I hear thee speak of a better land." 4s.
WILHELM GANZ'S "Camelia and Rose." 4s.
In D flat for Soprano, and in A flat for Contralto.
WILHELM GANZ'S "A damsel fair was singing." 4s.
Post-free at half-price.

HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—M. RIVIERE'S CONCERTS.—EVERY EVENING at Eight. The following artists will appear during the week:—

Mdlle. CARLOTTA PATTI.

| | |
|---|---|
| Mdlle. VICTORIA BUNSEN (the Swedish Contralto). | Signor GUSTAVE GARCIA. |
| Miss CONSTANCE LOSEBY. | Signor FEDERICI. |
| Mr. J. H. PEARSON. | Mr. GEORGE PERREN. |

Instrumentalists:—
Mons. CORNELIS (the Belgian Violinist).
Mons. THEODORE RITTER (Pianoforte).
Mr. J. LEVY (Cornet-à-Pistons).
Conductor—M. RIVIERE.

MONDAY next, Herr Meyer Lutz's successful Cantata, "A LEGEND OF THE LYS" (second time).
TUESDAY, Meyerbeer Night.
WEDNESDAY, Classical Night. Conductor—Mr. Barnby.
THURSDAY, Bishop Night.
FRIDAY, for the Benefit of Mr. William Carter, the Cantata, "PLACIDA." Conducted by the Composer.
SATURDAY, Sullivan Night, with Miss Edith Wynne and party.

Splendid Decorations, Ferneries, Fountains, Plants, Exotics, Flowers, &c. Refreshments by Messrs. A. and S. Gatti. Promenade, One Shilling. Doors open at 7.30; Commence at 8. Acting Manager, Mr. JOHN RUSSELL.

MISS FANNY HEYWOOD begs to announce her return to town for the Season. All communications for Engagements to be addressed to Mr. E. C. Boosey, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

MR. HANDEL GEAR, Professor of Singing, begs to announce his return to town for the Season. 86, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

SIGNOR W. JERVIS RUBINI, Professor of Foreign Languages and Piano, begs to announce his return to town. All communications respecting Lessons, &c., to be addressed to his own residence, 85, Wigmore Street, Cavendish Square, W.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Stretford Road, Old Trafford, Manchester.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce his Return to Town from the Continent. Young rising Artists desirous of appearing in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., ought to write at once to Herr Schuberth, care of Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, and send particulars as to their abilities.

REMOVAL.

MR. VERNON RIGBY begs to announce his Change of Address to St. George's Villa, 26, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury, and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an inferior Medal.

Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

ELECTRICITY VALSE,
By HENRY KLEIN.
Price 4s.

"Is tuneful, danceable, and not difficult."—The Graphic.
"This is really a very pretty waltz, with good melodies admirably arranged for the pianoforte."—The Era.
"Whether used for dance purposes, or played for its own sake, it cannot fail to please."—Musical World.
"The music is pretty, and variety of effect produced by broken rhythm."—The Court Circular.

London: HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.
Post free, 24 stamps.

Digitized by Google

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20th, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18th, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

A SIMPLE CATECHISM
ON THE
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
In the form of Question and Answer, and written in familiar language.
BY
E. ELLICE JEWELL.
Price 1s., Cloth Cover.
LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

LET THE HILLS RESOUND (New Part Song), by BRINLEY RICHARDS. Post free for four stamps.

MENDELSSOHN'S SCOTCH SYMPHONY, REMINISCENCE for the PIANOFORTE.—"Mr. George F. West has succeeded in producing a sterling transcription of Mendelssohn's Scotch Symphony, which all lovers of classical music will hail with gratification."—Vide the Graphic. "Mr. West has accomplished his task reverently and well."—Vide Orchestra. 4s.; post free for 24 stamps.

READING AT SIGHT.—Musical Cards, for Learning to Read Music quickly at Sight. Invaluable to all Teachers of Music. Post free for 25 stamps.—Published only by ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street. Order everywhere.

"THE SACRED HEART." The beautiful Processional Hymn sung by all the Pilgrims to Paray-le-Monial. Arranged as a piece for Pianoforte or Harmonium by J. Pittman. Price 2s.; or, for one or four voices, with French and English words, 1s.—London: E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyle Street, Regent Street, W.

FAVOURITE SONGS,
By Mrs. J. HOLMAN-ANDREWS.

| NAME OF SONG. | PUBLISHERS. |
|---|---|
| THE LAST REQUEST | Boosey & Co. |
| LAST ROSE OF SUMMER (for two Voices) | Chappell & Co. |
| THE RAINBOW | Chappell & Co. |
| WAITING, WATCHING | Chappell & Co. |
| OLD ENGLISH MELODIES (arranged for Ladies' Voices) | Lamborn Cock. |
| MARY, BEREFT OF THEE | D. Davison & Co. |
| ANGELS. (GERTRUDE HOLMAN-ANDREWS) | Duff & Stewart. |
| THE ADIEU | Duff & Stewart. |
| I'LL LOVE BUT THEE, MY NATIVE HOME | Shepherd. |
| YE ARE NOT MISS'D, FAIR FLOW'RS | Shepherd. |
| GO, LOVELY ROSE | Weekes & Co. |
| SMILE ON MY EV'NING HOUR | Weekes & Co. |
| THE OLD YEAR | Weekes & Co. |
| GENTLY, OH! GENTLY (with Chorus for Ladies' Voices) | Welppert & Co. |
| MY FIRST LOVE, AND MY LAST | J. Williams. |

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| "ALWAYS ALONE" | Sung by Madame Patey | 4s. |
| "THE KING AND I" | Sung by Mr. Santley | 4s. |
| "THE CROSS ROADS" | Sung by Miss Edith Wynne | 4s. |
| "SYMPATHY" | Sung by Miss Enriquez | 4s. |
| "NOTHING" | Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves | 4s. |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S NEW SONGS.

| | |
|---|---|
| "SINCE BABY LEFT US" | 3s. |
| "REQUITED" | (In the Press.) |
| "A MODERN STORY" | (In the Press.) |
| "WRITING TO WILLIE" | (In the Press.) |
| "MY MORNING DREAM" | (In the Press.) |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

"LE VALLON NATAL,"
MELODIE.
De Mdme. WILLY DE ROTHSCHILD.
Price 2s. 6d. net.
(Editions de Heugel & Co., Paris.)
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

PORTUGUESE AIR,
("TO THE BELOVED ONE")
Transcribed for the Pianoforte
By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

Just Published,
THREE SONGS FOR VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.
With English and German Words.
No. 1, "THE MINSTRELS' HOME" (Des Sängers Heimath) .. .. .. 3s.
,, 2, "THE LOVELY MONTH OF MAY" (Im Wunderschönen Monat Mai) 3s
,, 3, "VISIONS" (Traumbild) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 3s
The English Versions of the Words by MARIA XIMENA HAYES.
The Music by WILHELM SCHULTHES.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"GARDE-MOI TA FOI,"
("BE TRUE TO ME.")
ROMANCE.
COMPOSÉE, ET DEDIÉE À SIGNOR GARDONI,
Par IGNACE GIBSONE.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"
SACRED DUET,
For Soprano and Contralto,
By HENRY SMART.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"BEYOND THE HILLS,"
SACRED DUET
For Soprano and Contralto.
Composed by HENRY SMART.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"COM' E GENTIL,"
Une FANTAISIE DE SALON,
Sur la Serenade de "DON PASQUALE,"
Pour le Pianoforte,
Par RICHARD HOFFMAN.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"MIGNON'S SONG,"
"Hast thou e'er seen the land where the wild citron grows?"
Sung by
Madame CHRISTINE NILSSON,
In the Opera of "MIGNON."
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"IN THE MORNING,"
SONG
The Words by F. ENOCH.
The Music by HENRY SMART.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"TWO PATHWAYS,"
SONG.
Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,
"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"
SCOTCH AIR,
Transcribed for the Pianoforte
By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The Saturday concerts, under the direction of Mr. Auguste Manns, have begun again, to the satisfaction of all amateurs who care to travel once a week to Sydenham for the sake of hearing the masterpieces of the most renowned orchestral composers, performed as they are performed nowhere else in England. These concerts, carried on with always increasing spirit, have won a musical reputation for the Crystal Palace which may invite comparison with that of any of the time-honoured institutions of the Continent, not excepting the Paris Conservatoire, or the Leipsic Gewandhaus. No such reputation was ever more honestly acquired; and it is pleasant to learn that the directing hand to which music at the Crystal Palace owes so much is still to influence not merely the construction of the programmes and the analyses, historical and critical of their contents, but the discovery and choice of new works of interest. Though Mr. George Grove is about to relinquish the post of Manager and Secretary, he retains a place at the Board of Directors, and will, we understand, as usual, superintend the department over which he has presided for so many years. It would be superfluous to recapitulate what he has done towards bringing the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts up to their actual state of perfection. While adhering to the long accepted masters to whom the art is indebted for almost everything, he has been the means of familiarizing the public with the compositions of scarcely less remarkable men—Schumann and Schubert, for instance—the important orchestral works of whom, the latter especially, but for the exertions of this earnest and genuine amateur, would, in all probability, have long awaited that recognition of their deserts which is rapidly becoming more and more general. Since Mr. Grove's earliest efforts to endow the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts, from October in one year to April in the next, with artistic weight and significance, he has found an invaluable coadjutor in Mr. Manns, than whom no one of his class ever sprang more suddenly from obscurity into eminence; and the cordial welcome this untiring and skilful chef d'orchestre received, on taking his place at the conductor's desk, on the occasion under notice, was nothing more than his due. That the programmes of the Saturday Concerts are intended to be on the scale and proportions of those of former seasons may be seen by the following:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Overture, "Nurmahal" ... .. ... ... | Spontini. |
| Recit. and aria, "Lascia ch'io pianga" ... ... | Handel. |
| Pianoforte Concerto in F Minor ... ... ... | J. S. Bach. |
| Aria, "Una aura amorosa" ... ... ... | Mozart. |
| Symphony, "The Scotch"... ... ... ... | Mendelssohn. |
| Song, "Tre giorni son che Nina"... ... ... | Pergolesi. |
| Russian song, "She is mine" ... ... ... | — |
| Pianoforte solos ... ... ... ... ... | Pauer & Weber. |
| Recit. and aria, "The grey dawn steals"... ... | Schira. |
| Festival overture ... ... ... ... ... | Dr. Julius Rietz. |

Conductor, Mr. Manns.

One of the instrumental pieces—the concerto of Bach—was heard for the first time at these concerts; and another—the overture of Rietz—for the first time in England. Both were welcome, though in different degrees. The concerto of John Sebastian Bach, for harpsichord, with quartet accompaniment of stringed instruments, belongs to a considerable family; and we cannot but think it better suited to a place of ordinary dimensions than to a vast arena like that of the Crystal Palace concert-room. It is, in fact, like most of its companions, essentially a "chamber" piece. Each movement, nevertheless, is full of interest—the first, despite a certain monotony, owing to its rarely broken uniformness of rhythm; the second, with "pizzicato" accompaniment, on account of its continuous flow of melody; and the finale, third, and best of all, a movement of the characteristic "J. S. B." stamp, when Bach allowed his fancy and his fingers to run away with him, for its fluency and well-sustained vigour. The pianoforte part was played in masterly style by Herr Ernst Pauer, one of our most practised foreign resident pianists, whose repertory seems to be drawn from the whole library of artistic production in his special department. The pianoforte solos, further on in the programme, were also in the hands of this esteemed professor, who gave his own ingenious variations on Osmin's song from Mozart's opera, Die Entführung aus dem Serail (Seraglio), as might have been expected, and took the finale (moto perpetuo) of Weber's first sonata (C major, Op. 24) at such a pace that some amateurs may have thought he would never get safely to the end; he did so, however, quite safely, and was rewarded with loud applause and a "recall" little short of unanimous. The other novelty, Herr Julius Rietz's "Festival Overture," composed to commemorate, as the programme informs us, "a loyal nation's rejoicing in the happy event celebrated last year throughout Saxony" (the Golden Wedding of the King and Queen)—"a grand symbolical picture, musically illustrated"—requires more than one hearing to render it clearly intelligible. That Herr Rietz, in some sort Mendelssohn's pupil, and afterwards Mendelssohn's successor at the Gewandhaus concerts in Leipsic, now directed by Herr Reinecke, is an able musician and a master of orchestral treatment, this overture alone would suffice to prove. But, on the other hand, the materials upon which it is built hardly justify the elaborate development to which they are submitted. The overture is "elongated," if the term may pass, to such an extent that it becomes more and more diffuse, and long before the termination a sense of tediousness is inevitable. The French philosopher who, after listening to, without understanding, a long sonata, ejaculated, "Que me veux tu, sonate?" would assuredly, after listening to this very long overture, have asked, peradventure more appositely, "Que me veux tu, ouverture?" Mendelssohn at one time proffered excellent counsel, of which his intimate friend and pupil does not seem to have taken advantage. But, thorough adept as he is in musical composition, Herr Rietz cannot be accepted as a man of genius, and, for that reason, would stand a fairer chance of success in pieces of less pretension—such, for example, as the Lustspiel overture, introduced in the early spring of the present year—than in works of extended development. The "Festival Overture," although adequate preparation had evidently been denied it, was executed for the most part with spirit and precision. It did not, however, much impress the audience.

The overture to Nurmahal, Spontini's half ballet opera, the materials for the libretto of which were derived in a great measure from Thomas Moore's Lallah Rook, has already been heard at these concerts. The same subject—as the programme reminds us—inspired Schumann with his secular oratorio, Paradise and the Peri, and Sterndale Bennett with his beautiful and very originally constructed overture, bearing the same title (to which ought to have been added Mr. John Francis Barnett's cantata produced at one of the recent Birmingham Festivals). The overture of Spontini will bear re-hearing; for, though it sounds very much like one of Rossini's most lengthy operatic preludes (say Semiramide, in the same key, produced a year later at Venice) indefinitely spun out, it is bright, full of tune, and superbly scored for the orchestra. It was admirably played. Still more admirably played was the "Scotch Symphony" (A minor) of Mendelssohn, which has long been, and in all likelihood will long remain, a stock piece at these concerts. A finer performance of this orchestral chef d'œuvre we have rarely heard. Nor was ever in our remembrance the attention of an audience more rivetted from beginning to end. The applause after each movement was enthusiastic, so much so that Mr. Manns could not possibly follow out with strict observance the injunction of the composer, that one should succeed another without an instant's interval. The scherzo was called for again; but the conductor, wise in his generation, was deaf to the call, believing, and with sound discretion, that a repetition of this scherzo—perhaps Mendelssohn's most animated and best—would damage the effect of the melodious and expressive andante that comes next, the leading theme of which by the way was given out by the violins in absolute perfection. At the conclusion of the symphony the applause was hearty, unanimous, and prolonged; and, after first acknowledging the compliment himself, Mr. Manns turned his face to the members of the orchestra, applauding them just as heartily—a proceeding which, if not in accordance with strict etiquette, was at any rate pardonable under the circumstances.

The vocal music, although comprising nothing new, was by no means devoid of interest. Mdlle. Caroline Leontieff, who has a mezzo-soprano voice and fair expression, gave Handel's (of late years) somewhat hackneyed air, "Lascio ch'io pianga" (from the opera of Rinaldo), besides an air by Pergolesi, and a Russian song by Koschetoff, to the apparent satisfaction of the audience. Mr. Vernon Rigby sang "Una aura amorosa," from Mozart's Cosi fan tutte, together with the recitative and air, "The grey dawn steals"—one of the most graceful pieces in Signor Schira's cantata, The Lord of Burleigh, produced with such success at the late Birmingham Festival. The song in its way is a gem. Mr. Rigby sings it con amore, and in his very best manner.

Thus the 18th series of the Saturday Concerts has begun as well as could be desired. The prospectus, moreover, affords promise that it will in no instance be inferior to its predecessors. We are to have as of old 25 concerts—11 before and 14 after Christmas. Among the works to be produced for the first time in the Crystal Palace Music-room are Handel's oratorio, Theodora, with the extra attraction of Dr. Ferdinand Hiller's additional accompaniments; two of Haydn's least familiar symphonies, besides specimens of the Seven last Words (why not the whole seven?); selections from the Romeo and Juliet of Hector Berlioz; Felicien David's ode-symphony, Le Desert; fragments from Schumann's incidental music to Goethe's Faust (again, why not the whole?); selections from Beethoven's too little heard of König Stephan, as well as his Praise of Music cantata; Schubert's octett for stringed and wind instruments; Macfarren's overture to John the Baptist, the oratorio about to be produced at the Bristol Festival; a new symphony in G minor, by Sir Julius Benedict, two movements of which were performed with great applause at the last Norwich Festival; a new symphony in C major, by Mr. E. Prout, whose organ sonata obtained such marked favour last season; the overture to A Winter's Tale, by Mr. John Francis Barnett; some new pieces by Herr Johannes Brahms, M. Gounod, Mr. Arthur Sullivan, &c.; and last, not least, Sir Sterndale Bennett's most recent pianoforte sonata, The Maid of Orleans, composed expressly for, and dedicated to, Mdme. Arabella Goddard. So much for the advertised novelties. That we shall have the usual gleanings from Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and Spohr, together with some of the brilliant operatic overtures of Weber, Rossini, Auber, and such like, may be taken for granted. Among the solo artists, vocal and instrumental, announced to appear during the series of concerts may be named Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington, Alvsleben, and Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Signor Foli; Madame Schumann, Herr Joachim, Herr von Bülow, Mr. Charles Hallé, who happily still holds his own against the avalanche of modern "pianism," and the king of violoncellists, Signor Piatti.

Digitized by Google

The programme of to-day's concert includes Beethoven's Eroica symphony; a "Meditation" for violin and orchestra, by M. Gounod (first time); Weber's overture to Oberon, and that to a A Winter's Tale (already mentioned) by Mr. J. F. Barnett. Who is to take the violin part in M. Gounod's "Meditation" is not stated.

BARNBY'S CONCERTS AT ALBERT HALL.

The following is a complete list of the works which have been performed at the series of Daily Exhibition Concerts, given by Messrs. Novello, Ewer & Co., in connection with Her Majesty's Commissioners, under the conductorship of Mr. Barnby, in the Royal Albert Hall:—

Bach, J. S. Sinfonia in D major, Overture and Suite in B minor, for Flute and Strings, and Concerto in C minor, for two Pianofortes (Messrs. Bird and Goodban).—Beethoven. Overtures: Egmont, Die Weihe des Hauses, Fidelio (No. 4), Leonora (No. 3), King Stephen, Prometheus, and Coriolanus. Symphonies: Nos. 1 to 8, and the Pianoforte Concerto in C minor (Miss E. Busby).—Mozart. Overtures: Die Zauberflöte, La Clemenza di Tito, Figaro, Così fan tutte, and Idomeneo. Symphonies: in D, G minor, and Jupiter. Concerto in C major (Mr. W. H. Thomas).—Haydn. Symphonies: No. 8, in B flat (Salamon's Set), and Surprise.—Handel. Organ Concerto No. 1 (Mr. W. T. Best).—Mendelssohn. Overtures: Ruy Blas, Midsummer Night's Dream, Hebrides, Calm Sea and Prosperous Voyage, Melusine, St. Paul, and Trumpet in C. Symphonies: Scotch, Reformation, and Italian. Concertos: G minor (Miss E. Barnett, Mr. E. H. Thorne), D minor (Miss Le Brun). Capriccio Brilliant in B minor (Madame N. Voarino). Cornelius March, and March in Athalie.—Spohr. Overtures: Jessonda and Faust, and Historical Symphony.—Schumann. Overture: Manfred. Symphonies: No. 1, in B flat, and No. 3, in E flat (Rhenish); and Concerto in A minor (Mr. F. Rummel).—Schubert. Overture: Rosamunde. Unfinished Symphony in B minor, Ballet Air in G, Rosamunde; Fantasia in C major, arranged for Pianoforte and Orchestra by Liszt (Madame E. Oswald), and March, E flat, arranged for Orchestra by E. Hecht.—Weber. Overtures: Oberon, Der Freischutz, Jubilee, Euryanthe, Turandot, Peter Schmoll; and Concertstück for pianoforte (Chevalier de Kontski, Miss M. Rock).—Auber. Overtures: Exhibition, E major; Les Diamans de la Couronne, Fra Diavolo, Masaniello, Le Cheval de Bronze, Zanetta.—Rossini. Overtures: William Tell, Siege of Corinth, Semiramide, Tancredi, Cenerentola.—Gounod. Overture: Le Medicin Malgré lui; March, Reine de Saba, and Saltarello.—Wagner. Overture: Flying Dutchman and Selection from Lohengrin (arranged by Signor Arditi).—Hiller. Symphony: E minor (Op. 67), and Concerto in F sharp minor (Mr. A. J. Barth).—Rietz. Overture: Lustspiel in B flat.—Cherubini. Overtures: Les deux Journées, L'hotellerie Portugaise, and Anacreon.—Herold. Overtures: Le Pré aux Clercs and Zampa.—Bennett, Sir. W. S. Overture: Les Naïdes; Concerto, No. 4, in F minor (Mr. W. Carter).—Flotow. Overture: Stradella.—Meyerbeer. March, Prophète.—Gade. Symphony in B flat.—Berlioz. Overture: Waverley.—Thomas, A. Overture: Mignon.—Cusins, W. G. Concerto in A minor (Miss Jessie Morison).—Barnett, J. F. Symphony in A minor.—Litolff. Concerto, No. 3, National Hollandais (Mr. W. Coenen).—Benedict, Sir J. Overture: Macbeth.—Boieldieu. Overture: La Dame Blanche.—Macfarren, G. A. Overtures: She Stoops to Conquer, Robin Hood, and Chevy Chase.—Sullivan, A. S. Tempest Music.—Elvey, Sir G. J. Festal March.—Liszt. Fest Marsch.—Méhul. Overture: Le Jeune Henri.—Duvivier. Concert Overture, in A major.—Nicolai. Overture: Merry Wives of Windsor.—Oberthür, C. Rubezahl.—Cowen, F. H. Symphony in C minor.—Brion, R. Forsey. Concert Overture in C minor.—Barry, C. A. Birthday March.—Gadsby, Henry. Overture: Andromeda, and Symphony in C minor.—Thouless, A. H. Concerto in E flat (Mr. A. H. Thouless).—Summers, J. L. Concert Overture in F.—Clarke, J. Hamilton. Symphony in F.

Many highly interesting works which do not appear in the above list will be performed during the present month, which concludes the season. Amongst these may be mentioned—Sir W. S. Bennett's Caprice in E major (Mr. E. H. Thorne), and his Concerto in F minor (Mr. George Wheeldon); Braham's Second Serenade in A, for Small Orchestra; Beethoven's Pianoforte Concertos in G major and E flat, also his Triple Concerto for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello; Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia for Pianoforte and Orchestra (Mr. W. Coenen), &c.

In the course of the series of Concerts the following singers have appeared: Miss Spiller, Miss Dones, Mdlle. Bartkowska, Madame Suchet-Champion, Miss Lucy Franklein, Mr. Raynham, Mr. Thurley Beale, Miss Katherine Poyntz, Miss Adelaide Newton, Miss Blanche Reives, Madame Poole, Miss Walton, Miss Dalmaine, Mdlle. Gips, Miss Emrick, Madame Maria de Gourieff, Miss Helen Standish, Madame De Waldeck, Mdlle. Anita Leoni, Mr. Melbourne, Mr. J. T. Dalton, Mr. Kenningham, Mdlle. Helene Arnim, Miss Isabel Weale, Mr. Albert James, Mr. W. J. Winbolt, Miss M. Stringer, Mr. Charles Beckett, Mr. F. Penna, Madame Plaschesky-Bauer, Madame Sauerbrey, Signor Tesseman, Miss Alice Barnett, Madame Billinie-Porter, Miss Georgina Maudsley, Mr. Wyndham, Mrs. Sicklemore, the Misses Siedle, Miss Bertha Griffiths.—Musical Times, October 1, 1873.

Stuttgart.—Herr Friedrich Schmidt, director of the chorus at the theatre, died, a short time since, aged 72. He was, in his time, one of the leading musicians connected with the Theatre Royal. He studied at the Musical Institution founded by King Friedrich at the commencement of the present century. He was at first an actor and singer; then, in 1830, répétiteur, and, in 1850, director of the chorus, discharging the duties of both places until 1859, when he retired on a pension, after 41 years' active service. He was, also, teacher of music and of the piano to the present King, being one of the first pianists in this capital.

Milan.—After furnishing a general topic of conversation for about three months, and affording the public an opportunity for wondering, and the gentlemen who do the musical chit-chat for the papers a chance, by which they largely profited, of telling every one, what sort of a work it was to be, Signor Chessi's new opera, La Contessa di Medina, has at last come out at the Scala, and—immediately gone in again. The general charge against it is that, though containing two or three numbers which display a certain amount of talent, it is, as a whole, fearfully commonplace, and highly suggestive of operas by other composers. The artists charged with the principal parts were Signora Conti-Foroni, Signori Velada, Mirabella, and Cappelli.—Some of the papers have been spreading a report that Signor Ponchielli's opera, I Lituani, will not be ready by the time it will be required, and will have to be replaced by the work of some other composer. Among the operas mentioned are Gustavo Vasa, by Signor Marchetti, Giuseppe Balsamo, by Signor Sangiorgi, and Lia, by Signor Schira. Signor G. Ricordi has, in consequence, written a letter in which he informs the world that the report is devoid of any solid foundation, and that Signor Ponchielli will come up "to time."—The statue of Donizetti will shortly be formally uncovered in the vestibule of the Scala. The programme on the same evening is to include an overture by Signor Mazzucato, several concert-pieces, and Anna Bolena with Signora Galletti as the heroine.—La Juive, with Signora Wanda Miller in the principal female part, has been very successfully revived at the Teatro Dal Verme. Among the novelties promised at this house there is included a ballet, Selam meraviglioso, by Signor Pulini, besides three new operas, Guido di Morant, by Signor Bertini, Margherita Pusterla, by Signor Mariani, and Guiseppe Balsamo, by Signor Sangiorgi, though the last opera figures among the operas already named as destined to fill up the gap occasioned at the Scala by the asserted non-completion of I Lituani.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

October 8, 1873.

No novelty has occurred in any shape this week. The repetition of Lucie, Martha, Le Cheval de Bronze, and, of course, La Fille de Madame Angot, has made up the répertoire, so there is no need for comment. La Fille "goes" as usual, not so well as at first, but the various and attractive airs are not confined to the Theatre. The other day I felt much alarmed. In the principal square, I heard two voices vociferating an air with the words, "Quand on conspire." I thought of the Commune, of Paris, &c. I rushed away from what I thought might soon become a "scene of action," and, in my flight, came upon the conspirators, in the shape of two pastrycook boys clad in white attire—who, however, had no "white wig," or "black collar"—bearing on their heads long baskets, full of various comestibles.

On October 2, for the delectation of the juvenile portion of our inhabitants and the few remaining visitors, an entertainment took place at the Etablissement. It consisted of dissolving views by means of two magic lanterns—sent expressly from London for the purpose. The subjects were "Mount Sinai and Egypt." I need hardly add that an English clergyman preached thereon (I mean "lectured"), and was heard and duly appreciated by those of the small audience who could hear him.

Boulogne is getting emptier every day, but the Opera will continue open till the end of this month; after that date, dramas and operettas will entertain us till February 1, next year, when we may look forward to opera again for three months. S. C.

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE.

The neighbourhood of the Regent's Park was thrown into a state of commotion on Monday evening, Sept. 29, owing to an unusually large number of carriages setting down visitors at one of the prettiest theatres in the metropolis, the "Royal Alexandra Theatre and Operahouse." The cause of this large attendance was the opening night of the season and the first performance of an "Original Comic Opera, in two acts, entitled The Magic Pearl, the libretto written by E. Fitzball, the music by T. Thorpe Pede." Mr. Pede's success with his operetta, Marguerite, produced at the same theatre last season, caused great curiosity to hear what he could do on a larger scale, and his admirers had no cause for disappointment, having only to put up with the invariable drawbacks of a first performance in these days, which is never otherwise than a "dress rehearsal." The hurry in which new pieces are "mounted," and the scarcity of rehearsals allotted to them, cause "hitches" in the scenery, nervousness in the actors (who are consequently imperfect in their parts, and resort to "gag" to occupy the time till they have "got the word" from the prompter), and a general state of confusion and excitement before and behind the scenes. Notwithstanding, however, these "little difficulties," The Magic Pearl was received with every demonstration of favour, and Mr. Pede may be congratulated upon another success. We do not feel ourselves equal to the task of describing the "plot" of the piece, suffice it to say that Mr. Fitzball revels in the supernatural, and we have no doubt that those of our readers who decide upon paying a visit to the Alexandra Theatre—which we strongly recommend them to do—will be able to unravel all its mysteries in much less time, and much more to their own satisfaction than we can hope to do. Mr. Thorpe Pede has secured the services of an efficient company as well as a practised corps de ballet, and the mise-en-scène, by Mr. William Maugham and assistants, deserves unqualified praise. In the first act, "A Valley in the Himalaya," "The Spirit's Haunt," "The Grand Square at Delhi;" and in the second, "A Rajah's Tent," and the "Grotto in the Royal Gardens," are beautifully painted. The costumes also are handsome in the extreme; in fact the opera is "mounted" in perfect style and excellent taste.

The principal lady vocalists were Miss Gertrude Ashton, a young artist with a highly cultivated voice, who made a decided impression, as the heroine of Mr. Pede's operetta, last season, and fully sustained, on the present occasion, the reputation she then gained; Miss Alice Barth, well known and admired in our concert rooms; Miss Costin; and Madame Marion St. Clair, the last-named possessing a fine voice, and a still finer figure, which she knows how to set off to advantage. The gentlemen vocalists were Mr. J. W. Turner (tenor), whose merits are well known at St. George's Hall; Mr. Gordon Wallace, and Mr. E. Danvers, whose vocal are not to be compared to his histrionic powers—as those who saw him at the Royalty Theatre, in the part of the mother of Black-eyed Susan, will remember. Among the most successful "numbers" in the opera were "On my bed of leaves as I lay" (encored), "In the cabin we loved," "Farewell to the city," and "Zalouna" (encored), all sung by Mr. J. W. Turner, and all vociferously applauded, "Zalouna" especially, which will, no doubt, be called the "gem" of the opera by tenor singers. Miss Alice Barth's duet with Mr. Turner, "Oh, what a delightful feeling" (encored), and her songs, "Fifty years ago" (capitally acted and sung), and "Near unto thee, my heart beats more free," may be cited as producing good effect. Miss Gertrude Ashton's opening aria, "The broad earth and the sky" (encored), deserves more than usual commendation; it was perfectly sung by the youthful artist. The same praise may be bestowed on the song, "Still that voice so softly thrilling," given, also, by Miss Gertrude Ashton in finished style, and deservedly encored. A brilliant finale, "Happy skies where spirits rove," executed with perfect skill by Miss Gertrude Ashton, brought the opera to a close in so spirited a manner that a recall for all the artists was the natural result, and, as a matter of course, the composer was called upon to bow his acknowledgments. The Magic Pearl is announced for repetition every evening.

MUSIC AT MELBOURNE.

(From our own Australian Correspondent.)

The principal musical event of the month has been the revival of Benedict's Lily of Killarney. When played eight years ago it was not a commercial success, but now it seems likely to have a good run, each night bringing an increasing audience. Perhaps the cast, now particularly strong, may have had some influence. Certainly such an Eily O'Connor as Miss Alice May was never before seen in Australia, and rarely anywhere else, her voice, appearance, style, and acting being all suitable to the character. The Argus says:—

"Miss May, as the heroine, is singularly well suited to the part; she looks it admirably, plays it naturally, and sings the music of it without fault. The air, 'I'm Alone,' was given with such true expression as to deserve the highest praise. The Lily of Killarney will always be a welcome presentation whenever Miss May plays the part."

Mr. Templeton made a first appearance as Danny Mann, and has at once secured a good position. His singing of "The Colleen Bawn" is excellent, and creditable to his teacher, Mr. David Miranda. As Myles, Mr. Vernon has made a hit, his acting being especially remarkable. Mr. Beaumont is Hardress; and the other characters are taken by Miss Winstone (a charming Ann Chute), Mr. Fox, Mr. Rainford, and Mr. Farley. The mise-en-scène and the band, under Mr. G. B. Allen's direction, are all that can be wished. The opinion of your correspondent is, that were the company to appear in London now they would meet with great success.

The other operas have been the Bohemian Girl, Grand Duchess, Rose of Castile, Maritana, and The Daughter of the Regiment. Of the latter the Age says:—

"The part of Marie was Miss Alice May's initial performance on the Melbourne stage, and, good as that first appearance was, the wonderful improvement she has made in her profession was more than ever evident to anyone remembering the former representation. Vivacious, while elegant, and showing excellent execution, combined with well tempered power, her performance was thoroughly excellent. Mr. Beaumont was capital as Tonio."

We have had two débutantes—Miss Bessie Harrison and Miss Carrie Emanuel—about whom more anon.

Madame Arabella Goddard, who has met with an immense reception in New South Wales and Queensland, returns here to-day. Her re-appearance, announced for Thursday, is anxiously looked forward to by the musical public of Melbourne. Nearly all the dress circle tickets are already taken.

We have just received a new importation of "Niggers" from America, including Mr. Billy Emerson; but, as they are unequal to our own troupe, under Mr. Kelly, they are not likely to be very successful.

Victoria, August 12, 1873.

Digitized by Google

ARABELLA GODDARD IN AUSTRALIA.

(From the "Sydney Herald.")

The principal musical event since our last summary relates to the performances of Madame Arabella Goddard. This gifted lady, whose fame as a pianist of the first order had reached Australia years ago, was warmly welcomed on her first presence before a Sydney audience on the 13th June last. Since then Madame Goddard has given two other concerts, and her playing called forth a spirit of enthusiasm seldom witnessed here. Of the quality of the lady's abilities it is unnecessary to speak. Our English readers have heard over and over again the opinions of the best critics, and it is only left to us to endorse the high encomiums passed on her rare talent. The visit of Madame Goddard has, however, confirmed many that Australia has been visited by performers on the piano of no mean calibre, and while we admit that Madame Goddard is the premier, we must not forget those to whom years ago Australia was indebted for the display of high art, when the country did not hold out such inducements for a visit as it now does. Madame Goddard has given concerts in Newcastle, Maitland, and Brisbane with the unvarying success that is her due, and will receive a grand complimentary concert on the 19th instant, in the grand Hall of the University of Sydney.

—o—

ST. GEORGE'S RIFLE VOLUNTEER BAND.

The members and friends of the St. George's Rifle Volunteer Band, who are so well known as the prize winners at the National Music Meetings, and for their frequent performances at the Crystal Palace, met together lately, at the Alma Hotel, Upper Norwood, for the purpose of presenting an acknowledgment of their respect and esteem to Mr. A. J. Phasey, their zealous and able conductor.

The chair was occupied by Captain Holloway, of the St. George's Rifles, Sergeant Mackay being in the vice-chair. In addition to the members of the band present, who mustered almost in their full strength, the chairman was surrounded by many other gentlemen invited in honour of the occasion, as personal friends of the guest of the evening, or as members of the Crystal Palace staff, with whom he has been so long on terms of good fellowship. Among them we noticed the Rev. Mr. Delevanti, Mr. James Coward (the well-known organist), Mr. Delevanti, Mr. F. W. Wilson (Superintendent of the Natural History Department at the Crystal Palace), Mr. Rowley (chief engineer), Mr. Whittall (cashier), Mr. Bruce Phillips (Secretary's office), Mr. W. Grist, LL.B. (Norwood News and Sydenham Gazette), Mr. J. Norris (Sydenham Gazette), and many others.

After the chairman had gone through the usual round of loyal "toasts" he demanded attention for the toast of the evening, and, at the conclusion of an eloquent speech, handed the testimonial to Mr. Phasey, amidst loud and continued cheering, which did not subside for some minutes. The testimonial consisted of a handsomely framed address on vellum, illuminated with finish and taste by Mr. Hobbs, member of the band. It reads as follows:—"This testimonial was presented to Mr. A. J. Phasey, bandmaster of the St. George's Rifle Volunteers, by the members of the band, as a token of their esteem for his great professional reputation, and the interest he has taken in the welfare of the band during the five years he has been bandmaster." Appended are the autographs of the members, 24 in number.

Mr. Phasey, on rising, was received with loud cheering. He asserted that if he said he was not equal to the task he would be a coward. He was thankful to the Rifle Volunteer Band for the handsome mark of respect presented him. Next to his family his heart was devoted to them, and he believed that those feelings were reciprocated, as they would go out of their way at any time to serve him. Some fifteen months ago there was a whisper that it was their intention to present him with a testimonial. He at once repudiated the idea, because he thought that it was to a great extent the means of buying a person over ("No, no, not in your case,") but he was pleased that the present they had just made to him had taken the form it had. It was what he least expected. Had it taken the form of jewellery or any article of that kind he would have conscientiously declined it. He considered it the greatest compliment they could have paid him; one hundred pounds would not have been so valuable. The testimonial he would hand down as an heirloom, and he hoped that his son and son's son would retain it after him. He did not believe he deserved the presentation which they had so kindly given to him (cries of "Yes, yes.") He was much pleased to see their esteemed and respected friend Captain Holloway with them that evening. In fact they were not perfect without him, and he (Mr. Phasey) looked forward to the time when that gentleman would occupy a more prominent position in the corps. But why was this testimonial presented to him (cries of "Because you deserve it?") They must remember that the proficiency which they had attained was not only due to himself, but to themselves. He remembered on one occasion Mr. Wilkinson, the highly esteemed manager of the Crystal Palace whose kindness to them could not be sufficiently acknowledged, coming to him to provide a band at a few hours' notice. He hurried to London, found out Sergt. Mackay, asked him if the thing could be done; he answered he thought so; and before the specified time he had arrived at the Crystal Palace with an efficient band, thus proving what could be done when they acted in unison. The consequence was that they had since had many engagements at the Crystal Palace. He was proud of the mark of respect they had presented him with, and could assure them that it would occupy a prominent position in his house. The officers of the regiment as a body had shown much kindness to the band, and he had frequently been complimented, after a march, upon the performance of the band. He believed that they (the band) were respected at the Crystal Palace not only by the visitors and managers, but by the staff, of whom he could not speak in too glowing terms, and he was proud and happy to see several of them present that evening. Mr. Phasey concluded his remarks by thanking them for their present; had it been of the most costly description it could not be more appreciated by him.

—o—

PAULINE LUCCA EAR-FROZEN.

(From the "Hartford Courant.")

One day in the winter of 186—, an elegantly dressed lady walked down the principal street of St. Petersburgh. She was evidently a stranger, and gazed with lively interest on the stately and vast buildings that distinguish the capital of the north. The day was excessively cold, though the sun shone. But the lady, being well provided with furs, seemed to pay little attention to the temperature. Presently a fat old merchant passed, and, looking attentively at her head, said a few words in Russian. The lady smiled and bowed, though she evidently did not understand the language. A few steps further and the same thing happened, the man this time being a labourer. She smiled again, and passed on. The next that accosted her in this fashion was a young and handsome Bojar, who repeated his phrase when he saw no other effect than a smile. The lady seemed not to regard him, and so, in a moment, he seized a handful of snow, and, holding her head with one hand, vigorously rubbed her ears with the snow in the other. A scream and violent resistance followed, but he held her tight and rubbed fresh handfuls of snow on her little ears. The lady called for help lustily, but the crowd that gathered looked on without interfering. At last a lieutenant came near, and, recognising her, explained the matter in German.

"Madame Lucca," he said, "your ears were freezing very rapidly. One does not perceive this one's self, but others notice the purple colour. This young man told you, but seeing you took no notice, he applied the usual remedy."

After this, the prima donna kept very quiet until her ears were safe and then rewarded their saviour. The same thing had happened years ago to Rachel, the great tragedienne, only in that case it was the nose. However, it would have been as bad for a singer to lose her ears as for an actress her nose.

—o—

MOSCHELES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

DEAR MR. EDITOR,—In the Life of Moscheles, edited by his wife, he speaks of the admirable way in which Hummel and Cramer improvised on the piano; I can testify that he was himself equally great. One Sunday morning, when receiving my lesson (on which occasion he was playing Bach's fugues to me), Messrs. Hogarth and Chorley were announced; after listening for some time, they each volunteered to give Moscheles a subject for improvisation. The way in which he worked first one subject, then the other, by augmentation, by diminution, reversing the two subjects till he had exhausted every contrapuntal device, finally fitting them both together, was one of the finest bits of extemporaneous playing I ever heard. It is only just that a man who speaks so highly of his contemporaries should have his own admirable musicianship made known.—I am, Dear Mr. Editor, yours faithfully,

IGNACE GIBSONE.

October 6th, 1873.

Digitized by Google

HOW NILSSON MET NEILSON AT A RECEPTION, AND HOW CAREY, AND THEN BOUCICAULT, CAME IN; HOW MR. PARKE GODWIN SPOKE —AND OF OTHER MATTERS.*

* * * * I had scarce set about this when Mr. Parke Godwin pointed out to all of us the chief notability of the evening. It was the Queen of Song herself; and we all clapped our hands, and went on as if she were the Queen of Hearts instead.

How cleverly the speaker introduced her!—touching with graceful and hearty words upon the lustrous career which, although given to art, had not robbed society of a woman.

That was the point of it all. Society, when we come to think of it, is not in the habit of meeting prima donnas—except to patronize them and applaud them.

This prima donna, standing there in a circle of admiring friends, seemed to say with her severe but kindly face:—I've made you respect me, and, through me, my profession. It's a good thing for both of us; so let's dispense with any further formalities, and have a good time.

An odd club scene, too. Beauty and talent grouped round her, in pleasant but respectful familiarity; women who had won distinction in literature and art shaking hands with her eagerly, and fashion pressing through the crowd to add its tribute of admiration. * * * * * *

"No," said Angeline; "they want to see if that is the dress she was married in at Westminster Abbey."

Alas! what an inadequate notion of their own sex women have.

Nilsson baffled the artistic sense in this situation, as she had so often baffled and confused it in others. No one could tell of what the charm of her personal appearance consisted. Surrounded by beautiful women, she still presented the distinction which your portrait painters call "character," and which, for want of a better term, the average admirer calls beauty. Page and Reinhart and Le Clear were there. * * *

Le Clear said (something). * * * * *

Reinhart said (something). * * * * *

Page said it was * * * * a general irradiation.

Angeline said it was the skirt and the lace, and must have cost $6,000.

Angeline is a weak blonde herself, without any Scandinavian strenuousness. * * * * *

In the one minute that everybody looked at her Nilsson filled all eyes with a Shakespearian fulness. Reinhart was thinking (of something). * * * Howell dreamed (of something). * * * Mdme. Demorest acknowledged that she had not lived in vain. Regamey had to be taken out of the room; * * * Strakosch read his own future in her radiance, but he said (nothing). * * * * * *

Then she faded away indistinctly. Wave after wave of dark and light-haired glory interposed. A whirlpool of swallow-tails swam round her.

Half-an-hour later I saw her in an upper room surrounded by another party. Suddenly they all fell back, and Mr. Henry Mapleson, of London, came up with Miss Neilson on his arm. —Situation!

The two women had never met before, although their names had been confounded by printers and public a thousand times. Neilson was presented to Nilsson. Juliet beamed upon Lucia. Mr. Mapleson's elegant case was not half so nice as the greeting of these women. They grasped hands as cordially as if Shakespeare and Goethe had had the same mission in the world, and Juliet and Mignon were only variations of the same truth.

Once more during the evening I saw the prima donna. It was on the balcony. The electric light fell upon her alabaster face and white dress. She was kissing her hand to the multitude in the street, and for an instant she seemed to be a beautiful statue carved out of the light.

After that the scene in the house passed into a brilliant confusion. It was like a dream. All the bright and clever and beautiful women who had moved and thrilled and charmed me for a season seemed to spring into life. All the eminent artists appeared to be coming out of corners, and to be leaning against statues. It looked odd to me to see Theodore Thomas and Joe Jefferson discussing (something). * * * I looked at a face that beamed with good nature and an indescribable wholesomeness, and that seemed to light up even the grim, veteranish features of Muzio as it glowed upon them, and Carey came back on rich contralto wavelets of sound from the first Nilsson concerts. Where she has been in the interval heaven only knows. I can hear her laugh now while I write, and it sounds as if joy were tumbling down a silver staircase.

* * * * * *

She was praising Varley and Whitney.

It was the same method a mountain brook employs when it praises God.

She flowed on pleasantly without knowing it.

The nervous man with a crowd of listeners about him must be Boucicault. The top of his head shines as if he had carried every one of his plays in his hat a month before mounting it, which is absurd enough, for we all know that he mounted every one of them a month before they were finished.

He doesn't like Salvini.

That's because he didn't write Othello for him, says somebody.

And this, too, is absurd. If you listen you will discover soon enough that Mr. Boucicault knows what he is talking about. A better dramatic critic does not exist, nor a severer one—when his own plays are not to be considered.

* * * * * * * *

And just at this point Major Downing came to the rescue with the torch dance of Meyerbeer. Loveliness then rushed to the window on satin wings * * * and we went home.

Nym Crinkle.

* Extracted from a diverting rhapsody which appeared in the New York World, on the 21st September.

GRATZ.—Mdme Mallinger opened here very successfully as Margherita in M. Gounod's Faust.

LOUVAIN.—M. Hermann Joseph de Swert, the oldest member of the family, and grandfather of Jules de Swert, the violoncellist, died in this town, his birthplace, on the 15th September, having been born on the 2nd September, 1803. He was for many years professor at the Academy of Music here. His burial took place on the 17th Sept., and a service for the repose of his soul was performed on the 30th of the same month by the Confrérie du Sacré Cœur.

STRASBURG.—As already announced in the Musical World, the opening of the newly erected theatre took place on the 3rd September. The Dresdner Theaterzeitung says: "The performance went off without the realization of the fears which had been entertained of some accident or other, intentionally caused by the carpenters employed in working the machinery and shifting the scenes. It was more than three years since the inhabitants had enjoyed a grand theatrical representation, and since French drama and French opera reigned on the stage now occupied by Mozart's Nozze. It was a thoroughly appropriate idea to mark the change which had meanwhile occurred by causing the heroes of German art, Beethoven and Mozart, to address men's minds before any other composers. Music is international; it appeals to the whole world; it is not tied down to the boundaries of language or of territory, and it was Beethoven's 'Weihe des Hauses' which, with its solemn strains, first greeted the assembled public, which was very brilliant. The large house was crowded, and presented a magnificent appearance. After the overture, the manager, Herr Hessler, came forward, and spoke a spirited prologue, written by himself. Then followed Le Nozze di Figaro, which was very well received. The second work performed was Goethe's Egmont. The second opera was Herr R. Wagner's Tannhäuser."

Digitized by Google

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

SECOND CONCERT—THIS DAY—OCTOBER 11th, 1873.

PROGRAMME.

| | |
|---|---|
| OVERTURE, "Oberon" | Weber. |
| ARIA, "In questa Tomba"—Madame Demeric-Lablache | Beethoven. |
| SYMPHONY, "Eroica" | Beethoven. |
| ARIA, "Per pieta non ricercate"—Mr. George Werrenrath | Mozart. |
| CAVATINA, "Ernani fuvolami"—Mdlle. St. Alba | Verdi. |
| SOLO VIOLONCELLO—Mdlle. Platteau | Servais. |
| CAVATINA, "Di tanti palpiti" (Tancredi)—Mdlle. Demeric-Lablache | Rossini. |
| MEDITATION, Violin and Orchestra | Gounod. |
| SONG, "Bi ndina" (No. 5)—Mr. George Werrenrath | Gounod. |
| SONG, "Waiting"—Mdlle. St. Alba | Millard. |
| OVERTURE, "Winter's Tale" | John F. Barnett. |
| Conductor | Mr. Manns. |

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

L. A. L.—Paper on the harmonium to hand. Will appear in an early number.

NOTICE.

To Advertisers.—The Office of the Musical World is at Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co.'s, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11, 1873.

A FEW weeks ago there went the round of the papers a small paragraph which, to many minds, conveyed a great matter. It stated, in the curtest possible way, that Mr. George Grove was about to retire from the post he has so long held at the Crystal Palace. With a promptitude indicative of the wish being father to the thought, most men whom this paragraph interested set it down as a canard; doing so with the more confidence because it appeared in the "silly season," when such birds are common. The story slapped the face of Possibility, and gave to Probability an ignominious kick. What!—separate George Grove from the Crystal Palace! Put a strange name in Crystal Palace advertisements, after "By order," and before "Sec."!—See another man lording it at Sydenham over Grove's heritage! Nay, these things could no more be, we fondly thought, than the Tichborne trial could end, or the Millennium begin. So the paragraph was "basketed" with contempt, the only result of it being that George Grove and the Crystal Palace seemed more firmly united than ever. But in this odd world there is nothing so likely as the unlikely. Jonah had very good reason to trust in his miraculous gourd. It grew for him, and grew to serve a definite purpose, on the fulfilment of which the prophet might have staked whatever was equivalent at Nineveh to "Lombard Street against a China orange." We all know that the gourd withered in a night, leaving poor Jonah with nothing between his head and the weather. To this story we have a parallel in the case of Mr. Grove. Our trust in the "fitness of things," and in their permanency, when, as with the Crystal Palace and its Secretary, they do fit, has proved a delusion and a snare. The little paragraph was right after all. "G. G." and "C. P." will soon lose a connection closer, if not more ancient, than that arising from interest in a common alphabet; and now, we should not be surprised to find even the alphabetical bonds broken that each letter might set up for itself.

It is said that Mr. Grove retires from the Crystal Palace to enter a well-known firm of publishers. On this matter, strictly private as it is, we have nothing to say; but we desire to ask, at once, what the Crystal Palace managers were about when they accepted his resignation. Was Mr. Grove tempted by an addition to those means of life which no man can in these days afford to despise? In that case, and because the Crystal Palace Company is not rich, it should have taken obvious steps to keep its excellent servant, and thus carry out a measure of true economy. Was Mr. Grove overworked?—then the Directors should have handed over their ledgers to Mr. Gardner, and made of "G." a Minister of Fine Arts, charged to control whatever comes within the scope of such an office, and no more. But the opportunity has been allowed to pass. Mr. Grove retires into private life, and those who are interested in the Crystal Palace as a Palace of Art, find themselves looking into a doubtful future.

But it may be said that Mr. Grove passes from the Secretary and Manager's office to the Council Board, and that he will continue his interest in the musical department while occupying a place of greater influence. We try our best to believe this, and have no doubt at all that Mr. Grove intends to be as zealous for Crystal Palace art after his retirement as before. But, on the other hand, we have to look at the matter in the light of such knowledge of men and things as may happen to be possessed. Mr. Grove is too honest to leave his heart at Sydenham when he goes "under St. Pauls." He will take to his new duties all the zeal and devotion that have distinguished him elsewhere, and of necessity the Crystal Palace will occupy but a second place. For this reason—and the reason cannot be disputed—his retirement must be looked upon as a misfortune to the Crystal Palace in general, and to its musical interests in particular. Never could there be a better illustration of the "right man in the right place" than that presented by Mr. Grove at Sydenham—we do not mean in the counting-house, but in the manager's room.

Zeal, verging on enthusiasm; activity, bordering on the phenomenal; knowledge, taste, wide sympathies, and unfailing courtesy—all these qualities combine to make him something as near perfection as this imperfect life of ours can show. Verily there must be something wrong when the Man and his Mission can separate, as they are about to do. We do not pretend to understand the phenomenon; but we can regret it, and hope that the result to the interests, not only of the Palace, but of the art there so much promoted, may prove better than our fears.

—o—

OUR CONTEMPORARIES.

HERR RITTER.

The opinion of the Sunday Times as to M. Rivière's new pianist is definite:—

"He belongs to those foreign pianists who come among us as though they had dropped from some celestial region where heavenly music is discoursed upon ideally perfect instruments like, for example, the harp in 'Another World.' They shake their locks at the audience, scowl at the pianoforte while cotching it with disdainful finger, and treat our best music as cavalierly as who should say, 'This is poor stuff; look how I knock it about.' So it is with M. Ritter. He toyed loftily with Bach's Gavotte in D minor; and, responding to an encore, tossed off one of Schubert's Momens Musicales (that in E minor) much as though both were far beneath him. Nevertheless, M. Ritter has real command over his instrument, especially over its gradations of tone, and his performance of a piece entitled Tourbillon, written by himself, was effective in its way."

THE gentleman who favoured us with a short epistle about Gung'l, last week, requests us to state that his name is not, as printed last week, "Buddle*b*ridge," but Buddle*r*idge. Good. We thought at the time that two B's and two D's, not to speak of eight consonants against four vowels, was something too much of a good thing.

Digitized by Google

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

An Irish paper concludes a biography of Robespierre with the following sentence: "This extraordinary man left no children except his brother, who was killed at the same time."

A St. Petersburgh paper publishes a list of the foreign books prohibited last month by the Russian censorship. Among them were nine German books, treating mostly of religious questions, and three Polish works. Of these latter, one was a small one relating to Chopin.

We announced last week that a daughter of Marschner, worn out by poverty and distress, had hanged herself. Our authority was the Spener Gazette, which seems to have perpetrated a stupid hoax. The husband of the lady writes to say that not only is she living, but in circumstances which put suicide through want entirely out of the question. The Spener Gazette ought to hang itself.

A writer in a paper called the Observer, published at Bradford, where Carl Rosa and his company have, among other things, been giving Italian opera in English, makes the startling discovery that the theme of the air, "Vedrai carino," is the same as that of the duet, "La ci darem la mano," and, moreover, that "it occurs several times in the work under various guises." The "guises" must be artfully contrived; for, to detect the original melody under them would puzzle the most serpent-eared of critics.

From a strange old book, "printed and sold for A. Baldwin, in Warwick Lane, London, 1698," we learn all about the visit to London in that year of M. Sorbière, a French gentleman. Among other things, M. Sorbière tells us that: "Lettice is the great and universal sallet; but I did not find much Roman lettice, because, about ten years ago, a gentleman sending his footman to market, he mistook, and ask'd for Papist lettice, and the ill name has hindered the vent of it ever since!" The liquors of London bore very singular names in 1698, including "Humptie-dumtie, Three Threads, Four Threads, Old Pharoah, Knock-down, Huguatee, Shouldree, Clamber-crown, Hotpots, Newgate-market, Fox-comb, Blind-Pinneau, Stiffile, Twopenny, and Cock-my-Cap!" The common people fed much on hot grey peas and bacon, which were hawked in the streets by women. M. Sorbière thinks that dish too windy for supper, and is inclined to believe that hot ox-cheek and baked wardens (a species of pears) are more wholesome.

Alcestis[*] proclaims itself a musical novel, by the line from Dryden on its title-page:—

"So Love was crowned, but Music won the cause."

It has a double connection with its mythical title. Alcestis is the name of the hero's opera, on which he bases his hopes, his reputation, and even his life; and the part of Alcestis is enacted by the heroine, who sacrifices herself—though all in vain, unlike her Greek prototype—to save the life of the hero. The story is told in quaint but striking language, and forms a sufficiently impressive whole, though the style has a curiously foreign turn, in no way resembling any other English book. The novel opens at Dresden, a hundred years ago. The dress and surroundings of another century are brought before the reader's eye, and steadily kept there without any apparent effort—a sufficiently difficult task in itself, for post-dated stories too often smack of the curiosity shop. Music, naturally, is the theme of the novel. The Capellmeister Hasse forms a prominent figure, with his wife, the once famous prima donna, Faustina Bordoni; the hero is chamber musician to a Prince, first violinist in the Dresden Opera, and composer of Alcestis; the heroine is a well-known singer of those times, Elizabeth Vaara. The author has thus sufficiently original material to work upon, and he has used it well. The novel is not too musical for the most ordinary understanding, while the new scenes and accessories, the quaint incisive and slightly foreign style, lend it an attraction all its own. Alcestis is a novel in all particulars much above the average, and one sure to please all cultivated readers.

Venice.—Nothing has yet been decided with reference to the management of the Fenice.

[*] Smith, Elder, & Co.

PROVINCIAL.

Dublin.—The Irish Times of October 3rd writes that, on the night of the performance of Don Giovanni,—

"The Theatre Royal presented a striking appearance. The house was crowded in every part, in fact, the best filled one we have seen during the engagement of the Italian Opera Company. Their Excellencies the Lord Lieutenant and the Countess Spencer occupied the Viceregal box. The frequenters of the Theatre Royal are never slow in recognizing true merit, and never did they confer honour where it is better deserved than in the case of the brilliantly talented lady whose benefit attracted so large and enthusiastic an audience as that which thronged the theatre last night. We have already alluded to Madame Trebelli Bettini's charming rendering of the part of Zerlina. It is a performance distinguished by singular art, and never fails to command adequate success. The main features of the opera were such as we have already noticed, Madame Tietjens and Mdlle. Sinico were, as usual, perfect in the parts of Donna Anna and Donna Elvira. Signors Zerbini, Borella, Perkins and Zoboli sang and acted excellently. The chorus and orchestra were even better than on the last occasion of the production of Don Giovanni, and reflected much credit on Signor Li Calsi, one of the most able conductors of the day. Lucia di Lammermoor will shortly be produced, with Mdlle. Alwina Valleria in the title rôle."

Leicester.—The Leicester Chronicle contains some remarks on the concert given at Mr. Tebbutt's new Lecture Hall, which we subjoin:—

"The new Lecture Hall which has been erected through the private enterprise of Mr. Tebbutt, was formally opened on Monday evening (the 29th September), when a concert was given under the direction of Mr. H. Nicholson, on behalf of the Leicester Provident Dispensary. Taking into consideration counter attractions, the audience was fashionable and fairly encouraging. A programme as varied as it was excellent was prepared, and received the fullest justice at the hands of Mdme. Thaddeus Wells, Messrs. Tebbutt, Orlando Christian, H. Nicholson, Frank Weston, E. J. Crow, and the Leicester Anemoic Union. Mdme. Wells sang 'L'Adieu,' and Pinsuti's 'I love my love,' and with Mr. Henry Nicholson evoked loud plaudits in some cleverly executed variations upon 'O dolce concento.' Mr. Tebbut acquitted himself creditably in Kücken's 'Thou with dark eyes beaming,' and Nelson's 'Red cross banner;' while in 'The Raft,' Hatton's 'Twenty Years,' and Maynard's 'Homeward Bound,' Mr. Orlando Christian displayed admirably the fine qualities of his voice. Mr. Weston's fantasia, 'O Cara Memoria,' and the 'Carnival de Venice' proved that the instrumentalist was fully acquainted with the powers of his instrument, and fully capable of displaying them to the best advantage. The solos of the Anemoic Union were on the whole most tastefully performed, and seemed to be generally appreciated. On the whole the entertainment was of a most enjoyable character, the only regret felt being that the number who participated in the pleasure of the evening was not much larger."

Liverpool.—The following, apropos of a recent concert given at Liverpool by Sir Julius Benedict, is taken from the Daily Post:—

"We do not grudge the veteran conductor of the Philharmonic Concerts his benefit, when he provides for us talent so excellent and so varied as that we listened to on Saturday, but is it not a little early in the autumn for what is really the beginning of the winter musical season? On such a lovely autumnal day as Saturday was one does not like to be reminded of 'Winter, dreary winter;' and what vacant places there were in the boxes were probably owing to so large a portion of Liverpool society being still in the country enjoying the fine weather so long delayed. There was certainly no lack of attractiveness in the programme. There were old favourites and young débutantes, and among the former we must now place Mademoiselle Albani, who was enthusiastically applauded in the scena from Donizetti's Ugo, Conte di Parigi, in which she fully exhibited her undeniably great vocal powers. What a contrast was Mozart's familiar duet, 'La Dove Prende.' Here Mademoiselle Albani and Mr. Santley sang with excellent taste and vocalization, and thoroughly deserved the hearty encore they received. The simple cavatina 'Pur Dicesti' in the second part of the concert was also very charmingly sung. Miss Edith Wynne sang the two Welsh airs, 'The Ash Grove' and 'The Bells of Aberdovey,' about as well as it is possible to sing them, and gave the scena from Der Freischütz with great spirit. The remaining female artists were Miss Helen D'Alton and Miss Julia Wigan, to both of whom this concert was our first introduction. Of both our impression is most favourable. For Miss D'Alton, who possesses a mezzo-soprano voice of considerable power and fineness, it is safe to predict a very successful career. She has great natural feeling, and that very excellent thing in ballad singers—perfect enunciation. Sullivan's 'Golden days' seemed pleasanter than ever from her lips, and it would be difficult to surpass the exquisite tenderness with which she sang a very touching song by Madame Sainton-Dolby, which we think is new, 'He thinks I do not love him.' Miss Julia Wigan's fresh and pleasant looks, and her voice, which seemed their natural accompaniment, succeeded at once in gaining the good will of her audience. Though evidently nervous, she sang the parts allotted to her with a correctness and grace that produced a very favourable impression. Her voice is pure and clear, and not deficient in power. One wearies of always praising Mr. Santley, who sang, and was of course encored in M. Gounod's 'Maid of Athens,' and also Hatton's 'To Anthea,' which he has recently made his own in so striking a way. Mr. Edward Lloyd's principal task was Blumenthal's ever popular 'Message,' which he sang very well. Signor Caravoglia seemed more at home in Campana's ballad, 'Vivere e gedere' than in the serenade, 'Dormi Pur,' which surely was never intended for so ponderous a voice. M. Sainton gave a fantasia on Scotch airs, and assisted Sir Julius Benedict in the andante and finale from his pianoforte and violin sonata. Mrs. Beesley and Mdlle. Michiels, with Sir Julius and Mr. Lindsay Sloper, performed one of the conductor's quartets on two pianofortes."

Digitized by Google

The following, apropos of a recent concert given by Miss Sophie Heilbron, is from a Liverpool paper:—

"We have often had to notice the appearance of youthful prodigies, few of whom have ever attained to any real eminence in their profession as they advanced in age; but we have seldom heard any who displayed so much real musician-like feeling and natural intelligence as the young lady who played last night for the first time before a Liverpool audience. Possessed of a vigorous touch and very perfect executive powers, which were displayed to the utmost in her solos, Weber's Concertstück, and Liszt's fearfully exigent arrangements of the waltz in Faust, Miss Heilbron fully supported the character she had acquired elsewhere of a conscientious artist in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, which she rendered admirably in conjunction with Mr. E. W. Thomas. Her performance of the accompaniment to Servais's duet for violoncello was no less satisfactory, except that in the closing movement she rather ran away regardless of the difficulties of the violoncello part. Mr. Weston, who shows a marked improvement since we heard him last, was fortunately equal to the occasion. We are glad to hear he has been selected by Mr. De Jong as principal violoncello. To return to the fair pianist, we would remark that her phrasing was most intelligent, her tempos were clearly defined, and her shake was perfect. She is especially good in left-hand passages, like those in Wallace's Cracovienne, and gives promise of taking a very high position. Mr. E. W. Thomas played remarkably well both in Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto and arrangements from William Tell, and received the applause he so well deserved. Miss Marie Arthur made a successful re-appearance since her return from London, and sang several songs with taste. Mr. Schneider accompanied the vocal music."

Bradford.—We take the subjoined from the Bradford Observer, part of an article of some pretensions, describing a recent performance of Don Giovanni (in English), at St. George's Hall, in which our admirable native singer, Miss Rose Hersee, took a leading part:—

"Miss Rose Hersee at least equalled her previous efforts in her impersonation of Zerlina. Her voice, if not powerful, is pure in quality, and capable of modulation, while her command over her face and figure is astonishing in one evidently so young. Her conception of the village coquette last night could not have been truer. The air, 'Canst thou see me unforgiven?', so well known by its Italian commencement, 'Batti, Batti,' with its wonderful violoncello accompaniment, is one of the features of the opera, and Miss Hersee sang it to perfection, the change from the pleading andante to the joyous allegro being marked with fine effect. The allegro had to be repeated in answer to a rapturous encore. She was also encored in 'Come, shall I tell thee?' ('Vedrai carino') the fascinating air of which occurs several times in the work under various guises. The duet with Don Giovanni, 'Give me thy hand' ('La ci darem'), the theme of which is the same, was a great treat.

About Mr. Carl Rosa's conducting, the same journal has the following:—

"The few choruses in the work were splendidly done, particularly the one at the close of the second act. The magnificent instrumentation of the opera was finely rendered by the band, under the bâton of M. Carl Rosa, to whom too much credit cannot be given for the care which he has taken in the training of the band, chorus, and principals in the details, on which the success of the work so much depends."

The other singers in the opera were Mdlle. Vaneri (Donna Anna), Miss Lucy Franklein (Donna Elvira), Signor Mottino (Don Giovanni), Mr. Aynsley Cook, who is reported to have "kept the house in a roar with his acting" (Leporello), Mr. Howell (Masetto), Mr. Chatterton (Don Ottavio), and Mr. Arthur Stevens (the Commandant, both in flesh and in stone); so it may be surmised that the Carl Rosa "troop" is efficient in every department. The Bradford season came to an end with an excellent performance of La Sonnambula, Miss Rose Hersee being, of course, the Amina.

Deal.—We learn from the Deal Mercury that—

"Mr. W. B. Harrison's fourth concert was still more successful than the previous one. The room filled so rapidly that many persons could not obtain admission. Those who did so were amply repaid by the admirable selection of pieces, all of which gave the greatest satisfaction. There were three encores, Miss Jessie Royd well earning the first by her simple and artistic rendering of 'Robin Adair.' Mr. Selwyn Graham sang with heart and voice; and Mr. Harrison, we feel, may rest assured that his great talent as a pianist and composer are fully appreciated."

Exeter.—The Exeter Oratorio Society recently inaugurated its winter series of performances with Barnett's Ancient Mariner and Acis and Galatea. Possibly the audience found the programme too long; certain it is that they did not evince much enthusiasm, nor did the soprano of the night, Miss Ellen Horne, sing nearly so well as we have heard her on previous occasions in London and elsewhere. There was a single re-demand, which solitary compliment rewarded the taste and precision with which the Misses Ellen Horne and Marion Severn gave the duet, "Fly, brother, fly" (Ancient Mariner). The tenor and baritone music was admirably rendered by Mr. Henry Guy and Mr. Wadmore, while the band and chorus were efficient. There was a crowded attendance.—On Saturday and Monday, October 4th and 6th, the popular Vance gave his amusing entertainment. He possesses a nice voice, dances well, and can always manage to raise a laugh without having recourse to anything questionable or low. All his songs won "double encores." The present prima donna of the party, Miss Sestini Wilson, is gifted with a powerful soprano voice, and the effect of her voice is enhanced by her artistic execution. She contributed Arditi's "Il Bacio," and its sister valse, "L'Arditi," &c., and had to return to the platform more than once. The lady-like and animated Miss Kate Starley was obliged to repeat several of her "serio-comic" effusions, and, with Mr. Braham Sharpe (an excellent pianist) and "Cavalli" (a youthful violinist of promise), completed Mr. Vance's list of performers. A magnificently costumed petite burlesque called The Three Graces, and Mr. Vance's "make-up" when he sang "Have you seen the Shah?" were among the principal attractions of the evening.—We may mention, en passant, that Emma Stanley has been here, and received a fair amount of patronage.—The business at the Theatre is tolerable. Herr Schulze, of "Masks and Faces" celebrity, appeared on Monday last. The house on that occasion was not large.—W. S. J.

Brighton.—Our city, writes a correspondent, is becoming quite gay. Visitors are arriving daily, and amusements, in consequence, are "looking up." The Japanese Troupe and Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke have been fully patronised. We may notice, en passant, that the Guardian says, "a modification of the usual seating arrangements (at Messrs. Maskelyne and Cooke's entertainment), introduced by Messrs. Lyon and Hall, was much appreciated by the audience."—Mr. Kuhe's "Grand Annual Concert" took place in the Dome Assembly Rooms, and attracted, as usual, an enormous audience. Mdlle. Albani was the prima donna, and gained universal approbation for her charming singing. Miss Helen D'Alton, Miss Julia Wigan, and Miss Edith Wynne were the other ladies; and Mr. Edward Lloyd, Signor Caravoglia, and Mr. Santley completed the list of vocalists. Mr. Lloyd pleased very much by his nice voice and excellent style of singing, and Mr. Santley made quite a furore by his delivery of Mr. J. L. Hatton's "Wreck of the Hesperus," which he was called upon to repeat, but "he didn't," he gave instead M. Gounod's "Maid of Athens." Signor Caravoglia was, as usual, received with great favour, his "Largo al factotum" being one of his most popular songs. The instrumental part of the programme devolved upon the concert-giver; and MM. Sainton and Paque, with Mr. Kuhe, played the andante and finale from one of Mendelssohn's trios; M. Sainton also playing his own solo, "Scotch airs," and M. Paque a transcription of an air by Donizetti, and a gavotte by Martini. M. Kuhe's solos were a nocturne by Chopin, and a valse caprice by Mr. F. Cowen, for which he was warmly applauded and recalled. Mr. Lindsay Sloper ably accompanied the vocal music, and the seating arrangements were capitally managed by Messrs. R. Potts and Co.—Madame Patey is announced to sing at the Aquarium concert this day; Mr. Sims Reeves will appear for "four nights only," at the theatre, in ballad operas; Mdlle. Carlotta Patti is to sing at Messrs. Cramer's evening concert, Oct. 18th, and their morning concert, Oct. 24th; Mr. Kuhe to give three pianoforte recitals in the Dome, and six "English Opera recitals," in the same locale, with Mr. Carl Rosa's English Opera Company in November; Mr. Charles Hallé and Mdme. Norman-Neruda, a "Grand Pianoforte and Violin Recital," on Thursday morning, Oct. 16th; Messrs. R. Potts & Co. have made arrangements with Mr. Arthur Chappell for a series of "London Monday Popular Concerts," in November and December; and the London Glee and Madrigal Union, under the direction of Mr. Land, will sing at the Aquarium on Saturday next, being the fourth time of their engagement at those concerts.

Digitized by Google

NOTES UPON NOTES.

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

Poor patient music masters, at this season of the year, are wont to sniff the sea air, trying to forget the pupses "Thumb upon G," &c., &c. I heard of a professor who took apartments in a quiet, rural spot, concluding that he might there be away from all the pomp and vanity of this wicked world, in the shape of polkas, galops, and all such-like little abominations. He arrived at his new lodgings in the evening, and slept soundly until he dreamed a dream. He heard a pianoforte, and fancied all his pupils were running after him. Gradually waking, he did indeed hear a pianoforte, writhing under the agony of a touch that shivered, and shook, and stammered under the influence of a fond parent, who whacked his son in the parental fashion in "which he should go"—but go he did not, even with the fond parient's counting "a one, and a two, and a three, and a one, and a two, and a three, and a ——. This was too much for the poor persecuted professor; he left the apartments. It is to be hoped he did not run into the arms of a brass band, for they really haunt professor's houses; and without really wishing to be uncharitable, the only way a musical professor can hope to get rid of the "brass" is, in summer-time, to open the windows, and try to play them down with cross accent and slight syncopations. This often produces counter-irritation, and causes a mizzle, or musical skedaddle. The recipe is to take the upper part of the pianoforte and the lowest bass, leaving the brass band in the middle, a little after the manner of Rossini's style of instrumentation, only not quite so good. Time waits for no man; it is only one's pupils that will not wait for Time. I remember my father singing a duet with a gentleman. It so happened that they had to sing from the same copy, and this professor disturbed my father's equanimity very much by marking the time of every note with his thumb. This gentleman, who was unrivalled in his style of singing, had a tenor voice of great sweetness, power, and flexibility; six feet high and a leetle bit over, proportionately stout; always looking the picture of good health, yet as lackadaisical as an affected young lady; a great dandy; was very fond of good living, and an excellent cook. I went to dine with him one day, when he was attired in a white night-cap and slippers, occasionally tasting the savoury viands, and telling me what a treat we had in store, occasionally indulging in a few "roulades," to the edification of himself and neighbours.—I should mention that this redoubtable tenor lived in a very quiet locality, where there were no horses or vehicles passing.—Tasted again—a few more flourishes, and then called to his son to take a tea cup, and in "an humble" style: bring a pennyworth of mixed pickles, adding, most persuasively, now be a good boy. The good boy went and returned, dangling the tea cup in his fingers, and presented it to his worthy paternal, when, lo, and behold! the cup was minus the pickles; the good boy having dangled the cup, and dangled the pickles out of it. The countenances of both father and son fell. The padre's assumed a wrathful aspect. The son, therefore, ran (or bolted), not wishing to receive a gentle kick, which his progenitor aimed at him, and, in doing so, the slipper flew out of doors, and was carried away by a passing dog. The good boy returned presently, howling away, and was told to go upstairs to his practice. The moral to be gained from this circumstance is that (in a musical point of view) practice should not be considered a punishment; and, in this instance, the real well-wisher to his child considered that, in overlooking the practice, it was necessary to beat in the Time, to the great grief and consternation of the grandmother, who appealed to me to go and protect her grandson, causing me (having some respect for my sacred person) to expostulate, saying "that I might get the worst of it." Directly the father left the house, the young gentleman took up a spit, and giving his grandmother an old stick, commenced a sort of broadsword combat—his grandmother looking over her spectacles—and every time young hopeful gave her a thrust (stamping his foot in true dramatic style) she would say, "Ah! he's a bad boy," although she did not like any one else calling him so. And these are all, I believe, swept from the face of the earth; the last I heard of one of the parties is that he was a policeman, and taught the pianoforte. I am afraid that coercion will not increase a love or taste for music, but would have the contrary effect. Of course, there must be a certain amount of labour to acquire any mechanical facility, but let it be a labour of love.

What a most invaluable work to musicians is The Life of Moscheles—how full of interest, and, indeed, instruction!—how it gives you an insight into the practical life of a musician! What an influence Moscheles had on musical art generally—as a composer, performer, and teacher!—and how admirably he taught the world at large by his various elementary works! He had such perfect knowledge of mechanism—the means required—and how to arrive at those means. His Studies must be, for a long time to come, studies indeed to all who really study music, practically as well as theoretically; and what real musician does not consider himself a student all his life. The really great Moscheles felt all this—the study of his art, even practically, seemed to be a part of his religion;—in fact, in looking through his life, one cannot but feel that his art was (a part of himself, and) studied under the government of the highest and noblest principles. The good man-musician. His devoted friendship to Mendelssohn—always giving to his former pupil the first place. Moscheles showed his own greatness in all this. It is really a great privilege and a real pleasure to be brought so completely into the inner life of the great musician. His concertos, how splendidly written in form!—combining the Bravura with the Classical style; rich in ideas; how skilfully instrumented!—adding new life to the pianoforte; what fine passages of technical difficulty! (apparently not formed on harmonies) and even having the appearance of being written from the fingers, yet no doubt written away from the instrument—always so interesting, and, indeed, full of imagination! In the G minor Concerto (which I heard him play at the Philharmonic so splendidly, and which I fancy was the last time he played at that Society), how charming is the first Tutti!—really a model for young composers, so calm and dignified, and so original. Again, the first entry of the pianoforte, how majestic! at once asserting supremacy—but, in fact, one never felt that the pianoforte was weak or deficient in power in the Concertos of the gifted Moscheles—the instrumentation never hinders but aids the performer; producing the same results, only by different means, that Rossini did in instrumenting for the voice. Then, what real interest there is in the passages of execution!—Moscheles and Hummel always appearing to unite so well the Classical and Bravura styles. The Concerto in E flat (with the three drums) appears to me as difficult in point of execution as any composition that had gone before it, or that has appeared since. It requires such command of the keyboard—all over, and about everywhere—requiring a great amount of tone, varied in every possible way. Passages not accompanying the orchestra so much, as it is the pianoforte player that is accompanied, so that, as pianoforte music, the genius of the instrument is perhaps more fully developed than in the Concertos of Mozart or Beethoven; where, in some cases, it may appear that the Concerto is for the orchestra with pianoforte obbligato. My late much revered master, Cipriani Potter, thought highly of Moscheles and his works. When I first came to London, as a boy, I remember to have heard, in those days, that J. B. Cramer and Moscheles were considered rivals by some people; and it was the saying of that day that J. B. Cramer excelled in expression, taste, and feeling, and Moscheles was "all execution." I cannot think this was a very "wise saw," nor do I fancy there was a feeling of rivalry between the two great men themselves—certainly it was never carried to the pitch that existed in the days of Dussek and Steibelt, when partisanship ran so high between the Dussekites and the Steibeltites. It is reported, on one occasion, when Steibelt (who was considered to have extraordinary power, combined with sweetness,) commenced his Concerto à la Chasse, at the first chord the strings snapped, and it was proved that some one had tampered with the strings of the pianoforte. I remember taking a note to Moscheles from Cipriani Potter, begging the loan of the parts to The Fall of Paris Variations. I shall never forget being so struck with Mdme. Moscheles, so beautiful and so kind in manner, while lending me the orchestral parts. As Bravura Variations, brilliant to a degree, one cannot help thinking they have never been surpassed, and, indeed, compositions of that class have sadly degenerated. From what I heard generally, Moscheles himself added to the difficulties he had already written when he played the Variations himself. In the "Recollections of Ireland" a new form of composition at that time, and of which Moscheles was the originator, how lovely the first Tutti! giving at the commencement the idea and feeling of recollection; and the first startling opening, away from the key—how much real genius there is in all this! Prior to the publication of this Fantasia, the third page from the end, where there are imitations, &c., given of the three airs introduced, it is so skilfully written, and if possible, it must have been still more skilfully played by the composer, that well-trained musicians believed that all three airs were strictly played together. On one occasion, some kind friends and well-wishers of mine had announced me to play a sonata at a public concert, where Moscheles and Mendelssohn both performed solos. I am proud at this distance of time to think that I had the modesty to disappoint (?) the audience by not performing on that occasion. Mendelssohn was most kind to me, and I enjoyed the privilege of a long conversation with him, respecting his first sonata, which he called "one of his early sins." On one occasion, just after Moscheles had been playing something that I cannot recollect, Mendelssohn showed the delight he had in listening to him by his countenance, and kept exclaiming, "How like Moscheles that is!" evidently entering into the individuality of style in Moscheles, both as composer and executant. Some years later I had the advantage of playing, in public, Moscheles' "Homage to Handel" with the gifted author.—Mr. Cipriani Potter had told me of many things that Moscheles required in a duet he played with him, at some concert, particularly about some shakes, etc.—The Life of Moscheles, so beautifully written, is food to the mind of a musician; how he gathered his experiences, and when full of them, and amidst great worldly gain and prosperity, retiring (as it may be almost termed) to Leipsic, to the Musical Academy there, which he seemed to love and cherish, although he seemed to have had something to bear up against. Can such things ever be in Germany? The finishing touch to the picture—the closing scene—so exquisitely and affectingly told, in a few words that speak volumes, will, I believe, make every one say, on closing the book, "so ends, happily, the life of a good man, great in his art." W. H. Holmes.

Digitized by Google

MADAME ANNA BISHOP.

(From the "Napa Daily Register.")

The City Hall Rink was the scene of a bright and fashionable gathering of ladies and gentlemen last evening, assembled to listen to one of the most talented concert troupes we have yet had in Napa. The illustrious prima donna, Madame Anna Bishop, was in splendid voice, and rendered the cavatina, from Donizetti, with marvellous skill. Her ballad, "Home, sweet home," was exquisite, and in the simplicity of its conception and the witchery of its delivery, it seemed to us that she recalled the dreams of her youth, and longed with a heart yearning for "the lowly thatched cottage again!"

Frank Gilder is certainly the king of pianists, and in his wonderful execution astonished his listeners and charmed the young ladies by his grace and finish. Alfred Wilkie has a rich tenor voice, and, in Stephen Massett's, new song, "Happy as a king," created quite a furore, being loudly encored, as he was, also, in that ever-welcome "Sunset," by the same composer. Mr. Gottschalk gave Balfe's "Heart bowed down" with great feeling and expression, his fine baritone voice being heard to great advantage in Verdi's "Infelice." The laughing trio, "Via-de-vese-qua," sent the audience into convulsions, many joining in hilarious laughter, the young ladies of the Seminary enjoying it amazingly.

Madame Bishop is now on a triumphant tour through California. To night she and her gifted troupe sing in Vallejo, where, we understand, every seat is taken at Farragut Hall. She then goes to Sonoma, Santa Rosa, Sacramento, Stockton, Los Angeles, and San Diego; thence to the Sandwich Islands, Japan, China, Manilla, Singapore, British India, Egypt, all up the Mediterranean, then up the Bosphorous, staying at Constantinople; thence to Red Hook on the Hudson River, where her husband's relatives reside. Success attend her!

WAIFS.

The Leipsic Gewandhaus concerts began on October 2nd.

A statue of Donizetti has been placed in the foyer of the Milan Scala.

Mdme. Felix, mother of the celebrated Rachel, has just died, at the age of seventy-five.

The King of Sweden has presented Herr Julius Rietz with the order of the Star of the North.

The Carl Rosa Operatic Company has been playing this week, with great success, at Sheffield.

A débutante, Mdlle. Ferucci, has achieved success at the Grand Opéra, by playing Valentina in Les Huguenots.

Mr. W. B. Healey left Liverpool for New York on Tuesday, to fulfil his duties with the Maretzek Italian Opera Company.

Spontini's Nurmahal and Fernand Cortez are to be revived at the Berlin Opera, where Delibes' Le Roi l'a dit has been produced.

We regret to learn that M. Faure has suspended his performances at the Grand Opera, in consequence of an illness "assez serieuse."

Signor G. Tartaglione has been appointed, by Dr. Wylde, one of the professors at the London Academy of Music, St. George's Hall.

Mdlle. Ida Corani is engaged for the ensuing opera season at Florence. She will make her début as Leonora, and then appear in the Ballo in Maschera.

The MS. score of the Creation, with annotations in Haydn's own handwriting, now in the possession of Herr Molk, of Peine, is said to be for sale.

The new version of Gounod's Mireille will be produced at the Italian Opera, St. Petersburgh, with Patti, Scalchi, Nicolini, Graziani and Bagagiolo in the cast.

M. Strakosch has associated with himself, in the management of the Théâtre Italien, M. Merelli, late director at the Imperial Opera at Moscow and St Petersburgh.

According to Le Ménestrel, Mdlle Albani has been detained in London by the illness of her father. If so, she has relieved her anxiety by occasional singing in the provinces.

Signor Schira has returned from Italy. One of the earliest operas to be produced at the autumn and winter season in Milan is, we are informed, to be this gifted composer's opera, Leah.

Up to September 30th, La Fille de Madame Angot brought to the treasury of the Folies Dramatiques no less than 1,013,000 francs. At the 221st representation the receipts were 5,225 francs.

Abbé Liszt will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of his artistic life at Pesth, November 9th, when his new oratorio, Christ, will be performed. A medal has already been struck in honour of the event.

Mdlle. Ilma di Murska has arrived in New York, to fulfil her engagements at Mr. Maretzek's Italian Opera. She is, according to the New York papers, looking wonderfully well. That she will sing wonderfully well there can be little doubt.

We learn from our profoundly informed contemporary, the Gazette Musicale, that Mdme. Arabella Goddard has entered upon an artistic tour at the Antipodes, in association with Miss Christian and Mr. J. Hill, who are described as "distinguished pupils of the London Royal Academy of Music."

Master Henry Walker, Mr. F. B. Jewson's clever pupil, who was recently awarded the bronze and silver medals at the Royal Academy of Music, sails for America on the 16th inst., for a three months tour. An enterprising concert giver in the United States is, we are informed, to reward the young pianist with a thousand pounds for his services during that period.

The Observer says:—

"The British Orchestral Society's concerts will not commence, as heretofore, in November. Six concerts will be given in January, February, and March next. At each concert an original work by an English composer will be produced. The most eminent English vocalists will appear, amongst them Mr. Sims Reeves, who has generously announced his intention to give his valuable services gratis, 'as a mark of sympathy for brother artistes.'"

Mdme. Sinico has been delighting our Irish friends by her performance of the heroine in M. Flotow's Martha. The Freeman's Journal says that, "For Mdme. Sinico a genuine triumph was reserved in her singing of the "Qui sola, virgin rosa," which was heard with silent delight. She was rapturously encored, and repeated the old world famous 'Last Rose' with a soft tenderness and beauty of expression, demanding and deserving the enthusiastic applause which she received."

Referring to Sir Julius Benedict's concert, the Liverpool Porcupine says of Miss Julia Wigan, who will appear at the Bristol Festival:—

"Miss Wigan—a débutante, we think—has a mezzo-soprano voice of unusual beauty, full and rich in tone, and of even quality throughout. She phrases well, enunciates distinctly, and has been well trained. Her best effort was in the air from the Lily of Killarney, 'I'm Alone,' which she sang with much feeling and good appreciation of the dramatic sentiment of the composition."

The Sydney Choral Society, which for many years has been the medium of producing the oratorios and cantatas of the great composers, under the leadership of Herr Carl Schmitt, has changed its name to that of the Philharmonic Society, and is placed under the leadership of Mr. Rea. Mdlle. Claus, the violinist, and Mdlle. Rekel, vocalist, have just returned from Brisbane. Mdlle. Claus received a flattering acknowledgment of her clever playing. The Italian Opera troupe are about to proceed to Adelaide.—Sydney Herald.

In some recent remarks in the public press upon the hardship inflicted upon officers ordered to the West Coast of Africa, and who are running the risk of death, it was suggested that even those who possessed Life Assurance Policies were compelled to forfeit them upon being detained for this dangerous service. We are informed that this impression is erroneous with regard to the policies issued by one old-established office—"The Mutual," of King Street, Cheapside. Since 1868, "The Mutual" has guaranteed its policy-holders against all risks of foreign travel, and every other contingency, without extra premium, in every case where the policy is five years old and the life is 30.

The concerts to be given by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. Barnby, during the coming season, will be in the highest degree interesting. Handel's oratorio, Theodora (with additional accompaniments by Dr. Hiller), and Bach's Christmas Oratorio may be mentioned as amongst the most important works selected for performance, not only on account of their intrinsic excellence, but because they are great novelties in this country; and we are also glad to find that Mendelssohn's St. Paul is included in the prospectus. There will be a repetition of the Passion week performances, which were commenced last year, the only alteration being that on two evenings Bach's St. John Passion Music will be given. The first concert, Handel's Theodora, is announced for Thursday, the 30th inst.

Digitized by Google

As the recent letter of M. Gounod to the Paris Figaro, respecting the case "Littleton v. Gounod," might lead to the supposition either that the plaintiff had given up his claim for damages and costs, or was acquainted with the person who had satisfied the demand, we think it right to state that the full amount was paid, in cash, by a solicitor to Messrs. Shaen and Roscoe, "on behalf of M. Gounod's friends," and that neither Mr. Littleton nor his professional advisers have received the slightest intimation as to the name of the donor.—Musical Times.

Signor Campobello seems to be pleasing the Irish critics, judging from their reports. The Freeman's Journal, writing about the performance of Le Nozze de Figaro, says, "We cannot close without bearing high testimony to the excellent manner in which Signor Campobello (as the Count) acquitted himself in the singing of the aria, 'Vedro mentr' io sospiro;' he delivered it with force and softness, and in a style worthy of a genuine artist." And about his Valentin, in Faust, the same journal says, "We have to remark that Signor Campobello acted and sang most respectably as Valentin, a part in which he was exposed to severe contrasts, and in which he did himself much honour. We will not be surprised to hear of Signor Campobello taking an exalted position on the lyric stage, as we have known few artists whose improvement has been so rapid and decided as his."

SPA.—The Musical Festival lately celebrated here proved highly successful.

ROME.—The autumn season at the Teatro Apollo will be inaugurated by M. Gounod's Faust. The next opera will be Der Freischütz.

PALERMO.—The steamer conveying Signor Scalvini's company to this place from Messina was overtaken by so severe a storm that the Captain was compelled, for the purpose of lightening his vessel, to throw overboard a large portion of his cargo, including all the scenery, dresses, and appointments belonging to the company, so that, on landing, the latter were utterly destitute of everything required for stage use, and had to write off at once to Naples, for a fresh supply of scenery, property, and dresses.

FLORENCE.—The season was inaugurated at the Teatro Pagliano by Rossini's Semiramide, put upon the stage with a degree of splendour and magnificence quite unusual here. The principal parts, Semiramide, Arsace, and Azur, were admirably sustained by Signore Rosa-Checchi, Dory, and Signor Marly; indeed, every one, from the conductor, Signor Mabellini, down to the humblest member of the chorus, did his, or her, very best. The rehearsals of Pacini's Niccolò d'Lapi have commenced.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d., by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

THE ART OF SINGING.

New Edition, Revised and Improved, of

A COURSE OF STUDY AND PRACTICE FOR

THE VOICE,

By T. A. WALLWORTH.

A method as used by the Author for his Pupils in the Royal Academy of Music, and upon which have been cultivated the voices of many successful vocalists now before the public.

Full Music size, price 7s.

London: HAMMOND & Co. (late JULLIEN), 5, Vigo Street; and of the Author, at his residence, 86, Wimpole Street.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each 3 6

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Now Ready.

THE

RAISING

OF

LAZARUS.

AN

ORATORIO.

BY

JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT

Price, in paper covers, 8s.; bound in cloth, 10s. 6d.

NOVELLO & CO.,
BERNERS STREET.
LONDON.

Digitized by Google

THE ROYAL EDITION

OF

NATIONAL SONGS.

In 4 volumes, price 2s. 6d. each in paper, or 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF SCOTLAND.

Edited by COLIN BROWN and J. PITTMAN.

A collection of 150 songs with Pianoforte accompaniment. Introduction and Glossary.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF WALES.

Edited by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

A collection of the most beautiful melodies adapted to appropriate Welsh and English words. The Welsh words written expressly for the work by Ceiriog Hughes. The new English words by John Oxenford, Walter Maynard, and C. L. Kenney. The best poems of Sir Walter Scott, Mrs. Hemans, and other celebrated writers, have been preserved. The volume also contains the songs lately sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Santley at the Ballad Concerts, including "She must be mine," "When morning is breaking," "A Gentle Maid," &c. (now published for the first time), as well as all the well-known ballads, "The Ash Grove," "The Men of Harlech," the Bells of Aberdovy," &c.

Now ready,

THE

SONGS OF ENGLAND.

Edited by J. L. HATTON.

A collection of 100 of the best English songs of the last three centuries.

In a few days,

THE

SONGS OF IRELAND.

Edited by J. L. MOLLOY.

This volume will contain 100 songs, including all the best of Moore's Irish Melodies, with many other songs generally unknown, and now published for the first time.

LONDON:

BOOSEY & CO.,

HOLLES STREET.

Dedicated by Special Permission to

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF EDINBURGH.

Marie Alexandrowna Waltz,

BY

CHARLES GODFREY,

Band Master Royal Horse Guards (Blues),

AUTHOR OF THE WALTZES

"Princess Louise," "Princess Beatrice," "Love Dreams," "Blush Rose," &c.

Price FOUR SHILLINGS.

LONDON:

ASHDOWN & PARRY,

HANOVER SQUARE.

And to be had of every Musicseller and Bookseller in the United Kingdom, the Colonies, and India.

Digitized by Google

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

LLEWELYN,

A Dramatic Cantata.

The English Words by THOMAS OLIPHANT
(HONORARY SECRETARY TO THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY).

The Welsh Words by TALHAIARN.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY JOHN THOMAS

(PENCERDD GWALIA),
Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL SCORE, HANDSOMELY BOUND, PRICE ONE GUINEA AND A-HALF.

THE FOLLOWING PIECES PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| RECITATIVE AND WAR SONG, "Firm as the sea-girt rock" Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. | 3 | 0 |
| RECITATIVE AND AIR, "Oh! fain would I recall the days" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne. | 4 | 0 |
| LEGENDARY BALLAD (in A minor), "Gelert's Grave" (Bedd Gelert) Sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby. | 4 | 0 |
| Ditto (in C minor) | 4 | 0 |
| DUET, "Oh, joy beyond expressing" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Sims Reeves. | 3 | 0 |
| BRIDAL MARCH (Arranged as a Pianoforte Duet) | 4 | 0 |
| RECITATIVE AND AIR, "Brave Sons of Cambria" Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. | 2 | 6 |
| TERZETTO, "Long may ye live" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. | 3 | 0 |

The Choral and Orchestral Parts published separately.

THE BRIDE OF NEATH VALLEY,

A Welsh Scene.

The English Words by HENRY F. CHORLEY.
The Welsh Version by TALHAIARN.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY JOHN THOMAS

(PENCERDD GWALIA),
Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL SCORE, HANDSOMELY BOUND, PRICE 12s. NETT.

THE FOLLOWING PIECES PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| OVERTURE | 4 | 0 |
| 1. BRIDAL MESSENGER'S SONG (Bass) Recit. "I, your own lord, on cheerful errand bound"... Air, "The girl is far too good for earth" ..... Sung by Mr. Lewis Thomas. | 3 | 0 |
| 2. INTERMEZZO (Instrumental) | 1 | 0 |
| 3. CHORUS OF MEN, "Good morrow to our neighbour" | 2 | 0 |
| 4. BRIDEGROOM'S SONG (Tenor), "The river is flowing its meadows between" Sung by Mr. W. H. Cummings. | 3 | 0 |
| 5. CHORUS OF MEN, "Come, come with thy companions" | 2 | 0 |
| 6. INTERMEZZO (Instrumental) | 1 | 0 |
| 7. BRIDE'S MOTHER'S SONG (Contralto). "O merry are the bridesmaids" Sung by Madame Sainton Dolby. | 2 | 6 |
| 8. ALTERCATION SCENE. QUARTET AND CHORUS. (Dadl Dau), "What is here of bolt and bar" | 3 | 0 |
| 9. RIDING CHORUS (No. 1), "Down the stream and down the valley" | 3 | 0 |
| 10. HYMN CHORUS, "Lo! with fears and blushes laden" | 2 | 0 |
| 11. ANTHEM CHORUS, "Blessed are all they that fear the Lord" | 2 | 0 |
| 12. HYMN CHORUS (Accompanied), "Thou whose mercy is a treasure" | 2 | 0 |
| 13. RIDING CHORUS (No. 2), "By the village, by the meadow" | 2 | 0 |
| 14. BRIDE'S SONG (Soprano), "If thou shalt deem thy vow" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne. | 3 | 0 |
| 15. QUARTETT AND CHORUS (Penillion Nos Galan), "Jane had cheeks as red as roses" | 3 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC | 3 | 0 |
| FINALE, QUARTET, AND CHORUS, (Breuddwyd y Frenhines), "May the years begun so brightly" | 3 | 0 |

THE FOLLOWING ARRANGED AS PIANOFORTE DUETS BY THE AUTHOR.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| OVERTURE | 5 | 0 |
| INTERMEZZO, No. 2 | 2 | 0 |
| INTERMEZZO, No. 6 | 2 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC | 3 | 0 |

The Choral and Orchestral Parts published separately.

LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET (CORNER OF BROOK ST.), LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Printed by HENDERSON, RAIT, AND FENTON, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by WILLIAM DUNCAN DAVISON, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Oct. 11, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,

Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51.—No. 42. | SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1873. | PRICE { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—This Day (SATURDAY) October 18th. THIRD SATURDAY CONCERT and AFTERNOON PROMENADE of the Eighteenth Series. Commence at Three. Symphony in C (No. 6) (Mozart); Concertino de Bravura for violin and orchestra (composed in 1846) (Mr. Holmes); Hymn for Contralto solo and Chorus (Op. 96), first time (Mendelssohn); "The Song of Miriam" (Schubert). Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Patey, and the Crystal Palace Choir. Solo violin, Mr. Henry Holmes. Full Orchestra. Conductor—Mr. MANNS. Transferable serial stalls for the series of concerts, Two Guineas; reserved stalls for this concert, Half-a-Crown. Admission, Half-a-Crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

MADAME LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON and Madame PATEY, in the SATURDAY CONCERT, CRYSTAL PALACE, THIS DAY.

MRS. JOHN MACFARREN'S CONCERT at Bow, on MONDAY, October 27th, at Eight o'clock. Vocalists—Madame Florence Lancia, Madame Poole, and Mr. J. L. Wadmore. Pianoforte, Mrs. John Macfarren; Violin, Herr Adolf Politzer; and Violoncello, Mr. Walter Petit. Part I.—Andante and Allegro, piano, violin, and violoncello (Mozart); Cavatina, "In questa semplice" (Donizetti); Song, "To Anthea" (Hatton); Variations, piano and violoncello (Mendelssohn); Grand Aria, "Una voce" (Rossini); Recitative, "I rage, I melt, I burn," and Air, "O sudden than the cherry" (Handel); Rondo, piano, "Moto continuo" (Weber); Vocal Duet, "Sweet Summer morn" (Macfarren). Part II.—Allegro and Presto, piano, violin, and violoncello (Beethoven); Lullaby, "Sleep, Baby darling" (Mrs. A. Phillips); Song, "Bride bells" (Reeckel); Grand Duo, piano and violin (Osborne and De Beriot); Ballad, "The British Tar" (Hatton); Song, "The Maiden's resolve" (Lucy Ward); Caprice de Concert, piano, "The Pearl of Erin" (E. M. Macfarren); Vocal Trio, "The Troubadour" (G. A. Macfarren). For vacant dates, address, 15, Albert Street, Gloster Gate, N.W.

BRIGHTON.—MR. KUHE'S SECOND PIANOFORTE RECITAL, next WEDNESDAY Morning, October 22, at the DOME. Mr. Kuhe will play Mozart's Sonata in D major, Beethoven's 15 Variations and Fugue on Tema from Sinfonia Eroica, Chopin's Scherzo in B flat minor, Corelli's Gigs, Schumann's Arabesque, Mendelssohn's Capriccio in B minor, and Liszt's Transcription on Spinnlied, from Wagner's Fliegende Holländer. Vocalist, Herr Reichardt. Particulars at R. Potts & Co.'s.

MISS EMILY TATE, the Renowned Young Pianist, will give TWO RECITALS in the PAVILION, at Brighton, on the 30th of October, under the patronage of the present and the ex-Mayor of Brighton. Miss EMILY TATE will play Grand Concertos by Weber and Hummell, and an Andante and Allegro by Mendelssohn, M. Gounod's Meditation on a Prelude by Bach, Beethoven's Rondo in G, Thalberg's "Home, Sweet Home," &c.
MISS EMILY TATE will play at M. RIVIERE'S Concerts, at the Royal Italian Operahouse, in November.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR. ALFRED REYNOLDS will sing Ascher's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at the St. John's Wood Society of Musicians' Concert, in November next.

"THE SAILOR BOY'S FAREWELL."

MISS MARION SEVERN will sing Blumenthal's popular Song, at Dalton-in-Furness, 20th October; Ulverstone, 21st; Bradford, 24th; Chester, 25th; Penrith, 27th; Maryport, 28th; Glasgow, 29th; Falkirk, 31st; Durham, November 3rd; Brigg, 4th; Gainsborough, 5th; Kettering, 7th; Northampton, 8th.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

"THE SONG OF MAY."

MISS EDITH SHIELD will sing Vincent Wallace's admired "SONG OF MAY," at the St. John's Wood Society of Musicians' Concert, in November next.

NEW SONGS by the most Popular Composers.
Just Published.
SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S "The Sailor's Bride." 4s.
VIRGINIA GABRIEL'S "A Shadow." 4s.
SCHIRA'S "He was her only Son." 4s.
ARTHUR CECIL'S "I hear thee speak of a better land." 4s.
WILHELM GANZ'S "Camelia and Rose." 4s.
In D flat for Soprano, and in A flat for Contralto.
WILHELM GANZ'S "A damsel fair was singing." 4s.
Post-free at half-price.
London: HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

THEATRE ROYAL, COVENT GARDEN.—M. RIVIERE'S CONCERTS.—EVERY EVENING at Eight. The following artists will appear during the week:—

VOCALISTS.
Mdlle. CARLOTTA PATTI.
Mdlle. VICTORIA BUNSEN. | Mr. J. H. PEARSON.
Miss FIORELLA. | Signor GUSTAVE GARCIA.
(And for the Welsh Festival Thursday), | Mr. GEORGE PERREN.
Miss EDITH WYNNE.

Instrumentalists.
Mdlle. PRATTEAU (Violoncello).
Mons. THEODORE RITTER (Pianoforte).
Mr. J. LEVY (Cornet-à-Pistons).
Conductor—M. RIVIERE.

MONDAY next, Popular and New Music.
TUESDAY, Verdi Night.
WEDNESDAY, Weber Night. Conductor—Sir Julius Benedict.
THURSDAY, Grand Welsh Festival.
FRIDAY, Operatic Night.
SATURDAY, National and Miscellaneous.
Splendid Decorations, Ferneries, Fountains, Plants, Exotics, Flowers, &c. Refreshments by Messrs. S. and A. Gatti. Promenade, One Shilling. Doors open at 7.30; Commence at 8. Acting Manager, Mr. JOHN RUSSELL.

Under the immediate Patronage and Sanction of the Council of the Royal Albert Hall.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.
Conductor—MR. BARNBY.
A Series of ELEVEN GRAND ORATORIO CONCERTS will be given during the ensuing season, at which the following works will be performed:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Handel's THEODORA. | Rossini's STABAT MATER. |
| Bach's CHRISTMAS ORATORIO. | Mendelssohn's LOBGESANG. |
| Bach's PASSION (St. Matthew) | Macfarren's OUTWARD BOUND. |
| Mendelssohn's ELIJAH. | Mendelssohn's 114TH PSALM. |
| Haydn's CREATION. | Miller's SONG OF VICTORY. |
| Handel's MESSIAH. | Gounod's GALLIA, and |
| Handel's ISRAEL IN EGYPT. | Mendelssohn's ST. PAUL. |

The Concerts will take place on the following dates:—

| 1873. | | 1874. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Thursday, | October 30. | Thursday, | January 8. |
| ,, | November 13. | ,, | ,, 22. |
| ,, | ,, 27. | ,, | February 5. |
| Monday | December 15. | Wednesday, | ,, 18. |
| Wednesday, | ,, 24. | Thursday, | March 5. |
| | | ,, | ,, 19. |

SUBSCRIPTION FOR THE SERIES:—

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Loggia (to hold 8 persons).. | £21 | 0 | 0 | Amphitheatre Stalls..... | £3 | 3 | 0 |
| Boxes (Grand Tier)..... | 25 | 0 | 0 | Arena Stalls ..... | 2 | 2 | 0 |
| ,, (Upper Tier)..... | 10 | 10 | 0 | Balcony Stalls ..... | 1 | 10 | 0 |

Subscribers' names received by Novello, Ewer & Co., 1, Berners Street (W.), and 35, Poultry (E.C.); the usual agents; and at the Royal Albert Hall.

HERR REICHARDT will sing two new Songs of his own composition, "THE HEART'S REMEMBRANCE" and "AUBADE" ("Love's Voice"), at Mr. Kuhe's Recital, Brighton, 22nd inst.—MILLS & Co., Bond Street.

MR. SANTLEY begs to announce that all business communications must be addressed direct to himself, or they will not receive attention.—5, Upper Hamilton Terrace, St. John's Wood.

ELECTRICITY VALSE,
By HENRY KLEIN.
Price 4s.
"Is tuneful, danceable, and not difficult."—The Graphic.
"This is really a very pretty waltz, with good melodies admirably arranged for the pianoforte."—The Era.
"Whether used for dance purposes, or played for its own sake, it cannot fail to please."—Musical World.
"The music is pretty, and variety of effect produced by broken rhythm."—The Court Circular.
Post free, 24 stamps.
London: HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

HERR REICHARDT'S much admired Song, "I LOVE, AND I AM LOVED" (J'aime, je suis aimé!) will be sung by Miss Josephine Sherrington during her present tour in the provinces.

MISS PURDY is in Town for the Winter Season. Address, 35, Victoria Road, Kensington, W.

MADAME HELENA WALKER begs to announce that all Communications respecting Engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., must be addressed to her residence, 6, West Bank Road, Edge Lane, Liverpool.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Stretford Road, Old Trafford, Manchester.

MR. HANDEL GEAR, Professor of Singing, begs to announce his return to town for the Season. 66, Seymour Street, Portman Square, W.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce that Young rising Artists, desirous of appearing in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., ought to write at once to Herr Schuberth, care of Messrs. DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, and send particulars as to their abilities.

REMOVAL.

MR. VERNON RIGBY begs to announce his Change of Address to St. George's Villa, 26, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

REMOVAL.

MR. LEWIS THOMAS begs to announce his Removal from Oakley Square to No. 7, Lidlington Place, Harrington Square, N.W.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury, and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an inferior Medal.

Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

PRINCE PONIATOWSKI.

A SEVEN OCTAVE BOUDOIR Pianoforte by ERARD, the property of the late PRINCE PONIATOWSKI.

Messrs. ROBINSON, SON, AND FISHER will include in the sale at their Rooms, 21, Old Bond Street, on Thursday next, October 23, the above capital instrument. May be viewed two days prior to the sale.

A SIMPLE CATECHISM

ON THE

RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

In the form of Question and Answer, and written in familiar language.

BY

E. ELLICE JEWELL.

Price 1s., Cloth Cover.

LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY'S VOCAL ACADEMY.—The NEXT TERM begins on MONDAY, October 20th, and Madame Sainton-Dolby will receive Candidates for admission at her residence, 71, Gloucester Place, Hyde Park, W., on Saturday, October 18th, from Ten to One o'clock. Prospectuses can be had on application at Messrs. Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street, and of Mr. George Dolby, 52, New Bond Street.

"THE SACRED HEART." The beautiful Processional Hymn sung by all the Pilgrims to Paray-le-Monial. Arranged as a piece for Pianoforte or Harmonium by J. Pittman. Price 2s.; or, for one or four voices, with French and English words, 1s.—London: E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

THE TALE OF A SHAH. Sung, with immense success, by Mr. Templeton, at every performance of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. 18 stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| "ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. | Sung by Madame Patey .. | 4s. |
| "THE KING AND I" .. .. | Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. | 4s. |
| "THE CROSS ROADS" .. | Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. | 4s. |
| "SYMPATHY" .. .. .. | Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. | 4s. |
| "NOTHING" .. .. .. | Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. | 4s. |

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS,

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | £ | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - - | 6 | 0 | |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - - | 8 | 0 | |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - - | 3 | 0 | |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - - | 3 | 0 | |

PIANOFORTE.

Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each 3 6

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

ACTION FOR LIBEL.

IN THE EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—LEEDS SUMMER ASSIZES, AUG. 13th, 1873.
Before Mr. BARON POLLOCK and a Special Jury.

KIRKMAN v. POHLMANN.

[Transcript from Messrs. MARTEN and MEREDITH'S Shorthand Notes.]

Counsel for the Plaintiff—Mr. FIELD, Q.C., and Mr. LAWRANCE (Instructed by Messrs. DOD and LONGSTAFFE, London).

Counsel for the Defendant—Mr. D. SEYMOUR, Q.C., and Mr. GIBBONS (Instructed by Messrs. MORRIS and Co., Halifax).

(Continued from page 650.)

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Is there no mode in which this matter can be settled?

Mr. Seymour.—My friend has put a construction upon this caution which I submit it really is not open to. My friend does not say or contend that there ever was any advertisement by Messrs. Kirkman in Halifax.

Mr. Field.—Not by Kirkman; but these pianos have been advertised in Halifax, and circulated in Halifax and the neighbourhood to any extent.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That will be a question for me—that is to say, whether the words were capable of bearing that construction. Then there will be a question of fact for the Jury, whether they did apply to this particular maker. Nothing can be plainer than the words "Patent Steel Grand Pianofortes."

Mr. Seymour.—The "Caution" does not use the word "Patent."

Mr. Baron Pollock.—In your correspondence you do not produce any other advertisement of Steel Grands except this. I won't say more, but I thought that as between two rival gentlemen—I do not say rival in an invidious sense, because, of course, everybody is proud to be a rival in the market in making such interesting things as pianos—

Mr. Seymour.—We never dreamt of referring to him, we simply complained of some pianos being called Steel Grands by Mr. Hemmingway, in Halifax, which were not Steel Grands. It was as much for the protection of the Plaintiff as of the public generally.

Mr. Baron Pollock. You do not, in your correspondence, indicate any other Steel Grands.

Mr. Field.—There was nobody else who ever had a patent for Steel Grands.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—I only mentioned it for the purpose of suggesting some mode of settlement, because, although people may advertise their own goods, they must be very cautious how they speak of others.

Mr. Seymour.—There are Steel Grands, as I will show your lordship, manufactured by Erard, and Collard & Collard, as well as by Messrs. Kirkman—both iron and steel, horisontal Grands.

Mr. Field.—Really, if we are going to fight the case we must go on in the regular way—unless you feel inclined to meet me in some way.

Mr. Seymour.—We never wrote this caution of the Plaintiff, or in any way relating to him.

Mr. Henry John Kirkman sworn; Examined by Mr. Lawrance.

Q. Do you carry on business as a pianoforte manufacturer at No. 3, Soho Square. A. Yes, I do.

Q. Under the firm of Kirkman and Son? A. Yes, under the firm of Kirkman and Son.

Q. And I believe you and your predecessors of the same name have carried on business there for 140 years? A. Yes, about that.

Q. In 1870, were letters patent granted to you for the invention of improvements in the construction of pianos? A. Yes.

Mr. Seymour.—Have you got them with you? A. Yes, here are the letters patent (producing the same).

Mr. Lawrance.—I will put them in if you like.

Mr. Seymour.—I have one reason for desiring that they should be put in: I merely wish to know if they are described as "Steel Grand?"

Mr. Lawrance.—Do they relate to the employment of steel in the manufacture of pianos? A. Yes.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Is the title of your patent "Steel Grand?"

Mr. Seymour.—No, my Lord; the words "Steel Grand" are not used.

Mr. Field.—The provisional specification is this: "My invention relates to the employment of steel bracing or tension bars for resisting the pull of the strings, and supporting the wrest plank." And then it goes on to say how that may be done: "A wrest plank may be formed wholly of steel, or partially of steel and partially of wood." Your Lordship sees it speaks entirely of "steel." There is nothing about iron in the provisional specification at all. It is the introduction of steel instead of wood and iron. The provisional specification is filed 4th October, 1870, and dated the 8th April.

Mr. Lawrance.—From that time, from April, 1870, did you manufacture pianos upon that patent? A. Yes, up to the present time.

Q. Have you a trade mark? A. Yes, I have a label, "Patent Steel Grand," and that is registered at Stationers' Hall.

Q. And is that affixed to all of your pianos of that description? A. That is attached to every piano, and likewise the same words are stamped upon them, "Patent Steel Grand."

Q. On the piano? A. Yes, as well as that label.

Q. Did you make many of these pianos? A. I have made some 140 or 150 up to last April.

Q. And were they known in the trade by the name of "Patent Steel Grands?" A. Yes, I think they are universally known all over England, Ireland, and Scotland, and I think in the Colonies, as also on the Continent, as "Steel Grand Pianofortes."

Q. Of your manufacture? A. Of my manufacture.

Q. Does anybody else besides yourself manufacture Steel Grands? A. No, not to my knowledge; we have never had the patent contested.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—You mean not under that title: you do not mean that nobody else uses steel in the manufacture? A. Not under that title, nor in those special parts of the pianoforte for which the patent is taken out.

Mr. Lawrance.—Have you been in the habit of issuing advertisements of these "Steel Grands?" A. Yes, these are our circulars and advertisements (pointing to some documents).

Q. And did you give those to your customers? A. Yes, they are distributed in different directions to our customers in the trade.

Mr. Seymour.—You must bring home some knowledge to us. I object to that at present being read. I know nothing about that.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That is not so perfectly clear. If a person chooses to use a word which is applicable to a particular person, it rests upon him to show that there was somebody else who had "Steel Grand Pianofortes" advertised to whom it could be applicable.

Mr. Seymour.—My lord, I accept that issue.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—But even so, you are no forwarder, because it would be equally applicable to the Plaintiff cum aliis.

Mr. Seymour.—I shall show that a person applied the name of "Steel Grand" to pianos sold in Halifax which were not steel.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Your correspondence does not disclose that at all. Probably it will be convenient to adjourn now for a short time, and I think it is well worthy of consideration that some arrangement should be made in this case; here are people in the same trade, you know: I will not say a word more. In some cases, like the newspaper article cases, there is an absence of motive, but here, you know, it is a serious question rather.

Mr. Seymour.—Here it is said with reference to acts done, and with regard to persons whose names have been introduced, rightly or wrongly, into this case.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Then why do not your clients at once withdraw?

Mr. Seymour.—I cannot explain that without reading that which is without prejudice.

[Adjourned for a short time.]

Mr. Henry John Kirkman recalled: Examined by Mr. Lawrance.

Q. I was asking you whether you issue these advertisements to your customers? A. Yes.

Mr. Seymour.—I object to that; it cannot be evidence. I have already objected to it. If you want me to rise again and object I will rise.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Is is evidence in this sense—

Mr. Seymour.—I dare say he has a trade circular; that might be evidence.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—If it comes to an application to this or that customer, it would not be evidence against your client; but, I take it, the fact that a person issues circulars generally in the course of his trade would be evidence.

Mr. Seymour.—I do not object to that, but the language of the circular must be brought home to us to be evidence against us.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—The difficulty I see in this case is this, and that is why I ventured to interrupt a short time ago: If a person in the course of the conduct of his business issues a circular which may or may not relate to particular things, he must take the risk.

Mr. Seymour.—If it were proved that that was advertised in Halifax my objection would be a different one.

Mr. Field.—If you mean this one (pointing to the circular) I will prove it up to the hilt.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—I assumed it from Mr. Field's opening. What I meant was this, supposing I should myself take the risk of going into the market, and should use language there, or issue a circular there, which I might really not know anything about, and I may say I have not really read up the subject and have not considered it, still, if people come within the net that I have thrown, although I may be innocent as far as my moral intentions are concerned, it is quite clear if your client, in the language he uses, includes in his net the Plaintiff's pianos, it is a question for the Jury whether they were actually injured or not.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Seymour.—I do not understand my friend to contend that that yellow paper was advertised in Halifax.

Mr. Field.—Certainly, I shall prove it.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—What strikes me is this, I should have thought that a person who is a rival in trade would be rather anxious to disclaim, and to say, "I did not intend to attack you;" but he has not done that here, according to the correspondence.

Mr. Seymour.—I do not know whether the particular letter has been read, but there is one which appeared to me to disclaim it very strongly.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—No; it is disclaimed in a way which does not show much desire to conciliate. Any one who knows these pianos, and how closely they tread upon the heels of each other, knows the enormous importance of a trade mark and trade name.

Mr. Seymour.—I confess I thought that letter as strong a disclaimer with regard to the Plaintiff as could well be.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That will be for the Jury to say hereafter.

Mr. Field.—Just test it in this way: would it be possible for Messrs. Kirkman to have read this letter to any one as clearing them from this charge? Just ask yourself that question. What Messrs. Kirkman wanted was something which would clear them in the eyes of people who had read this caution.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Just so. However, I will take it generally, "I issued these circulars."

Mr. Lawrance.—[To the witness] Were Mr. Hemmingway and Mr. Lawson Saville of Halifax customers of yours? A. Yes.

Q. And did you send these advertisements to both those gentlemen in Halifax? A. Yes, I did.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Can you give us the date of that? Because that will be rather important. A. They were sent continually when the pianofortes were first sent.

Q. You mean as early as 1870. A. They would be sent about the time the first pianoforte was sent to Mr. Hemmingway, and, of course, the same thing with regard to Mr. Saville; and, further, I always distributed them myself when I saw my different customers.

Q. Do you think you sent these to Halifax as early as 1870? A. Yes, I should say so; soon after the patent. I should say a few months after the patent.

Q. And I think you say you sent each of them a piano of that kind? A. Yes; each of them a piano of that kind.

Mr. Lawrance.—Do you know of your own knowledge whether these advertisements were advertised by Mr. Hemmingway in the Halifax papers? A. Yes, I have seen them extensively advertised in the Halifax papers.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Always using that expression, "Steel Grand?" A. Always "Steel Grand." It would be useless for them to advertise them without that. [Newspapers produced of February 18th, and 29th April, 1871.]

Mr. Lawrance.—Tell me what is generally understood by a Grand Piano. A. The technical definition of "Grand Piano" would be a horizontal pianoforte, and generally with a curved side. By no possibility would any musical person mistake the two.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—I think we may take that for granted.

Mr. Seymour.—I think I know what a grand piano is; I have bought one or two in my time.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—There are semi-grands and boudoir-grands, but there are no upright grands.

The Witness.—There is always a prefix to the name if any other pianoforte is meant, such as "square grand," "grand square," "upright grand," or "grand upright," which makes the distinction. Anybody ordering a "grand" piano, if you were to send them an upright one, it would be in contradiction to the instructions.

Mr. Lawrance.—I think you have told us before that these instruments were known in the trade as "Steel Grand Pianos," and that you have sold a number of them? A. I have sold a considerable number of them.

Q. Did you see a copy of the "Caution" published by Pohlmann & Son? A. Yes, I did.

Q. Do you know when that was? A. It would be some few days or weeks after it was issued. It was sent up to me to London. I cannot tell you the exact date; it would be perhaps in February, 1872, I may safely say that.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—We will take the "Caution" as in.

Mr. Field.—Yes.

Mr. Lawrance.—After seeing that "Caution," did you consult Messrs. Dod and Longstaffe? A. I did.

Q. How long after you had seen the "Caution?" A. I think it was almost immediately, almost the same day; I took it up immediately, seeing that it was very injurious.

Mr. Lawrance.—The letter has been read, my Lord, of the 23rd January, which fixes the date. [To the Witness.] Q. Was the same "Caution" sent to you by other people besides Mr. Hemmingway? A. Yes; I think Mr. Saville, and I fancy some other people in Halifax put them into my hands, and called my attention to them.

Q. Were any complaints made to you by Mr. Hemmingway and others with respect to the "Caution?" A. Yes; they pointed it out as being very injurious to me and very injurious to them.

Mr. Seymour.—How can that be evidence?

Mr. Baron Pollock.—I do not know whether that can be excluded, because, assuming it applied to these pianos, it is evidence of damage; if it does not apply, then of course the question cannot arise; but supposing it is admitted to apply to them, how can a man prove his damage except by showing that?

Mr. Seymour.—But can a complaint, with regard to this document, affect my client?

Mr. Baron Pollock.—As to damage.

Mr. Seymour.—But what I objected to was the complaint. If he said that Mr. Hemmingway had so many pianofortes before, and proved that in consequence of this he had less afterwards, I would not object to that.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Then at all events we may take it that some of your customers complained? A. Yes.

Mr. Lawrance.—What did they complain of?

Mr. Baron Pollock.—No, you cannot have it in that shape. You may call Mr. Hemmingway presently.

Mr. Seymour.—I submit that shows the objection to admitting the evidence.

—o—

CRYSTAL PALACE—OPERAS IN ENGLISH.

(From a Correspondent.)

At the grand military fête given on Monday, under distinguished patronage, there was, among other attractions, a representation, in the theatre, of Donizetti's Figlia del Regimento, in English. The performance was interesting from various reasons. Mr. Henry Guy, of the Royal Academy of Music, made his first appearance on the stage, as Tonio. This gentleman has an agreeable voice, and sings artistically, but he is, at present, evidently more suited to the concert room than to the stage. No doubt the nervousness inevitable on a first appearance prevented him from exhibiting what dramatic talent he possessed. Sulpizio, in the experienced hands of Mr. Henry Corri, was all that could be desired. Miss Fanny Heywood was an interesting Maria. This young lady's voice has gained considerably in power, and its sympathetic quality was particularly noticeable in the air known in the Italian version as "Convien partir," rendered by her with good dramatic effect. Miss Annie Goodall essayed the part of the Marchioness, a character evidently new to her, and the concerted music suffered accordingly. The orchestral accompaniments, under the able direction of Mr. Manns, were excellent; and the audience appeared, on the whole, exceedingly pleased with the performance.

The grand concert given by the military bands, numbering about 150 performers, was quite a feature in the day's amusements.

The weather, unfortunately, was not propitious enough to allow the intended combination of the fountains and fireworks, but the fireworks by themselves were attractive enough to satisfy the patrons of the military fête, and there were no expressions of dissatisfaction heard about the (unavoidable) nonfulfilment of the entire programme.

TO MISS EDITH WYNNE.

Songstress divine, called from thy earliest youth
To charm our senses mid this world of toil;
To tell in harmony the words of truth,
Of gifts sublime, from Him who giveth all.

And one bright gem to thee on earth has grown
More costly far than gold, or kingly birth,
A sound of angel's voice, a beam from heaven,
A something that doth not belong to earth.

Well may proud Cymru claim thee as her own;
Who, like thyself, her melodies can sing!
With pathos sweet, in music's grandest tone;
Ask Fame; his answer will be Edith Wynne.

MARIA E. LESLIE.

Mold, August, 1873.

Digitized by Google

A LOOK A-HEAD.

Although musical interest has not yet left the provinces and returned to town—the Bristol and Glasgow Festivals being still in the future—the town is making preparations for a season which should surpass all its predecessors, if London does not mean to lag behind the country in genuine patronage and encouragement of art. Look at what our provincial societies will have done when the Glasgow Festival becomes a thing of the past. They will have produced no fewer than six important works by English composers, or by composers whom long residence among us has naturalized. Sullivan's Light of the World, Randegger's Fridolin, Schira's Lord of Burleigh, Ouseley's Hagar, Macfarren's John the Baptist, and Smart's Jacob. This is a splendid contribution to English music, and for this we have entirely to thank provincial enterprise. Surely, in the face of such an example, the great metropolis will not go ambling, like a contented donkey, along the musical paths it knows so well, and never turn aside to "fresh fields and pastures new!" Some novelties, as we shall presently see, are already announced, but not two nor three swallows make a summer, and the list must receive large accessions before London managers can be said to have done their duty. Looking at the character of the works above named, we are specially anxious to know the intentions of the Sacred Harmonic Society. Will that important institution be satisfied, to go on repeating the Messiah, Elijah, Creation, and a few other hackneyed works? or will it, in some degree, recognise the duties of its position, and further the cause of art, as distinct from its balance at the bank, or the prejudices of a particular "set." That the society has lost ground by its "finality" tactics, and is coming to be looked upon as an "old fogey," cannot be doubted, but it still possesses the means of retrieving its character. Let the directors produce Sterndale Bennett's Woman of Samaria, heedless of the ancient feud between their conductor and the composer; let them produce, also, Sir Julius Benedict's St. Peter, which has a clear right to be heard; and let them do a like honour to Sullivan's Light of the World. This accomplished, the society will be rich in artistic credit; and, for such an institution, artistic credit is no bad set off against a diminished cash profit. Many of the old managers have recently vacated their places at the council board for ever, and if their successors show a truer regard for the interests of art, wider sympathies and greater eclectism, we shall be able to look upon the change with philosophic content.

As regards novelties, absolute as well as comparative, the prospectus of the Crystal Palace justifies high expectations. We are especially glad to observe that some of the less known works by the great masters are among the things promised. Great masters suffer hardly less than the dii minores from the worship which the world is never tired of offering to their noblest productions. One result is, not only that beautiful things remain neglected, but that the composers themselves are but partially known. How little familiar is Haydn as a symphonist, apart from the "Salamon set;" while Mozart is thought of, in the same capacity, chiefly as the author of the "G minor," the "E flat," and the Jupiter. The Crystal Palace managers have done well, therefore, by announcing the intended performance of two out of Haydn's many unfamiliar symphonies, and of a selection from the lesser, though large, number due to the genius of Mozart. Modern composers are always well looked after at the Crystal Palace, and in the current prospectus they hold a good place. Anything by Schumann must receive a hearty welcome, as the work of a conscientious and gifted man. If the same may not be said with equal certainty of compositions by Schumann's successors, the truth remains that every genuine amateur will receive them with interest, and fairly judge them on their merits. We are somewhat struck with the absence from the prospectus of every one of the recent Festival novelties. There may be good reasons for this, but it is to be hoped that such art lovers as the managers of the Saturday Concerts will not permit the season to end without having done something for the new works which recently excited attention and elicited applause.

We have not yet received a prospectus of the Albert Hall Choral Society's intended doings, and cannot refer to them as fully as might be wished. The reports in circulation, however, lead us to expect, not only a season of unusual activity, but one of much interest. Mr. Barnby, of whose energy and zeal we have had so many proofs, is not the man to neglect establishing the position already gained, or to cease from pushing his conquests still futher. Whatever earnest self-devotion can do will be done, and we are not at all surprised to learn that he intends giving eleven concerts during the season, in preparation for which the the Choir, augmented by 300 carefully chosen voices, has rehearsed twice a-week for some time past. This "means business," and we are glad of it, because of its refreshing contrast to the lassitude that reigns in some other quarters. Mr. Barnby, we understand, will repeat the Lenten performances of Bach's Passion Music, and it is hoped by not a few admirers of the great Leipsic musician, that his Christmas Oratorio will have a hearing in December. Should this expectation be satisfied, Mr. Barnby will more than ever strengthen his claim to the gratitude of all who would have the candle of genius set on a hill, and not put under a bushel. St. Paul, too, is among the chosen works, and Mendelssohn's first oratorio will thus be helped forward to the place it must ultimately occupy. As time goes on, though the popularity of Elijah may remain undiminished, the public will grow accustomed to its flashing light, and be able to appreciate the more sober radiance of the sister work. We will not enter upon any comparison between St. Paul and Elijah. Enough that the first deserves equal favour with the second, and that each performance brings nearer the inevitable satisfaction of its claims. A revival of even greater interest will be that of Handel's Theodora—the master's pet oratorio, the child and darling of his old age. An experimental performance of this work last season, with amateur soloists, gave so much satisfaction that its public presentation could only be a question of brief time. There is much of Handel's finest writing in Theodora, and we prophesy for it a heartier reception than was enjoyed by Belshazzar. But, whether Theodora be well received or not, Mr. Barnby does well to revive it. Let all the Handelian oratorios have a chance in turn, now that a new generation, with more æsthetic tastes, has risen up to judge them.

The Monday Popular Concerts have, as yet, made no sign, but with them there is no need for preliminary manifestations. At the proper moment Mr. Arthur Chappell will throw open the doors of St. James's Hall to a waiting crowd, and the weekly feasts of chamber music will quietly be resumed. We may expect, at an earlier date, to see the first of Mr. Henry Holmes's "Musical Evenings" in St. George's Hall. There is now a larger public for chamber music than even the Monday Popular Concerts can satisfy, and Mr. Holmes will have no reason to complain of wanting support, assuming—as may safely be done—that he gives performances of undiminished worth.

Among immediate prospects may be noted the laying, by the Duke of Edinburgh, of the foundation stone of a new Training School for Music at Kensington Gore. It is far too early for an opinion to be safely given as regards this enterprise. The managers are all amateurs, with no special knowledge of what they have to manage; but, on the other hand, they are independent of all musical cliques, and they have the means and the influence necessary to secure the best services of good men. It would manifestly be wrong to prejudge the case, and we shall wait for results, ready to sympathise with and support every effort to promote the cause of music. It matters not a jot by whom our people are musically educated, so that the education be given. Above all, let us avoid presenting to the world such a sorry spectacle as that shown by the promoters of general education. Let us ignore cliques, and fix our regards simply on the end to be attained.

THADDEUS EGG.

---

ROME.—The ballet of Brahma has been produced at the Politeama. —The Teatro Apollo was to open with Faust, the principal parts being sustained by Signore Singer, Braccialini, Signori Perotti, Sparapani, and Petit.—The new Teatro Minerva is to be inaugurated next Carnival.

GENOA.—In consequence of the presence of cholera here, the manager of the Paganini has announced that he is obliged to cancel —provisionally, at least—the engagements he has made, though, should the sanitary condition of the town improve, he will open his theatre at a later date. Two other theatres, the Teatro Nazionale and the Teatro Doria will, also, be opened before long—always supposing the cholera should disappear, as there is every hope it will.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

October 15, 1873.

If you wish to make a large fortune in a very little time, by selling thousands of copies of this week's Musical World, I think I can put you in the way of it (expecting, of course, a handsome commission). The outlay will not be very great, for it will consist in hiring a number of men bearing enormous posters worded thus: "Two great French victories over the Prussians, see the M. W. of ——." The success to two opéras comique, or rather bouffes, viz., La Fille de Madame Angot and Le petit Faust, in this town, seems to have put this notion into the head of a writer in a local journal, which itself professes to be the mouthpiece of the "Committée de publicitée." A short time back we had an article abusing "that Berlinois Offenbach," claiming originality and superiority in every respect for certain French composers, and informing us that this was truly a victory for the French over the Prussians—a true revenge! ! ! The same paper of Saturday last, after writing up Le petit Faust as an opera, in which writing there occurs a paragraph between inverted commas: "Le petit Faust est plus amusant que la plus amusante des pièces d'Offenbach, disions nous, lors de sa prémierè apparition," &c. The last sentence runs thus: "Il-y-a enfin que c'est bien Français et qu' Hervé, notre compatriote départementale, n'a pas fait rire Offenbach le Prussien, quand il a composé cette œuvre, meilleure que les meilleures cascades d'outre-Rhin." Far be it from me to run down the French composers, or to place the Germans in a higher position than they ought to be; but when originality and superiority in every respect are in the question, I think justice is justice, and that our lively neighbours want to be reminded, in more ways than one, that it is only just to "give the Devil his due."

Last week La Fille de Mdme. Angot (twice) and Le Cheval de Bronze, as repetitions, and the production of Hervé's Petit Faust, brought crowded houses to the Salle Monsigny. The two former I need hardly allude to, having done it so often, except that, in the case of the former, every one here is Fille de Madame Angot mad: even the toy-shop keepers exhibit in their windows tempting dolls dressed as La Fille—arms akimbo—and all complete. In fact the disease has become so bad that the medical society, which meets next week, are talking of adding to the "Nomenclature of diseases" one called, Angot-ritis puella. The cure for the same will possibly remain an open question.

And now for Le petit Faust. In the first place it was played to a crowded audience, who applauded the way in which it was put upon the stage; and I must congratulate M. Herrewyn, the stage-manager as to the latter fact. The mise-en-scène, the dresses, the make up, were all good, and it did not look like a dress rehearsal, as many first night performances do. The prompter had not too much on his hands (or rather his larynx), and all the troupe seemed to enter into the spirit of the opéra bouffe. In the first act especially, entitled, "L'Ecole du Docteur Faust," the fun was kept up in extremis. In fact, as a whole, all went well; but when one comes more to the details of the opéra bouffe, you must be surprised that such a burlesque (in every way—burlesque—music included), should be put upon the stage, entailing such absurdity and nonsense as it does. The applause was great, certainly, in some places, and recalls were frequent—but cries of, "Oh!" at certain situations, balanced, in my mind, all the rest. A French audience is certainly unlike an English one, and gives its opinion more freely—but, for the outspoken "Oh!" in a French theatre—in an English one, if one looked around the house at the appropriate time, the "silent blush" would certainly confirm what I have said above.

Marguerite (THE Gretchen)—mutilated, as the character was represented—Mdlle. Noaille acted with more spirit than usual. Mdlle. Mey, our clever Fille de Madame Angot, assuming Mephisto in her own peculiarly telling way. M. Descamps, as Faust, was accurate in his singing, and his acting was quite as might be expected. Valentin found an able representative in M. Kinnel, who played the part as it is always done in France—i.e., with much exaggeration.

I made a mistake last week in my letter, which I hasten to correct. I said that the magic lantern which had been exhibited at the Etablissement was "sent expressly from London for the purpose." I find it is the property of the clergyman who held forth on the night of the entertainment. He keeps it for the amusement and edification of the seamen who frequent the Sailors' Institute (recently founded), and tells them all about Egypt and Mount Sinai in a lecture, colouring the same with his own experiences when a missionary. I don't know if this happens oftener than once a fortnight.

Very latest news.—A circus is building near the gate of the High Town. None of your tent business—but a genuine theatre, built in wood, capable of holding 1000 persons, with circus in front and stage behind, and undertaken by Parisians.—So "Whoop la!" and good-bye.

S. C.

MUSIC IN MUNICH.

For now thirty years Halévy's opera, La Juive, has been a stock-piece on the German lyrical stage. In a great number of instances it was given with the book tacked together "freely from the French" by Frederike Elmenreich. The action, laid during the Council of Constance, was transferred, in this version, to a German town at the time of the Crusades, during the first half of the 13th century. Cardinal di Brogni, President of the Council, was made Grand Commander of the Knights Templar; Leopold, Duke of Austria, Count Leopold, styled very modestly "nephew of the Duke and Leader of the Troops;" while the Princess Eudoxia received the now by no means uncommon operatic name of Isabella. The transformation extended also to the lower social strata. The fanatic Ruggiero, Grand Provost of Constance was changed into simple "Theobald, first Councillor," and the commander of the Imperial Archers, into the obscure "Leader of the Ducal Guard." The book had evidently something false about it; the Government considered it dangerous to revive the recollection of the Council of Constance; to represent an Austrian Duke as the seducer of a Jewish maiden; and to expose a Cardinal to the general antipathy of the audience. Everything referring to Constance, to Brogni, to Duke Leopold, to the Emperor, and to religious superstition, had to be eliminated before the opera could be represented. With such alterations in its historical background—which, after all, was but faintly sketched in—the work was produced, the public troubling their heads, probably, as much or as little about this libretto as about most other librettos. Recently a change, not uninteresting from a historical point of view, has been effected quietly, and even unremarked by many, at the Theatre Royal here. The text has been, at length given in its original form, many an obscure passage being thereby rendered effective and intelligible. For twenty-nine years—the opera was first performed here in 1844—people put up with the senseless libretto forced upon them by a clerical government, and it is only lately that the Intendant resolved to have the necessary alterations made. So long a time did it require to effect the innovation, for the public and even the management of a theatre grow accustomed to senseless opera-books, with distorted names and scenes. "We are pleased, however,"—observes a correspondent of the Neue Berliner Musikzeitung—"that another reminiscence of a dark period, which threw its shadow upon the stage as well as upon other things, has been effaced; the public regarded the change so much as a matter of course that they refrained from any observations on it. May all other counterfeits forced upon us by clerical government be in like manner abolished."

It is still, seemingly, from the class of national schoolmasters that the best members of the operatic company are drawn. Last year the Intendant-General, Baron von Perfall, discovered in Herr Schwab, a teacher at Kaufbeuern, a fine tenor. He had him instructed at the expense of the Theatre, and a few days since the gentlemann made his first appearance as the hero in Joseph en Egypte. He resembles in many respects the late Herr von Schnorr, and made a hit. The Intendant was less fortunate with a Hungarian lady, whom also he had caused to be educated musically at the expense of the Theatre, and who was to have made her début as Rachel in La Juive. But at rehearsal she exhibited so thorough an indifference for time or key that her first appearance was necessarily postponed.

MADRID.—It is said that Signor Ponchielli's opera, I promessi Sposi, will be produced next season at the Teatro Nacional.

Digitized by Google

AMATEUR OPERA RECITALS.

During the winter season, for the last three years, meetings of a society of amateurs, under the direction of Mr. Willert Beale, have been held in Liverpool, at which the music of some of the most important modern operas has been practised. The amateurs in question have dealt with operas as the majority of musical societies deal with cantatas and oratorios. Advantage has been taken of the cheap editions of operatic works latterly issued by several eminent London firms; and such operas as Lohengrin, Norma, Maria, The Bohemian Girl, Lucia, and Faust, so far as the soli, concerted pieces, and choruses are concerned, have been practised throughout. The Liverpool society has set an example which, it is to be hoped, will be followed elsewhere. The study of operatic music by amateurs cannot be too warmly advocated. Apart from all other considerations, practical knowledge of such compositions is almost indispensable to any vocalist, professional or amateur, who would sing with appropriate dramatic expression, in the absence of which the finest voice ever heard is ineffective. The first meeting of the Liverpool Society this season took place on Saturday last, at Dreaper's Rooms, in Bold Street. It was, as usual, strictly private, no listeners being admitted. The opera now in practice by the amateurs is Robert le Diable. The meetings are to be held fortnightly, the second of the present series being announced for Saturday afternoon, the 25th inst. Madame Husson accompanies.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

The fête which had been so carefully organized for the entertainment of the soldiers came off on Monday at the Crystal Palace, and only wanted a little finer weather to make it a complete success. Woolwich and Chatham, as well as the military stations nearer home, sent up numerous contingents of well set-up young fellows. There were Life Guards and Artillery, Engineers and Line, Control and Military Train. The Daughter of the Regiment, which was performed in the Opera Theatre, was a peculiarly happy selection for a soldier's festival, and the soldiers enjoyed it exceedingly. Mr. Guy made a promising début, and had a favourable reception, while Donizetti's opera went off with much effect. At five, the military bands (the Artillery and the "Royal Regiment,") offered their contribution to the day's amusement, in the shape of an effective vocal and instrumental concert, ably conducted by Mr. Smyth, Bandmaster, R.A. Mr. Smyth, who, it should be mentioned, is a successful composer as well as conductor, included two or three of his own pieces in the programme, and they were by no means the least successful morceaux. The singing of the soldiers in the part-music was particularly admired.

PESTH.—The chorus will consist of 400 persons and the band of 150 at the approaching performance of the Abbate Franz Liszt's oratorio, Christus. Herr Hans Richter will be the conductor.—From statistical returns just published concerning the National Theatre, we learn that, from the opening of the building down to the present time, no less than 644 original dramas by 89 different authors have been represented on some 3,800 evenings. Opera is more attractive than drama. This has been especially the case during the series of starring performances given by Miss Minnie Hauck. The young lady has been re-engaged for this month and the next. She sings seven times a month here, and twice in Ofen. She will also appear in a Magyar "original opera," and great things are predicted of her in it. She will sustain the character of Maria Gara in Erkel's Hunyády Laszlo.

MILAN.—The season is over at the Scala, which will not re-open till the 26th December, so that the sole asylum for opera at the present moment is the Teatro dal Verme. By the way, Signor Lamperti has resigned the managership and been succeeded by Signor Foleiti, who, like his predecessor, promises a great deal more than his artists are ever likely to perform. The first opera produced under the new dynasty was no novelty, but, being well rendered, proved a success. It was La Sonnambula, with Signora Lodi, Signori Maurelli and Buti in the principal parts. The lady made a hit. She is young, and possesses a pleasing, if not a very strong, voice. She is especially at home in bravura passages.—On the 10th inst., Signore Stolz, Wisjak, Bellariva, Beretta, Ricci, Gamberini, Invernizzi, Signor Achille Corsi, Medini, Miller, Fioravanti, and Catte left for Cairo, whither Signor Bottesini has also gone.

PSALMS AND ANTHEMS

SUNG AT THE

ANNIVERSARY MEETING OF THE CHARITY CHILDREN

IN THE

CATHEDRAL CHURCH OF ST. PAUL, THURSDAY, OCT. 9, 1873;

THE SERMON PREACHED BY

THE RIGHT REVEREND THE LORD BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.

Before PRAYERS the 100th Psalm.

All people that on earth do dwell,
Sing to the Lord with cheerful voice:
Him serve with fear, His praise forth tell,
Come ye before Him and rejoice.
The Lord, ye know, is God indeed;
Without our aid He did us make:
We are His flock, He doth us feed,
And for His sheep He doth us take.

O enter then His gates with praise,
Approach with joy His courts unto;
Praise, laud, and bless His name always,
For it is seemly so to do.
For why? the Lord our God is good,
His mercy is for ever sure:
His truth at all times firmly stood,
And shall from age to age endure.

THE PSALMS FOR THE DAY,

CHANTED BY THE GENTLEMEN OF THE CHOIR, THE CHILDREN JOINING IN THE GLORIA PATRI TO EACH PSALM.

AFTER THE FIRST LESSON,

TE DEUM (Goss),

BY THE GENTLEMEN OF THE CHOIR AND THE CHILDREN.

AFTER THE SECOND LESSON,

JUBILATE DEO (Goss),

BY THE GENTLEMEN OF THE CHOIR AND THE CHILDREN.

BEFORE THE PRAYER FOR THE QUEEN,

THE CORONATION ANTHEM,

BY THE GENTLEMEN OF THE CHOIR; THE CHILDREN JOINING IN THOSE PARTS OF THE GRAND CHORUS WHICH ARE PRINTED IN ITALICS.

Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, anointed Solomon King.
And all the people rejoiced and said: God save the King, Long live the King, God save the King, May the King live for ever, Amen, Amen, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Amen. God save the King, Long live the King, May the King live for ever, Amen, Amen, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Amen. May the King live for ever, for ever, for ever, Amen, Amen, Hallelujah, Hallelujah, Amen. Long live the King, God save the King, Long live the King, May the King live, May the King live, for ever, Hallelujah, Amen, Amen, Amen, Hallelujah, Hallelujah.

Before the SERMON.

CHORALE (Mendelssohn).

Sleepers, wake! a voice is calling;
It is the watchman on the walls,
Thou City of Jerusalem.
For, lo! the bridegroom comes!
Arise, and take your lamps!
Hal-le-lu-jah! Awake! His kingdom is at hand!
Go forth, go forth to meet your Lord!

After the SERMON, four verses of the 104th Psalm (Dr. Croft).

My soul, praise the Lord, speak good of His name,
O Lord our great God, how dost Thou appear!
So passing in glory, that great is Thy fame,
Honour and majesty in Thee shine most clear.
With light as a robe Thou hast Thyself clad,
Whereby all the earth Thy greatness may see;
The heavens in such sort Thou also hast spread,
That they to a curtain compared may be.
His chamber-beams lie in the clouds full sure,
Which, as His chariots, are made Him to bear:
And there with much swiftness His course doth endure,
Upon the wings riding of winds in the air.
He maketh His spirits as heralds to go,
And lightnings to serve we see also prest:
His will to accomplish they run to and fro,
To save or consume things as seemeth Him best.

GRAND CHORUS (Handel),

BY THE GENTLEMEN OF THE CHOIR, THE CHILDREN JOINING IN SOME PARTS.

Hallelujah! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! The kingdom of this world is become the kingdom of our Lord, and of His Christ, and He shall reign for ever and ever, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords. HALLELUJAH!

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,
ST. JAMES'S HALL.

SIXTEENTH SEASON, 1873-4.

DIRECTOR—MR. S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

THE Director begs to announce that the SIXTEENTH SEASON of the MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS commences on MONDAY Evening, November 10, and that the Performances will take place as follows:—Monday, November 10; Monday, November 17; Monday, November 24; Monday, December 1; Monday, December 8; Monday, December 15, 1873. Monday, January 12; Monday, January 19; Monday, January 26; Monday, February 2; Monday, February 9; Monday, February 16; Monday, February 23; Monday, March 2; Monday, March 9, Monday, March 16, 1874. Sixteen Morning Performances will be given on Saturdays, November 15, 22, 29; December 6 and 13, 1873; January 17, 24, 31.; February 7, 14, 21, 28; March 7, 14, 21, and 28, 1874.

For the accommodation of those who may desire to occupy the same seats at every performance, the Director will continue to issue Subscription Tickets at £3 10s. (transferable), entitling holders to special sofa stalls, selected by themselves, for the whole series of Sixteen Monday Evening Concerts, extending from Monday, Nov. 10 to March 16. Subscription Tickets are also issued for the Sixteen Morning Concerts, at £3 10s., extending from Saturday Afternoon, November 15 to March 28; also for the Seven Morning Concerts, taking place on Saturdays, January 17, 24, 31, February 7, 14, 21 and 28, at £1 10s.

Mr. CHARLES HALLÉ will appear on Mondays, Nov. 10 and 24, and Saturday, November 22. Dr. HANS VON BÜLOW will appear on Mondays, November 17 and December 8; also on Saturdays, November 15 and December 6. Madame NORMAN-NERUDA will be the Violinist on Mondays, November 10 and 24; also on Saturdays, November 22 and 29. M. SAINTON will lead on Saturday Afternoon, November 15, and on Monday Evening, December 8. Signor PIATTI will hold the post of First Violoncello on all occasions; Herr L. RIES, that of Second Violin; Herr STRAUS or Mr. ZERBINI will play Viola; Sir JULIUS BENEDICT and Mr. ZERBINI, as heretofore, officiating as Conductors. Mr. SIMS REEVES is engaged on Monday Evening, Dec. 8; and Mr. SANTLEY will appear on Monday Evening, December 1; and on Saturdays, November 29 and December 13. The "SCHWEDISCHE DAMEN-QUARTETT" will make their first appearance in London on Monday Evening, December 15. Madame SCHUMANN, Miss AGNES ZIMMERMANN, Herr PAUER, Herr DANNREUTHER, Mr. FRANKLIN TAYLOR, and Herr JOACHIM, will appear after Christmas.

THE FIRST CONCERT OF THE SEASON WILL TAKE PLACE ON

MONDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 10, 1873.

To Commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET in E flat, Op. 12, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, MM. L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI — Mendelssohn.

PRAYER, "Lord, whom my inmost soul adoreth"—Miss ALICE FAIRMAN — F. Hiller.

SONATA in D major, Op. 10, No. 3, for pianoforte alone—Mr. CHARLES HALLÉ — Beethoven.

PART II.

TRIO in B flat, Op. 99, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Mr. CHARLES HALLÉ, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Signor PIATTI — Schubert.

SONG, "Cangio d'aspetto"—Miss ALICE FAIRMAN — Handel.

SONATA in A minor, Op. 23, for pianoforte and violin—Mr. CHARLES HALLÉ and Madame NORMAN-NERUDA — Beethoven.

Conductor — SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON, NOVEMBER 15, 1873.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET in F major, Op. 50, No. 5, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. SAINTON, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI — Haydn.

SONG, "L'ombrosa notte vien"—Mdlle. NITA GAETANO — Hummel.

SONATA APPASSIONATA in F minor, for pianoforte alone—Dr. HANS VON BÜLOW — Beethoven.

SONG, "Au printemps"—Mdlle. NITA GAETANO — Gounod.

QUINTET in E flat, Op. 44, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello—MM. HANS VON BÜLOW, SAINTON, L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI — Schumann.

Conductor — SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

Stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; admission, 1s. Tickets to be obtained of Austin, 28, Piccadilly; Mitchell, 33, Old Bond Street; Ollivier, 39, Old Bond Street; Lamborn Cock, 63, New Bond Street; Keith, Prowse & Co., 48, Cheapside; Hays, Royal Exchange Buildings; Delevanti & Co., Brompton Road; and at Chappell & Co.'s, 50, New Bond Street.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

THIRD CONCERT—THIS DAY—OCTOBER 18th, 1873.

PROGRAMME.

OVERTURE, "Mireille" — Gounod.
ORGAN FUGUE—Dr. STAINER — Bach.
HYMN for Contralto Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 98—Mdme. PATEY and the Crystal Palace Choir — Mendelssohn.
SYMPHONY in C, "No. 6" — Mozart.
ARIA, "In vano il fato" (Huguenots)—Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON — Meyerbeer.
CONCERTINO DI BRAVURA, violin—Mr. HENRY HOLMES — H. Holmes.
ARIA, "Che faro"—Madame PATEY — Gluck.
SONG OF MIRIAM, for Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra—Madame LEMMENS-SHERRINGTON and the Crystal Palace Choir — Schubert.

Conductor — MR. MANNS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

PAUL MOIST.—Yes; Mr. John Reeve did play Paul Pry at the Haymarket—more than forty years ago. Mr. Moist is wrong about Twice Killed, which was an original farce, by Mr. John Oxenford, and has been traduced into many languages, including, we are given to understand, the high Japanese. Mr. Moist is also in error about Hérold, the French composer, who wrote Zampa, not Marco Spada, which last was by Auber. Mr. Moist is equally wrong about Hytts and Dr. Bym.

ANTEATER.—Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, entitled by its author "Sinfonie-Cantata," was composed for the "Gutenbergfest," or festival in commemoration of the fourth centenary of the invention of printing—the same occasion for which Von Lannitz's group of the three printers, Guttenberg, Faust, and Schoeffer (a cast of which is in the South Transept of the Crystal Palace), was erected at Frankfort. The Lobgesang was first performed, in the course of the Festival, on the 25th June, 1840, in the Church of St. Thomas, at Leipsic. Mendelssohn's published correspondence contains no trace of the circumstances attending the composition of this noble work, or the reasons which induced him to adopt the particular form which he has chosen for it—a form which it is almost unnecessary to say is an extension of that invented by Beethoven in the Choral Symphony.

DR. HELLRIEGEL.—No. The Schiava in Bagdad, was composed by Pacini. Mercadante's opera was the Schiava in Saracena.

LEO PARD.—Not exactly. The following is most likely what appeared in the journal to which Mr. Pard refers:—

"Le théâtre Volpicelli (petite salle à deux rangs de loges, construite en 1870 sur la place Cavour, et dans laquelle on jouait l'opéra) changeait, le 11 mars 1871, son nom en celui de théâtre Mercadante; et enfin, au mois de juillet suivant, le théâtre du Fondo lui même, connu sous ce nom depuis près d'un siècle, puisqu'il date de 1779, et l'un des plus célèbres de Naples, se débaptisait aussi, en son honneur, et plaçait sur sa façade cette nouvelle inscription:—

TEATRO MERCADANTE
GIA TEATRO DEL FONDO.

"Le 8 Juillet 1871, dans la chapelle de San Pietro à Majella, une messe funèbre était célébrée pour le repos de l'âme de Mercadante," &c.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 18, 1873.

OUR musical institutions are rapidly unfolding their plans for the coming season. Three schemes are now before us, and each is worth looking at. We will begin with the scheme of the Albert Hall Choral Society.

Mr. Barnby (representing the "managers") proposes to give eleven concerts, beginning on Thursday, October 30, and ending on Thursday, March 19. The band and chorus are to number 1,200 performers, and among the artists engaged are Mesdames Sherrington, Alvsleben, and Patey, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Cummings, Agnesi, and "Signor" Perkin. But we are more concerned about the works to be given than about the number, or even the quality of the givers. The list is a good one, and remains a good one when the "standard" items are taken away. Eliminate Elijah, the Creation, the Messiah, Israel in Egypt, the Stabat Mater, and the Lobgesang; there are still left Theodora, Bach's Christmas Oratorio and Passion, Macfarren's Outward Bound, Mendelssohn's Psalm, "When Israel out of Egypt came," Hiller's Song of Victory, Gounod's Gallia, and St. Paul. It is not enough to say that each one of these deserves a hearing now—each one ought to have had hearings many in time past. But "better late than never;" and if Mr. Barnby can carry out all the promise of his prospectus, he will deserve the sincere gratitude of music-lovers in general, and of those who are anxious to extend the repertory of accepted classical works in particular. Not a word need be said to create an interest in Theodora, the Christmas Oratorio, or St. Paul; such names as those of Bach, Handel, and Mendelssohn being recommendation sufficient; but the case is different with regard to some of their companions. Macfarren's Outward Bound, for example, has been neglected—not strangely neglected, we are sorry to add—since its production at the Norwich Festival last year. Such a work, by such a musician, ought not to drop into limbo; and those who know the merit of the composer, even if they are ignorant of his cantata, will rejoice to find that both are to receive a measure of justice. Hiller's Song of Victory, produced at the Cologne Festival of 1871, has never been performed in England, though it is unquestionably one of the veteran composer's finest choral works, if not the finest absolutely. It was written under the influence of the astounding German victories in the late war, and reflects the powerful excitement of the time and the occasion, just as, in another way, M. Gounod's pathetic Gallia embodies the grief and desolateness of a stricken people. Both compositions ought to endure as works of art, and without reference to their interest as memorials, for which reason we are glad to see both in Mr. Barnby's scheme. The prospectus adds that nightly performances of sacred music will again take place during Passion Week; the John Passion alternating with that according to St. Matthew. On the whole, the Albert Hall Society bids fair to increase by a great deal the reputation it has acquired since Mr. Barnby's appointment as conductor.

Digitized by Google

The Council of the Wagner Society have just announced the plan of their second season, from which it is easy to gather that they found the position at first taken up quite untenable. We are not in the least surprised. A Society devoted to the concert-room performance of Wagner's music exclusively could not exist. Its speedy death from inanition would be inevitable for the simple reason that but little of Wagner's music is adapted for presentation off the stage—how little is seen at once in the fact that the selections now promised are chiefly those given again and again during the first season. The Council have done wisely therefore to "lengthen their cords" and take in "the great classical masters from Sebastian Bach to the present time." Of course the result is to lose Wagner in a crowd of greater men, but we presume this will be looked upon as a lesser evil than the extinction of the Society. Appealing, as it now does, to the indisputable claims of high art in general, and not to the questionable pretensions of a single individual in particular, we may promise the Society a hearty support. The list of "works intended to be performed" is rich in admitted excellence and in attractive novelty. With such a scheme, such an orchestra as that of last season, and such a capital director as Mr. Dannreuther, the Wagner Society ought to flourish, even in spite of its name. We observe, with special gratification, that the profits of all seasons after the present will be devoted to the foundation of a scholarship for English students of music.

The new season of M. Gounod's choir is to include five concerts, with, if possible, a full orchestra and chorus. M. Gounod will, therefore, have the rare advantage of presenting his works in their complete form; and we may expect to hear his new music to Barbier's Jeanne D'Arc, his Messe Solennelle, with a new offertory, his two symphonies, and numerous other examples of his genius. However M. Gounod may have exercised the minds of the musical public lately, it is certain that all will join in wishing success to the scheme now in his hands.

About the now time-honoured Monday Popular Concerts, the first of which is announced for November 10th, we shall speak next week.

—o—

IF we were permitted to hint, without fear of raising a howl all over the Principality, that Welshmen are not quite perfect, we should advise a little more modesty as regards themselves or their doings. A lot of Welshmen met the other day at an Eisteddfod held in Newport, and here follow some of the remarks then and there made, or inspired:—

The Chairman.—"The Welsh Choir at the Crystal Palace had been challenged by the whole world, and, when they met, they came off victorious."

Mr. Brinley Richards.—"I do not want people to praise my nation unduly, but I will defy any nation to produce better chorus singing." (Hear, hear.)

W. Downing Evans:—

* * * * * * *

"And while our hearts with patriotic zeal
Burn for our hearths, still for the general weal
We fondly labour, and mankind would save
From moral darkness deeper than the grave."

* * * * * * *

Still in the van shall Cambria march along,
Cheered to the task by never-ceasing song,
And round the land, and, aye, beneath the sea(!)
The pioneer of all perfection be."

We have only to add that if "Cambria" be not the acknowledged first of nations, it is not because her sons fail to claim the honour.

—o—

OCCASIONAL NOTE.

Do-ré mi fa sol la.—If one wished the famous Gustave Doré to paint a picture with the Sun in a particular spot, the wish being expressed as above, what would the famous Doré's answer be?—Sí—of course.

—o—

CONCERT.

Poplar.—A performance of operettas took place at the Town Hall, on Tuesday, October 14th. The first was entitled Disguises, very well played by Miss Emerton and Mr. Bridge. This was followed by Offenbach's sparkling little operetta, Lischen and Fritzchen. Miss Mabel Brent played and sang the part of Lischen charmingly, and Mr. Arthur Thomas was extremely good as Fritzchen. Both indeed acted and sang capitally, receiving an enthusiastic encore for the duet, "I'm an Alsatian," and a special call before the curtain at the end of the operetta. The performance concluded with Arthur Sullivan's Cox and Box, in which Mr. Bridge, Mr. Travers, and Mr. Arthur Thomas, kept the audience thoroughly amused. Miss Elizabeth Stirling accompanied the operettas on the pianoforte.

Florence.—Papa Martin has been produced at the Teatro Goldoni, but, though both the singers and the opera pleased the public, the latter were so far from overcrowding the theatre that the manager had to close it after only three performances.

Digitized by Google

PRAYER.*

(From "Another World.")

While stating that the prayers said by girls after their early meal are short, I ought to have added that the same rule is followed with regard to children of both sexes.

We even vary our forms of worship and services to suit different ages. Before my reign adults and children went to the same places of worship, repeated the same prayers, and listened to the same discourses, most of which being perfectly unintelligible to those of tender years, the evils and inconveniences resulting from the practice were very great. The children, finding the routine irksome, the constrained decorum required of them during a time which seemed to them never ending (for the services were then very long) was painful in the extreme, though they were sometimes relieved by turning their thoughts in other directions, perhaps to subjects irrelevant, if not opposed to the ostensible object of the meeting.

Thus pain and weariness became then and in after life naturally associated with the most sacred of duties; and generally those who, at an early age, had been obliged to attend most regularly to an unintelligible and irksome routine, were, in after life, those who absented themselves most frequently from the place of worship. I have known some—and this will scarcely be credited—who from an early age had, in obedience to their parents' commands, attended church with what was to them painful and monotonous regularity; and who, as soon as they were old enough to leave the parental jurisdiction, never entered a place of worship again until the day of their death, so great had been their stifled repugnance, created by the unnatural surfeit which had been inflicted on them.

This was not all; the repugnance thus engendered often extended even to the faith itself which the prayers and discourses had been intended to inculcate, and led the way in after life to doubt and disbelief.

There was another, though a secondary evil, attendant upon these old formalities. In our climate, where children are very susceptible, it happened that, when on rare occasions any striking observation attracted their attention, they would put questions very difficult for their parents or preceptors to answer.

The forms of worship and service are now adapted to three several ages and classes of intelligence. The first series is for children of from seven to ten years of age, the second for children from ten to sixteen, the third for adults. If the children, however, show any deficiency of intelligence, they are kept in the first or second series, though the stated age has been passed.

The discourses addressed to the young people are adapted to their age and intelligence, and ordinarily bear reference to their own passing actions, and consequently to their hours of play and of study. They are intended to inculcate lessons of self-control, love for parents or associates, contentment, and the mode of showing gratitude for benefits received, by cultivating the faculties which God in his goodness has bestowed. The discourse often points out the mode of contending against any bad feelings that might possibly be awakened. They might be told, for instance, that if during play any dissatisfaction with their companions arose, and they felt they could not control themselves, they ought immediately to retire from the game, in order that their feelings might have the opportunity of returning to their proper channel, and on no account to urge anything against the supposed offender until they had advised with some friendly adult, or more especially a Character-diver.

The children are encouraged not only in their affection to their parents and immediate associates, but in brotherly love to all; and the whole discourse, which is very short, is pointed to their duty to God, being calculated to instil feelings of love and adoration for His goodness.

In the first series, for very young children whose intelligence is undeveloped, we have forms and ceremonies, the object of which is to fix their attention and inculcate thoughts and habits of a good tendency.

In the second series the addresses are of a more elevated character, and are accompanied by fewer forms and ceremonies.

In the highest series there are scarcely any ceremonies, and although the service and discourses are short, every one is expected to give a certain time each day to voluntary prayer and meditation in the private cabinet which in every house is set apart for devotion only.

Though the prayers for children are short, the preacher is greatly assisted by our method of education, inculcating the worship of the Supreme by habits which the child is led to form. Thus we require the greatest attention to cleanliness, to the mode of eating, sleeping, talking, and, indeed, to all the daily practices of life.

The inculcation and exercise of good habits is considered to form, as it were, a perpetual living hymn to the Creator.

* "Forget not the source whence all blessings come."

ARABELLA GODDARD AT SYDNEY.

(From the "Sydney Empire," June 20th.)

Madame Arabella Goddard's concert last night was eminently successful in every point of view. The hall was crowded in every part by a most attentive and appreciative audience. The programme was varied and attractive, including songs, duets, and solos on violin and pianoforte. As for Madame Goddard, all that can be said is; that she is almost above criticism. Columns have been written about her range of power, versatility, wonderful execution, and the subtle fascination with which she entrances her hearers; and the performance last night went to show that the laudations showered broadcast upon England's greatest pianist inadequately express her merits. If the shade of Beethoven could have looked down—and perhaps he did—last night at the accomplished lady who re-produced one of his great tone-poems, he would have smiled approvingly, and would have gone back to the Elysian fields happy and gratified as ghost could be. Sir Julius Benedict's variations on "My lodging is on the cold ground" and "The Moreen" were admirably rendered, and, an encore being loudly demanded, Madame Goddard responded to it, playing variations on "Home, sweet Home." Never before in Australia has the melody, so dear to all English ears, appeared so enchanting. The skill, the artistic finish, the taste and refinement displayed by the performer, exceeded, if possible, her manipulative dexterity. We confess we have rarely heard the piano played before, although in many instances tormented. Not a note was slurred, but each came full and clear, and each passage was given just as the composer had written it. Madame Goddard's exquisite touch, wonderful manipulation, and the pathos exhibited, especially in piano passages, produced an effect the charm of which can scarcely be described. The piano was one of Broadwood's concert-grands; and it is needless to say that the lady who plays on it knows how to task its powers to the uttermost, and to elicit from it—either with touch as soft as the evening zephyr, or with the vigour which her music demands—all of melody or harmony which the instrument can yield. The concert was a brilliant success, and Madame Goddard had to return again and again amidst cheers and every demonstration of enthusiastic applause.

---

ST. PETERSBURGH.—The Imperial Italian Opera opened for the season on October 6th with Meyerbeer's L'Africaine. The singers were Mdlle. Urbain and Mdlle. Sebel, Signors Gasarre, Bagagiolo, Capponi, and Cotogni. The famous "Unison" prelude was rapturously encored, and the opera, altogether, under the admirable direction of Signor Arditi, made a decided success. Madame Penco has since made her appearance in Lucrezia Borgia, and quite took the town by storm. Her success was enormous. Mdlle. Albani was announced to make her appearance in La Sonnambula on Tuesday, October 14th.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL.—We take the following from our esteemed contemporary the Liverpool Daily Post:—

"A concert by the members of the Gwalia Musical Society (numbering about seventy voices), assisted by Miss Helen Major, Mynyddog, and Mr. T. J. Hughes, was given in the Concert-Hall last evening, before a crowded audience. The most interesting items rendered by the choir were 'O God, behold our sore distress' and 'When his loud voice,' both of which were competitive pieces at the recent Mold Eisteddfod. The accompaniments throughout were played by Mr. Walter Burnet. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Major, Miss Lizzie Roberts, and Mr. T. J. Hughes, and a harp solo was played by a boy twelve years of age. During the evening Mr. D. Daniels, the conductor, was presented with a timepiece."

ST. BEES (Carnforth).—Mdlle. Loewenstein, a young pianist of more than ordinary promise, lately gave an evening concert in the New College Hall. The ladies and gentlemen by whom Mdlle. Loewenstein was supported were Miss Knowles, Mdlle. Brouneau, Mr. Biggs, and Mr. Hughes (organist at the parish church). The hall was filled with a large and fashionable audience, whose anticipations of a musical treat of a high order were realised to the full. Mdlle. Loewenstein played compositions by Chopin, Schumann, and Rubinstein. That she possesses feeling, power, and execution, was shown in her performance of some solos by Rubinstein, and the Novellette (in F) of Schumann. Among Mdlle. Loewenstein's most successful efforts were a Fantaisie Impromptu, by Chopin, and a popular Scotch Fantaisie, by Berger. Miss Knowles' fine and pleasing voice was well displayed in an air by Gluck. Mdlle. Brouneau, on receiving an encore for Balfe's "Si tu savais," substituted Longfellow's "I know a maiden fair to see." The Irish song, "Thady O'Flinn," was also given by Mdlle. Brouneau, and encored. Mr. E. C. Biggs gave "The lights far out at sea," and obtained a call for its repetition. The duet, "We two," by Miss Knowles and Mr. Hughes, evoked applause. Mr. Hughes, who kindly officiated as accompanist (with the exception of Mdlle. Brouneau's songs, the accompaniments to which were played by Mdlle. Loewenstein), discharged the duties of his post most efficiently. The concert concluded with the National Anthem.

ON THE HARMONIUM,

PAPER No. 3.

OF CERTAIN IMPROVEMENTS, WHICH MIGHT BE CARRIED OUT, WITH ADVANTAGE TO THE INSTRUMENT, BOTH COMMERCIALLY AND MUSICALLY.

It is easier to say a thing than to do it. It is easier to suggest a thing than to put it into practice. True. Still a person who suggests may prove a very useful individual, provided he do always suggest that which is feasible, and can satisfactorily show in what way his suggestion, if carried out, would prove advantageous. Now what we desire to show in this paper is, that improvers, when exciting their faculties, in regard to the harmonium, have overstepped the mark, done too much, gone too far, exaggerated and strained after stupendous notions, instead of simply and quietly improving. Sensational effects, marvellous advantages, have all and each been advanced in their turn by makers to induce people to buy their instruments; and while, on the one hand, numbers of stops, all kinds of swells, pedals, blowing apparatuses, and what not, have been employed to render it more organ-like and more attractive, in the sense that the buyer obtains more for his money; on the other hand, it has been pared down, and "softened of its harshness," and harnessed, without ceremony, together with a piano, both being crammed into one case, to attract lovers of duets. And all the while, these projectors have been forgetting the individuality of the instrument.

We have no wish to run down or disparage any inventions of inventors. All hail to such. Let them have every encouragement; but we write this in earnest remonstrance, because we are sure the harmonium trade is only, by this means, being ruined. The instrument is crowded with a host of appliances, contrivances and effects which cannot, in some cases, be produced by one person, that is by the player himself; but an assistant is rendered necessary to supply the wind and so on; this is simply ruination. Then, again, do these inventors imagine for a moment that, if people will not take the trouble to learn how to properly play a small ordinary harmonium of half-a-dozen stops, they will take any more trouble over their elaborate instruments? We know the public are very weak in preferring quantity—generally regardless of quality—for their money; but in this case the extra quantity involves extra trouble, and the public will give it up as a bad job in toto. No. What is required, is simplicity and a decided result; a palpable cause and an evident effect; something that will entice by its beauty of sound and simplicity of action. But the contrary course has been pursued, the latest consequence of which is the production of that melancholy instrument, the American organ. Now we have no wish to run down "American organs." As American organs, their construction is ingenious, and, we think, they are infinitely preferable to small and badly built organ pipes; but as substitutes for, or improvements upon, harmoniums, we entirely ignore them. Though, it is true, by means of enclosing the reeds, they have succeeded in getting rid of that buzzing, about which every body makes such a fuss in the harmonium; yet, on the other hand, the tone is neither so rich nor so sweet as that produced by a good harmonium.

We heard a very good American organ well played upon at the Polytechnic, and, really, our first impression was that we were listening to some unfortunate organ in the last stage of consumption; the sound seemed hollow and imitative in the extreme, and, such was the effect, that it invested the sham pipes, as we gazed upon them, with a transparent, gaunt, and ghostly appearance, and the very framework of the whole seemed to totter in feebleness and incapacity. We were, probably, under the influence of dyspepsia. At any rate, we are willing to concede that, as an individual instrument, the American invention forms a kind of infant organ which is preferable to a full grown one of imperfect construction; but as substitute for the harmonium it is nowhere.

The buzzing that so terribly tickles the ears of people is, we feel convinced, one half caused by improper playing, and a third by an exaggerated prejudicial imagination, leaving the fourth part as an undoubted imperfection in the instrument. Now, most instruments have imperfections, which must be conquered by the player. If the improvers can conquer them, well and good; but I may be allowed to remark that, as far as harmoniums are concerned, they have not gone the right way to do so. No. If people would only play the harmonium as an individual instrument, instead of a lame imitation of the organ, the beauties they would discover would soon outshine and subdue the effect of the terrible buzzing.

Now we are about to suggest one improvement, not feasible just now, we are aware, because it would be too expensive, considering the present demand for the instrument; this is, that the invaluable percussion action should be attached to every row of vibrators. The inconvenience of the present method being that whenever the percussion is used, it must be in connection with the Flute and Cor Anglais, these being the stops to which it is generally applied.

For our part, we think that the sad principle of giving a "quantity for the money" is the cause of the commercial failure of the harmonium. Too many stops are introduced, and bad players are tempted to buy because they can get several tones by pulling out these fancy stops. But fancy stops badly played upon are no better than ordinary ones. It is absurd to supply pretty instruments to people who won't learn to play them properly. People pull out all these fancy stops, and are disappointed that the result is buzzing and monotonous; and no wonder when they neglect the stop, THE EXPRESSION. They have a volume of sound at command, and yet will not take the trouble to control and mould it into musical fancies and murmuring intonations. Now, the following is a plan, which we humbly offer, for the construction of a harmonium which shall combine simplicity, economy, and utility.

Firstly, then, our instrument being provided with a good wind chest and all such internal appliances, and with two footboards (of course), we then propose that it shall contain only eight stops, three of which shall be, as far as vibrators are concerned, dummies: a grand jeu worked by the knee method, which shall couple the two manuals (for we propose to have two), and open all the valves at the same time. The solo manual shall contain two stops, Clarionette (a rich toned one), and a Voix Celeste of good mellow tone, being, of course, "through" stops—that is having each a whole row of vibrators. On the accompaniment manual, as we will call it, shall be a Flute and Hautbois in the treble, and a Cor Anglais in the bass. In addition to which the instrument shall be provided with a well regulated Expression stop, of course, and two genuine forte stops to take effect upon the whole instrument. Percussion action shall be provided only to the accompaniment manual. An instrument thus constructed would, contain all the necessary requirements; and we feel sure would not cost more to make than those elaborate instruments with swells and pedals, and blowing apparatuses, and dozens of tremolos, dulcianas, musettes, Voix-ines, and heaven know's what.

Digitized by Google

Now we wish it clearly to be understood that we are not underrating, in this, the ingenuity or the ardour of inventors; but we have penned this article partly in their interest, as we feel assured that they are not going the right way to render the harmonium of any additional value, either commercially or musically.

F. Allan Laidlaw.

—o—

WAIFS.

Madame Arabella Goddard has taken the Australians by storm, and appears to be gaining glory and gold ad libitum. The Sydney Empire, published June 20th, says of her concert on the previous night, that "the hall was crowded in every part; and of the fair artiste herself, that "she is almost above criticism—the laudations which have been showered upon England's greatest pianist inadequately express her merits. Her exquisite touch, wonderful manipulation, and the pathos exhibited, especially in the pianissimo passages, produced an effect the charm of which can scarcely be described."—Observer.

Mr. F. A. Cowen has left London for a lengthened sojourn in Italy.

Stout has sold his drama, After the War; or, the Old Plantation, to Howard.

A Philadelphia gentleman was writing a play for Blanche De Bar, of the Arch Street Theatre.

Oofty Gooft has a new dialect play, in which he is to sustain an original Dutch character.

Mr. Ignace Gibsone's cantata, the Elfin Knight, is to be given at Dublin, with a choir of 800 voices.

It is reported that H. L. Bateman has been negotiating for the lease of the Lyceum Theatre in Fourteenth Street.

The first Monday Popular Concert this winter is announced for November 10th. Mr. Arthur Chappell's prospectus is crammed with good things.

The pianoforte belonging to the late Prince Poniatowski is announced to be sold by Messrs. Robinson, Son, and Fisher, at their rooms, in Old Bond Street, on Thursday next.

The first meeting of the fourth season of the Liverpool Amateur Opera Recitals took place recently in Messrs. Draper's Rooms, Bold Street, under the direction of Mr. Willert Beale.

M. Alexander Reichardt has left Boulogne for Brighton. The popular composer of "Thou art so near and yet so far" is announced to take part in Mr. Kuhe's "recital" on Wednesday next.

"Paganini Redivivus" has been playing at the Alcazar, where he was announced as Le Spectre de Paganini, and glided in ghostly fashion on the darkened stage. We do not hear that anybody was frightened.

Mr. Carl Rosa's English Opera Company was to appear at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Liverpool, on Monday evening. Their performance was awaited with interest, on account of the eulogies that have preceded them. The Company has concluded a wonderfully successful four weeks' engagement at Manchester. The Manchester critics appear to have been surprised by the richness and variety of the costumes, the perfection of the ensemble, and the excellence of the chorus and band, conducted by M. Carl Rosa.

In the last of M. Rivière's Scotch Ballad nights at Covent Garden, the charming and promising young pianist, Miss Ada Lester, performed with great brilliancy and success the fantasia, entitled "Highland Gems," the composition of her late instructor, Mr. Willie Pape.

It is intended to form a choir of singers to represent the town and neighbourhood of Liverpool (patron, "the Worshipful the Mayor"), and to compete for prizes in Classes II. and III. at the National Music Meetings, to be held at the Crystal Palace, Sydenham, in July next.

Miss Emily Tate, the youthful pianist, has been presented with a pair of diamond ear-rings by the Grand Duchess Maria of Russia, and a gold watch and chain by a well-known city magnate, "in recognition of the pleasure received from her performances of the works of the great masters."

Mr. Lindsay Sloper, the eminent composer and pianist, intends, we are informed, to make Brighton his future professional residence.

Mr. Wilkie Collins was "received," on the 27th ult., at the Lotos Club, New York, and introduced by the president, Mr. Whitelaw Reid. There was a large attendance of members and invited guests. A dinner was also given to Mr. Collins on the 30th ult., at the Century Club, by Mr. Conant, the editor of Harper's Weekly.

Madame Sinico appears to have made a great hit last week, at Dublin, in Marta. The Irish Times says that she has "always occupied a foremost position in the estimation of the Dublin public. Her singing last night was marked by her usual characteristics—refinement, ease, and finish. The 'Qui sola' evoked an enthusiastic encore."

All the Parisian musical journals join more or less in praise of a new mezzo-soprano-soprano, Mdlle. Bellocca, who appeared as Rosina in the Barbiere di Siviglia, on the occasion of the second performance at the Théâtre Italien, now under the direction of Herr Maurice Strakosch. Next day she was "interviewed" by an American newspaper correspondent.

Miss Sophia Flora Heilbron, the youthful pianist, has been introduced to the Liverpool public. Her performances at the Institute were distinguished by remarkable executive power and intelligent reading. Should Miss Heilbron continue her studies in the way she has begun, in due time she will achieve for herself the position of a great artist.—Liverpool Albion.

The first concert of the season of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society took place in the Philharmonic Hall on Tuesday, commencing at a quarter to eight. Mdlle. Marie Rose, Mdlle. Justine Macvitz, Signor Urio, and an orchestra and chorus numbering 250 were the performers announced. Sir Julius Benedict conducted Beethoven's Symphony No. 8 (in F), the overtures, Ruler of the Spirits (Weber) and La Gazza Ladra (Rossini).

The weekly practices of the Royal Albert Hall Amateur Orchestral Society, which H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburgh initiated last season, are to be resumed on Friday evenings, in the Lecture Theatre of the South Kensington Museum, the use of which has been conceded to the Society by the Committee of Council on Education. The first practice will be held on Friday, 7th November. It is understood that H. R. H. the President, may assist at the second practice.

Mdlle. Marguerite Barbier, a youthful pianist (pupil of Mr. Aguilar), made a successful début at the concert given lately by Madame Lefébure-Wély in the Pavilion at Brighton. The Guardian calls her a pianist of brilliant attainments; the Daily News, a pianist of considerable ability, exhibiting proficiency both in classical and modern music; and the Fashionable Visitors' List says that, considering her youth, she exhibits extraordinary talent, proving clearly that she has been most carefully trained. The pieces played by Mdlle. Barbier were a movement from Schubert's Sonata in A minor, Chopin's Polonaise in the same key, a Scherzo by Herr Wollenhaupt, and Mr. Aguilar's brilliant fantasia on "The Blue Bells of Scotland."

A recent issue of an enterprising morning contemporary, which is fast acquiring a reputation for the publication of suspicious documents and marvellous interviews with historical personages, contained an alleged autograph letter and poem by Burns, never before published. The account of the discovery and preservation of the manuscripts is somewhat indefinite, and the reason given for their not having been printed sooner—because it was thought to be too disloyal for publication in Great Britain—is transparently silly. Very recently, we are told, a Cincinnati bookseller came into possession of the compositions in question, and has generously consented to their publication. The verses are not wanting in a certain rude vigour and spirit; but their turgid swell and laboured periods remind one of the prize poems of boys at school. The first verse will give our readers a fair idea of the style:

ODE FOR WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

"No Spartan tube, no Attic shell,
No lyre Æolian I awake;
'Tis Liberty's bold note I swell,
My harp, Columbia, let me take.
See gathering thousands, while I sing,
A broken chain exulting bring,
And dash it in a tyrant's face!
And dare him to his very beard,
And tell him he no more is feared.
No more the Despot of Columbia's race
A tyrant's proudest insults braved,
They shout, a people freed! They hail an Empire saved."

The fourth, and last, stanza of the ode is to be found in all complete editions of Burns' works; and the letter to Mrs. Dunlop, which our contemporary believed it printed for the first time, will, if we mistake not be found there too.—Arcadian.

Digitized by Google

The Eastern Morning News, referring to a concert lately given in Hull, observed:—

"Miss Julia Wigan, pupil of Madame Sainton-Dolby, attracted great interest immediately on her appearance in the orchestra to sing the Serenade. She is young, and sang with considerable trepidation, notwithstanding the pianist's admirably sustaining accompaniment, and M. Sainton's violin obbligato. The young lady, however, gave indications of a most pleasing soprano voice, and in the charming old ballad, 'On the Banks of Allan Water,' she reached the heart of every person in the room. Her intonation was perfect, and her delivery of the melody simple, pure, and finely sympathetic. Many would regard this number of the programme the gem of the evening, as an illustration of domestic music wedded to pathetic poetry."

Brunswick.—The concert for the benefit of the "Widows and Orphans' Fund" of the Ducal Court-Orchestra, took place on October the 7th, at the Ducal Court-Theatre. The programme was very interesting, and its execution, under the direction of Capellmeister Franz Abt, was in every respect satisfactory. The first part contained Raff's Sinfonie, "Im Walde," which made a favourable impression when performed last season at the "Concert Verein," an impression that was fully sustained on the present occasion. Fraulein Schenerlein sang the grand aria from Mozart's Nozze di Figaro in most artistic style, and was loudly and deservedly recalled; she afterwards took the solo part in Mendelssohn's finale to Lorely, and met with the same flattering success. Fraulein Preiss gave songs by Taubert and Müller, and was particularly successful in a cleverly written Ave Maria by Abt, which had to be repeated. The same is to be said of Herr Alexy, in songs by Taubert and Abt. The second part opened with Berlioz's poetical overture to King Lear, which was finely played. The instrumental solos were a Concerto for violoncello by Lindner, exquisitely played by Herr Schröder, whose brilliant performance met with a most flattering reception. The other instrumental solo was C. Oberthur's "Fairy Legend," played by our excellent harpist, Herr Wiedemann, with a precision and finished expression which brought forth the most unanimous ovation. Both these artists were loudly recalled. Herr Behrens was set down in the programme for the recit. and aria from the Creation, and also to take part in some duets by Rubinstein, but, unfortunately, in consequence of sudden illness, was unable to appear.

Leipsic.—The Zöllner Association lately gave a grand concert. The programme included 4 orchestral, and 13 vocal pieces, connected by a running poem, the production of Herr G. Heminger, which was ably declaimed by Herr Klinger. Most of the songs were of a warlike and patriotic character, but there were some exceptions, such as Dr. Lange's "Steh' ich in finstrer Mitternacht," and Nessler's "O, Strassburg."—On the 2nd ult., at 11 a.m., the memorial stone, erected in the Neukirchhof to the memory of Carl Zöllner, was formally unveiled. After the members of the Zöllner Association had, under the direction of their conductor, Herr Greiff, sung the song: "Stumm schläft der Sänger, the President, Herr Herzog, addressed those present. He warmly thanked everyone who had contributed to the monument, winding up with the vow made by the members of the Association to dedicate themselves exclusively to the Pure in Art, as well as their determination to honour the deceased composer not merely by words but by deeds. Thereupon Dr. Zimmermann, the delegate of the Leipsic Historical Society, spoke in laudatory terms of Zöllner as a composer of German songs, who had contributed by his productions to the unity of Germany. The ceremony concluded with Zöllner's song: "Auf, deutsche Brüder, haltet Wacht!" The memorial tablet, of fine grey sandstone, bears the following inscription in Gothic characters:—

"Karl Zöllner, the Master of Melody,
Who united the Men of Germany in vigorous Song,
Dwelt here nineteen years;
Died here on the 25th September, 1860."

Moscow.—After the stillness of summer, great activity is again reigning in musical circles. The Russian Musical Society has issued an address, calling upon its members to assemble shortly for the study of the great choral works.—Russian Opera is in no very flourishing condition. The question has been put: Why a Russian operatic company is maintained at all, seeing that this city can boast of only one theatre for both Russian Opera and Italian Opera, and that, as the latter is a permanent institution, the former does not very frequently find the stage free for it to occupy, especially as the same stage is devoted also to ballet.—The Italian season was inaugurated with Verdi's Lombardi, which had not previously been given here. The second opera promised was Der Freischütz, with Mdlle. Angermeier, Italianised as Alice d'Angeri, in the part of Agatha. The company includes Signore Adelina Patti, Emma Albani, Elisa Volpini, Rosina Penco, Alice d'Angeri, Alice Giuliani, Alice Bernardi; Signori Nicolini, Naudin, Mariini, Gayare, Svedese, Marianini, Graziani, Cotogni, Rota, Foli, Costa, Ciampi, and Catani. Conductor, Signor Bevignano. Chorus Master, Signor Corsi.

Dresden.—Before the close of the winter season, probably next March, a grand opera: Die Folkungen, words by Mosenthal, music by E. Kretschmer, will be produced at the Theatre Royal. The composer is organist at the Roman Catholic Court Church, and instructor of the singing boys there.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

Goddard & Co.—"The New Graduated Method for the Pianoforte," by Joseph Goddard.
Oliver & Boyd.—"School Songs for Junior Classes" (Tonic Sol-fa edition), by T. M. Hunter.
Ashdown & Parry.—"Marie Alexandrowna Waltz," by Charles Godfrey.
E. C. Boosey.—"Night," song, by Arthur Whitley.
Lamborn Cock.—"Rondo Capriciosa," by H. S. Oakeley.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat,

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

Just Published;

"ALBION AND SCOTIA,"

FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE,
On "My Love is like the Red Red Rose" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill."

Composed by WILLIAM CRAWFORD.

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Crawford has chosen two very good themes for his fantasia. Both the airs he has selected are glowing, and animated, and picturesque; they are precisely of the kind which suffer the least and sound most effectively in elaborate variations. The variations themselves, in this instance, while clever and brilliant, are in strict keeping with the subject. The piece is written throughout in the natural key, and though tolerably good execution is required to do it justice, the fingering presents no exceptional difficulties, so that the Fantasia is very well suited to the requirements of pianoforte students. It is beyond doubt very much superior to a great many of the "arrangements" of popular airs that are so common now-a-days."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

Just Published,

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")
Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Two Sacred Duets (Just Published) by Henry Smart.

"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"

AND

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUETS
For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s. each.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,
Transcribed for the Pianoforte

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s.

London: Duncan Davison & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

DEDICATED BY PERMISSION TO H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES.

LLEWELYN,

A Dramatic Cantata.

The English Words by THOMAS OLIPHANT

(HONORARY SECRETARY TO THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY).

The Welsh Words by TALHAIARN.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY JOHN THOMAS

(PENCERDD GWALIA),

Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL SCORE, HANDSOMELY BOUND, PRICE ONE GUINEA AND A-HALF.

THE FOLLOWING PIECES PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| RECITATIVE AND WAR SONG, "Firm as the sea-girt rock" Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves | 3 | 0 |
| RECITATIVE AND AIR, "Oh! fain would I recall the days" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne. | 4 | 0 |
| LEGENDARY BALLAD (in A minor), "Gelert's Grave" (Bedd Gelert) Sung by Madame Sainton-Dolby. | 4 | 0 |
| Ditto (in C minor) | 4 | 0 |
| DUET, "Oh, joy beyond expressing" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Sims Reeves | 5 | 0 |
| BRIDAL MARCH (Arranged as a Pianoforte Duet) | 4 | 0 |
| RECITATIVE AND AIR, "Brave Son of Cambria" Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. | 2 | 6 |
| TERZETTO, "Long may ye live" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Lewis Thomas. | 3 | 0 |

The Choral and Orchestral Parts published separately.

THE BRIDE OF NEATH VALLEY,

A Welsh Scene.

The English Words by HENRY F. CHORLEY.

The Welsh Version by TALHAIARN.

THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY JOHN THOMAS

(PENCERDD GWALIA),

Harpist to Her Majesty the Queen.

THE PIANOFORTE AND VOCAL SCORE, HANDSOMELY BOUND, PRICE ONE GUINEA.

THE FOLLOWING PIECES PUBLISHED SEPARATELY.

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| OVERTURE | 4 | 0 |
| 1. BRIDAL MESSENGER'S SONG (Bass) — RECIT. "I, your own lord, on cheerful errand bound"... AIR, "The girl is far too good for earth" ... Sung by Mr. Lewis Thomas. | 3 | 0 |
| 2. INTERMEZZO (Instrumental) | 1 | 0 |
| 3. CHORUS OF MEN, "Good morrow to our neighbour" | 2 | 0 |
| 4. BRIDEGROOM'S SONG (Tenor), "The river is flowing its meadows between" Sung by Mr. W. H. Cummings. | 3 | 0 |
| 5. CHORUS OF MEN, "Come, come with thy companions" | 2 | 0 |
| 6. INTERMEZZO (Instrumental) | 1 | 0 |
| 7. BRIDE'S MOTHER'S SONG (Contralto), "O merry are the bridesmaids" Sung by Madame Sainton Dolby. | 2 | 6 |
| 8. ALTERCATION SCENE. QUARTET AND CHORUS. (Dadl Dau), "What is here of boh and bar" | 3 | 0 |
| 9. RIDING CHORUS (No. 1), "Down the stream and down the valley" | 3 | 0 |
| 10. HYMN CHORUS, "Lo! with fears and blushes laden" | 2 | 0 |
| 11. ANTHEM CHORUS, "Blessed are all they that fear the Lord" | 2 | 0 |
| 12. HYMN CHORUS (Accompanied), "Thou whose mercy is a treasure" | 2 | 0 |
| 13. RIDING CHORUS (No. 2), "By the village, by the meadow" | 2 | 0 |
| 14. BRIDE'S SONG (Soprano), "If thou shalt deem thy love" Sung by Miss Edith Wynne. | 3 | 0 |
| 15. QUARTETT AND CHORUS (Penillion Nos Galan), "Jane had cheeks as red as roses" | 3 | 0 |
| DANCE MUSIC | 3 | 0 |
| FINALE, QUARTET, AND CHORUS, (Breuddwyd y Frenhines), "May the years begun so brightly" | 3 | 0 |

THE FOLLOWING ARRANGED AS PIANOFORTE DUETS BY THE AUTHOR.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| OVERTURE | 5 | 0 | |
| INTERMEZZO, No. 2 | 2 | 0 | |
| INTERMEZZO, No. 6 | 2 | 0 | |
| DANCE MUSIC | 3 | 0 | |

The Choral and Orchestral Parts published separately.

LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET (CORNER OF BROOK ST.), LONDON.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each | 3 | 6 |

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT, the talented and rising young Pianist, who met with great success at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, will be happy to enter into engagements for concerts, soirees, &c. Address to care of Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., or at Miss Lillie Albrecht's, 5, Gower Street, Bedford Square.

MADAME BARTON-EDMONDS (late Miss ANNIE EDMONDS), begs to say that, having completely recovered from a protracted illness, she is now able to resume her profession. Address, 54, Queen's Road, Bayswater, W.

MISS ELIZA HEYWOOD (Contralto). For Concerts, Oratorios, &c. Address—1, Blenheim Terrace, Stretford Road, Old Trafford, Manchester.

SIGNOR AGNESI will be at liberty to accept engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., from December 20th, 1873, to February 20th, 1874. Address—26, Richmond Road, Bayswater, W.

MR. W. H. CUMMINGS, having no agent, requests that applications respecting engagements be addressed, Brackley Villas, Dulwich.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce, in answer to numerous applications, that the vacancies for Artists in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., are now filled up.

MR. LANSDOWNE COTTELL'S MUSICAL EVENINGS at HOME, for the social study and practice of vocal and concerted music. Ladies and gentlemen desiring to assist, address, Charles Ray, Secretary, 87, Abbey Road, N.W.

THE QUEEN'S CONCERT ROOMS, HANOVER SQUARE. —Ladies and Gentlemen intending to Engage these renowned Rooms during the coming Season, for Balls, Readings, Concerts, and Hebrew Weddings, are respectfully invited to make early application. For terms, apply to Mr. Hall.—Robert Cocks, Proprietor.

REMOVAL.

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA and MADAME MARTORELLI GARCIA, beg leave to announce their Removal to 54, Portsdown Road, Clifton Gardens, Maida Hill, W. N.B.—Signor Gustave Garcia (Nephew of Malibran and Viardot Garcia) will sing at M. Riviere's Concerts during the Season; at the Philharmonic Society (Liverpool), December 9; and at Herr Kuhe's Grand Festival at Brighton in February.

CLERGYMEN, ORGANISTS, and others desirous of Purchasing, Hiring, or Exchanging ORGANS, are invited to inspect the Register of

SECOND-HAND INSTRUMENTS,

Established by

Messrs. J. J. CLEMMANS & SON,

OF No. 5, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Detailed particulars may be had on application.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an Inferior Medal.

Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

A SIMPLE CATECHISM

ON THE

RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

In the form of Question and Answer, and written in familiar language.

BY

E. ELLICE JEWELL.

Price 1s., Cloth Cover.

LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

"THE SACRED HEART." The beautiful Processional Hymn sung by all the Pilgrims to Paray-le-Monial. Arranged as a piece for Pianoforte or Harmonium by J. Pittman. Price 2s.; or, for one or four voices, with French and English words, 1s.—London: E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

THE TALE OF A SHAH. Sung, with immense success, by Mr. Templeton, at every performance of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. 18 stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,

PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS

LYON & HALL,

WARWICK MANSION.

RICHARD WAGNER'S

"THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE" (translated by EDWARD DANNREUTHER) .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. 1s. 0d.
"ART ET POLITIQUE," 1er Partie .. .. .. .. .. 1s. 0d.
"LA JUDAISME DANS LA MUSIQUE .. .. .. .. .. 0s. 6d.

Sent post free.

SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street.

HENRIETTE'S MOST POPULAR SONGS.

"ALWAYS ALONE" .. .. Sung by Madame Patey .. 4s.
"THE KING AND I" .. .. Sung by Mr. Santley .. .. 4s.
"THE CROSS ROADS" .. .. Sung by Miss Edith Wynne .. 4s.
"SYMPATHY" .. .. .. Sung by Miss Enriquez .. .. 4s.
"NOTHING" .. .. .. Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves .. 4s.

E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

"HOMEWARD BOUND."

PART SONG. S.A.T.B.

Composed by the Rev. JOHN HAMPTON, M.A.

Price Fourpence. Octavo size.

London: NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

Published this Day,

"WITH MOONLIGHT BEAMING."

DUET

For Equal Voices.

The Music Composed and Dedicated to

MISS HEGINBOTHAM and MISS MOWER,

By H. KÜSTER.

Price 3s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"ALBION AND SCOTIA,"

FANTASIA FOR THE PIANOFORTE,

On "My Love is like the Red Red Rose" and "The Lass of Richmond Hill."

Composed by WILLIAM CRAWFORD.

Price 4s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"Mr. Crawford has chosen two very good themes for his fantasia. Both the airs he has selected are glowing, and animated, and picturesque; they are precisely of the kind which suffer the least and sound most effectively in elaborate variations. The variations themselves, in this instance, while clever and brilliant, are in strict keeping with the subject. The piece is written throughout in the natural key, and though tolerably good execution is required to do it justice, the fingering presents no exceptional difficulties, so that the Fantasia is very well suited to the requirements of pianoforte students. It is beyond doubt very much superior to a great many of the "arrangements" of popular airs that are so common now-a-days."—Edinburgh Daily Review.

Just Published,

"BRIGHT HOPES OF LOVE,"

AND

"MOONBEAMS ARE FALLING,"

(SERENADE)

From the Comic Opera "THE VILLAGE DOCTOR," now being Performed by the Carl-Rosa English Opera Company.

Composed by JULIUS EICHBERG.

Price 3s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Two Sacred Duets (Just Published) by HENRY SMART.

"SUMMER OF THE SILENT HEART,"

AND

"BEYOND THE HILLS,"

SACRED DUETS

For Soprano and Contralto.

Composed by HENRY SMART.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Just Published,

"CHARLIE IS MY DARLING,"

SCOTCH AIR,

AND

PORTUGUESE AIR,

("TO THE BELOVED ONE")

Transcribed for the Pianoforte.

By CHARLES E. STEPHENS.

Price 4s. each.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

SIR J. BENEDICT'S NEW SYMPHONY.

Art is long, but it is also broad, and few men can cover its width in a single life. This is emphatically the case as regards the art of music; wherefore we may not express any surprise when a veteran musician breaks fresh ground. Composers need never weep like Alexander. Live as long, and do as much as they may, there are always new worlds to conquer, and their only cause for regret lies in the fact that the time for work is short. In some respects, nevertheless, it is remarkable that a musician so eminently gifted as Sir Julius Benedict should have waited till Saturday last before producing his first orchestral symphony. He, above most others, had a right to measure his strength thus, even at a time far removed from the present. The pupil by whom Weber set most store, and the successful labourer in various departments of his art—not least successful in that of composition, as many a recorded triumph exists to prove—Sir Julius Benedict was entitled to emulate the masters, without fear of being charged with presumption. That he reserved his greatest efforts till a recent time proves him to have the rare, and fast becoming rarer, grace of modesty. Now-a-days, men do not hesitate, and "Let I dare not wait upon I would." Oratorios and symphonies are generated by composers whose beards have yet to grow, and, but for pecuniary obstacles,—often a curse, in this case a blessing—the world would be overrun with abortions. We are far from wishing to check ambition's noble rage; but it is impossible not to look admiringly upon the man who, though gifted above most, restrains himself, and reserves supreme effort till his latest and ripest years. When such an effort, made under these circumstances, is attended by success, we recall Coleridge's definition of genius as the "faculty of growth," and award the honours which genius alone commands. Three years ago it will be remembered Sir Julius Benedict produced his first oratorio, St. Peter; astonishing even those who knew him best by a masterful application of the highest artistic means to one of the noblest ends. After that success it was felt that much more remained for the veteran composer to do. He had a new field of exalted labour before him—labour specially valuable at a time when the younger generation of composers is mostly led away to prosecute false issues, and, under the plea of advancement, to go back in the direction of chaos. No one is better qualified than Sir Julius Benedict to lift up the standard of orthodox art among us. He is one of the few musicians now living who connect our time with that of the great masters; and in England, at all events, he is their representative. Looking round upon the too general defection from the pure principles in which he was trained, Sir Julius might almost echo the words of Elijah, "I, even I, only am left." There are, however, we are glad to believe, more than "twenty-and-five thousand" who have not bowed the knee to the Baal of modern musical idolatry, and by whom such works as that produced on Saturday are welcomed, not for their own merits alone, but as a protest and an example.

Written only as the occasions of a busy life served, the Symphony in G minor grew slowly. Two movements—the first allegro and scherzo—were played at the Norwich Festival last year; and the Scherzo, under the title of A Dream of Fairyland, was heard at Mr. Kuhe's Brighton Festival, in February of the present year. Meanwhile the slow movement and finale were added, the whole being produced on Saturday for the first time. There was a fitness in its initial performance at the Crystal Palace, under the direction of Mr. Manns, whose painstaking zeal and great ability have done so much to widen the knowledge of English amateurs. A good execution of the work was thus absolutely secured, and, what is nearly of equal importance, there was a certainty of appeal to an audience qualified above all others to pass righteous judgment upon its merits. Let us add that there was an equal certainty of all possible help from a discriminating analysis of the music and an eloquent advocacy of the composer's claims. We cannot resist quoting an example of this advocacy. "The first performance of a symphony" writes [G.] "is always interesting, especially when it happens to be its author's first. But when, in addition, the 'first symphony' is the composition of a man of known ability and great culture, thoroughly familiar throughout a long life with the orchestra, and practised in every device of construction and instrumentation, and proving to be animated by an energy and fire, a sensibility and restless emotion, such as very few young men possess even at the outset of their career, then the interest excited by the work is raised to an extraordinary degree. And all this is the case in the present instance. . . . We feel proud of having enlarged the circle of English music by so noble and individual a work." These are hearty phrases, and, as such, they represent the spirit in which the Crystal Palace musical authorities took up the new Symphony and laid it before the public. General remarks upon the work must first concern themselves with its astounding youthfulness. We do not mean youthfulness in the sense of crudeness—cela va sans dire—but in the sense, noted by [G.], of energy and keen emotion. There comes a time in every man's life who lives the "three score years and ten," when not only intellectual power but susceptibility of feeling share decay with the bodily faculties. Sir Julius Benedict has not reached that time, nor, judging by his latest work, is he nearer to it than the youngest. The Symphony is instinct with life in its most vivacious and elastic form, reminding us, in this respect, of the undying works written by Haydn for Salomon. Nor is abounding vitality found only as a matter of style and character. It crops up in strong imaginativeness; and a ready flow of ideas such as betoken keen intellectual activity. For the rest, we need only say—if, indeed, there be a necessity to say so much—that, in point of form, clearness of treatment, and masterly use of legitimate resources, the Symphony deserves to be called, as [G.] called it, "one of the most important and able orchestral works that have appeared for many a long year." Adopting a form which most composers now treat as antiquated, Sir Julius Benedict begins his work with an introduction, moderato, distinguished by a rare combination of dignity and sweetness. It is an exordium that at once arrests attention, and conveys an idea that the composer has something to say. Having thus challenged interest, the moderato leads to an allegro appassionato, the first theme of which, by its peculiar rhythmical form, has a singularly restless yet, at the same time, emotional effect. The prevailing character of the movement, thus at once proclaimed, is kept up through the "bridge" connecting the leading theme with its subordinate, which comes as a grateful contrast, and displays the hand of a master. Whenever this subject is afterwards heard, it seems like a ray of sunshine darting through a rift in a tempestuous sky. The repeat of the first part of the movement is led up to by one of the most delightful passages in modern music, and the working out of the second part presents a rare example, not only of technical skill, but of sustaining power. An impressive coda brings the allegro appasionato to an end worthy of its beginning and continuation. The slow movement, andante con moto, in B flat major, opens with a beautiful and sustained melody, one of those tunes which haunt the ear long after the sounds conveying them have "melted into thin air." Joined to the charm of this subject is the equal charm of orchestral treatment that strongly suggests the exquisite grace and tenderness of Schubert. The whole movement illustrates what has been called "the full tide of song." It flows on like some clear river, now with majestic steadiness, now with agitation, always with the beauty which fills the mind and satisfies it. But, perhaps, nothing is more striking than the close, when the ear is kept in suspense, waiting for another "excursion," only to find that which seems the composer's indecision resolve itself and the movement calmly end. The Scherzo having been noticed by us in connection with Mr. Kuhe's festival, there is only need to add that a third hearing has confirmed our early impressions of its bright fancy and unfailing charm. Such a movement may well be called A Dream of Fairyland. It is one upon which Carl Maria Von Weber, the musician of the supernatural, would have smiled approval, and which Mendelssohn, Oberon's Court composer, would have been glad to own. The finale, allegro con brio, resumes the passionate energy of the opening movement, and is marked by many features upon which it would be profitable to dwell. Chief among them is a varied form of the idea, first applied, in a limited degree, by Haydn, if we mistake not; but at any rate developed by Beethoven in his Choral Symphony. We refer to a repetition in the finale of the chief themes in the preceding movements. Sir Julius has done this under novel conditions, and with novel as well as interesting effects, one result being to throw out in strong relief the wonderful energy and fire of the finale proper. If comparison of movement with movement were insisted on, we should say that the allegro con brio is below the level of its companions; but, nevertheless, it concludes the work in a manner which leaves no doubt of completeness and worthiness. Looking at the Symphony as an entire thing, we congratulate the veteran composer upon a splendid success, and trust that his first work of the kind will not be his last.

Digitized by Google

THADDEUS EGG.

ACTION FOR LIBEL.

IN THE EXCHEQUER OF PLEAS.—LEEDS SUMMER ASSIZES, AUG. 13th, 1873.
Before Mr. BARON POLLOCK and a Special Jury.

KIRKMAN v. POHLMANN.

[Transcript from Messrs. MARTEN and MEREDITH'S Shorthand Notes.]

Counsel for the Plaintiff—Mr. FIELD, Q.C., and Mr. LAWRANCE (Instructed by Messrs. DOD and LONGSTAFFE, London).

Counsel for the Defendant—Mr. D. SEYMOUR, Q.C., and Mr. GIBBONS (Instructed by Messrs. NORRIS and Co., Halifax).

(Concluded from page 781.)

Mr. Seymour.—Well, my Lord, I feel the force of what your Lordship says. [To the Witness.] Now I have given you two invoices, in 1871, where you described iron pianos as steel grands, by Kirkman; that you do not now contend was correct? A. Steel uprights. I styled them "steel" because they had a steel bridge at that time.

Q. But you do not now say that that was correct. You are better informed now. You would not describe them so to-morrow? A. Because now there are more makers making them with a steel bridge: but at that time there was not, and that is why I called them steel pianos, to distinguish them from the rest of the pianos. I did not know of any maker at that time who made them except Messrs. Kirkman.

Q. But the description, "Kirkman's steel upright grand," would that be a correct description, in 1871, of an iron grand, by Kirkman, with a steel bridge? A. It would not be a correct description, but I thought we had a right to distinguish it as a steel piano because it had a steel bridge.

Q. Did you continue to describe iron grand pianos with only so much steel in them as we have heard down to this year? A. No; because they became more common then, and it was quite a common thing to have a steel bridge. I think you will find in the caution circular that Mr. Pohlmann directs attention to his steel bridge pianos in 1873.

Q. When customers have come to your shop, have they not seen iron grand pianos, and when they have spoken of a steel grand by Kirkman have you not shown them iron grand pianos? A. Oh no.

Q. You say no? A. You mean grand pianos?

Q. Or grand uprights? A. I have never shown an iron grand pianoforte for a steel one—certainly not.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That is the sting of the whole thing; there is no doubt about it. If what is said here is true it is an indictable fraud which a man might be indicted for; and then the Defendant, because he has got something else, chooses to make this charge.

Mr. Seymour.—Did the piano, mentioned in the advertisement for the concert in 1873, come on the first day or the second day? A. On the second day, in the morning.

Q. "One walnutwood boudoir steel grand?" A. On the second day, in the morning.

Q. And the "one walnutwood steel upright grand" did not come at all? A. Did not come at all.

Q. Had you a person of the name of Jackson in your employ at the time? A. Yes.

Q. And was there also a gentleman of the name of Bickerdyke? A. Yes.

Q. Now, I have asked you this question, Did you instruct Bickerdyke that if anyone asked for a steel upright grand piano by Kirkman, they were to be shown a particular piano which was an iron one? A. Oh, dear, no, I never instructed him anything at all of the sort.

Mr. Field.—I do not see how this bears upon the question at all The question is as to advertising. If this gentleman says it is not so, I do not mind about it; but as a matter of law, I do not see, even if he had said so, how it bears upon the question in the slightest degree.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—It does not, unless you could show that Bickerdyke had advertised it. Then that would be proved aliunde. What instructions he gives is quite another matter. He is not either Plaintiff or Defendant. If you want to show that a man of the name of Bickerdyke did commit this fraud then you will get all you want—or I will not say all you want, but you will get what you are attempting to set up. But is it worth while? Your client has written some letters, you know, and nobody has foreshadowed anything that touches this case yet, surely we can get to some definite point. Here are specific things known and sold as "Steel Grands," thousands of people in Halifax must have seen these things in the newspapers, and the charge is that steel grand pianos are advertised which have no more steel in them than a common pianoforte. If you can call people to show that they are, it may be worth something.

Mr. Seymour.—I will tell your lordship at once what my answer to that is, and what I propose to show.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—You are now asking about his setting somebody else to call it a "Steel Grand."

Mr. Seymour.—Well, that will show the system that was pursued.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Then call the man that did it. Because it seems to me whether the man did it with instructions or without is the same. It is not what he instructed the man to say in his office or shop, but what the man himself did.

Mr. Seymour.—Very well, my lord, (to the witness) then I will ask you one general question. I understand your lordship to think I cannot ask what instructions he gave to Jackson.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That is not evidence, and I do not see that it touches the question.

Mr. Seymour.—Did you exhibit to customers calling at your shop, and enquiring for Kirkman's Steel Pianos, or Steel Grand Pianos, Iron Grand Pianos with steel strings and steel bridges?—that is my question. A. I do not ever remember exhibiting a piano at all before the exhibition in the Drill Shed.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Mr. Seymour means—if a person came into your shop and said "I want to see one of Kirkman's Steel Grand Pianos," did you ever show him an iron one? A. Certainly not, my lord.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Well, I should hope not.

Mr. Seymour.—It is one thing to suggest fraud; it is another thing to show that things were sold as steel which were not steel.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Well, I do not see any harm in calling things by their right names myself.

Mr. Seymour.—Your lordship sees he admits that he sold pianos which were not properly described.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—That is a matter of opinion. If, at that time, there was a piano which was the only upright piano which had any steel in it, it might be a very fair thing to call it a Steel Upright Piano. That does not mean that it is all steel; it does not mean, for instance, that the hammers or any particular parts of it are steel, but that it is an upright piano having steel used in its construction.

Mr. Seymour.—Q. Now, I called your attention to a person of the name of Jackson, who was in your employment. A. Yes.

Q. Was Mr. Turner also in your employment? A. Yes; Jackson is not now.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—You must make certain allowances for everybody. Your own client says, speaking of his pianos: "If you wish to see and try the real American Model Iron Overstrung Grands with double compensating iron frame (back and front), compression sound board, resonator, and Steinway's new escapement action, combining all the recent improvements made in America, Germany and France, inspect the instruments now on view at Messrs. Pohlmann and Sons;" mean, supposing a man were to say, "Why your clients' pianos had not all the latest improvements, because it had not everything that occurred in London up to yesterday," you cannot take a man up by the card in that way.

[A consultation here took place between the learned Counsel.]

Mr. Seymour.—My lord, I am happy to say that my client has done that which I am sure your lordship will commend him for doing: he has left himself in my hands, and, that being so, I think the proper termination of this case is to consent to a verdict of 40*s.*, which will carry costs, and to add to that what I dare say will be more valuable to Mr. Kirkman and more prized by him, and which I wish to give ungrudgingly, the assurance that, neither at the time of the publication of this libel, nor at any time, did it ever enter into the mind of the defendant (and if he used language which conveys that which was not on his mind, he regrets it), that Mr. Kirkman either associated his name, workmanship, or skill as a manufacturer with any pianos described by one name, and not carrying out virtually and honourably that description. The defendant's object in writing this caution was that he had facts before him which led him to believe that pianos were sold under the name of "Steel Grand" pianos, which have only as much steel in them as ordinary pianos. But when he wrote that warning, Mr. Kirkman's pianos, under no description whatever, were before him, and had nothing to do with the language which he used. However, he feels now, after what has been proved, and the circulars and advertisements which have been put in, that a third party taking up this might fall naturally into the mistake of thinking that the language reflected on Mr. Kirkman himself, and as that is so, and your lordship has intimated that that would be a fair construction of the document, he retires from this case; he consents to a verdict; and he tenders through me, that which he means to be a sufficient and ample apology, and which I hope will be accepted as such.

Digitized by Google

Mr. Field.—As I said before, this action was brought by Mr. Kirkman without any vindictive desire at all, but simply in order that his fair fame and honour as a gentleman and a manufacturer should not be tarnished by this charge. Under these circumstances, my friend having withdrawn in the fullest possible way the charge conveyed in this Caution, I am authorized by my client to accept the apology in the spirit in which it has been offered.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—I am sure, Mr. Seymour, your client has done very wisely in leaving himself in your hands in this case, because your own instincts suggested the proper course. When a man has, no doubt unintentionally in this case, trodden on the toes of other people, the best course is, at the earliest moment to say so—and to say so in the fullest and most ample manner. I think the Defendant has now done that most fully through his counsel, and, therefore, gentlemen, you will find a verdict for the Plaintiff for forty shillings.

Mr. Field.—Your lordship will please to certify that this is a proper case for the superior court and also for a special jury.

Mr. Baron Pollock.—Certainly.

MUSIC AT MELBOURNE.

(From our own Correspondent.)

The principal event of the month at the Opera has been the production of Offenbach's Geneviève de Brabant, which has been pronounced a decided success. Miss Alice May, as Drogan, has added to her list of triumphs. Speaking of the elegance of the costumes, the Argus says:—

"In this last-named respect, Miss Alice May, who plays throughout with a genuine talent for burlesque, achieved a great success, and, as Drogan (promoted from being a pastrycook to being the Duke's page), made an appearance that pleased the audience very highly."

The Weekly Times says, "Miss Alice May dresses the piece well, and her vivacity helps the piece wonderfully." The Age praises the whole performance, and thus speaks of Miss May:—

"As usual, in opera of this class, the burden is thrown on Miss May, and in this instance she sustains it with even more than her customary ability. The part allows for the display of the special line of talent she showed as Boulotte, but not in such an extravagant degree; and, as with the fun of the piece are mingled opportunities for the exhibition of the highest ballad singing, it may be fairly supposed that this will individually eclipse her previous efforts."

The Australasian declares:—

"It was worth any one's while to see and hear, if only for the sake of two songs sung by Miss Alice May and Mr. Beaumont respectively, the one being called the 'Sleep song,' and the other the 'Song of Sorrow;' and, curiously enough, neither of these songs belongs to the opera, while, at the same time, they are decidedly the best part of the performance. It is due to the conductor, Mr. G. B. Allen, to say that the first-named of these songs is his own composition, and that it is scored for the orchestra in very effective style."

Miss May took her first benefit in Melbourne on the 2nd inst., when there was an excellent house, with the exception of the dress circle. Miss May's reception was most enthusiastic. The Argus thus speaks of it:—

"The performance at the Operahouse last night was for the benefit of Miss Alice May. It is right to assume that if this lady had not devoted her talents to the representation of opera in English form, we should have been without a season of English opera ever since the last Italian opera season closed. Her first benefit under ordinary circumstances should have resulted in solid success. The influence of a rainy night, the near appearance in the same theatre of Mdlle. Jenny Claus, the distinguished violinist, and the return to Melbourne of Mdme. Arabella Goddard, may have had some influence upon the general attendance at the Theatre. Nevertheless, all parts of the house, with the exception of the dress circle, were well filled. Miss May's studies in the operatic branch of her profession have been undertaken and carried out thus far in Melbourne. As far as her reception by her audience went last night, Miss May has every reason to be well satisfied. She played in the third act of Satanella and also in Geneviève de Brabant (omitting the first part). In each case she received the most flattering marks of esteem from her audience; and in the 'Sleep Song' in the last-named piece, after having been kept well occupied in picking up the bouquets thrown to her, applause was so continuous that she had to repeat the performance, to the great satisfaction of her audience."

On the following night the celebrated violinist, Mdlle. Jenny Claus, made her first appearance in Melbourne, and played solos between the acts of the opera Maritana. There was not a large attendance, but the audience was soon roused into enthusiasm by the marvellously sweet and delicate playing of this gifted artist. It is quite an extraordinary fact that two such artists as Arabella Goddard and Jenny Claus should meet in Australia; but at present there seems no probability of them uniting their great powers (as has been suggested by the Argus) at a concert. That an audience should be found here who could thoroughly appreciate Mendelssohn's Concerto for the Violin speaks well for the colony, and this was the first piece played by Mdlle. Claus, at the conclusion of which she was called and recalled, in fact, received quite an ovation. She then kindly gave a Berçeuse con sordino. Her next piece was a Fantasia on airs from Marta, and, as an encore, she played a solo very like the popular little pianoforte piece, "La noce du village." Her success is great, and she will doubtless have no cause to regret her long voyage to these distant parts. Madame Arabella Goddard's last concert but one took place on the 4th inst.

MUSIC AT BOULOGNE-SUR-MER.

(From a Correspondent.)

November 8, 1873.

It may not be uninteresting to some of your readers to have an analysis of the "Saison d'été," which has just closed. Let me, therefore, state that, on sixty-nine nights (from July 1st to Oct. 31st), no less than 92 representations took place on the boards of the Salle Monsigny. These representations were varied and various, and consisted of 25 representations of grand operas, 42 operas comique, 3 operas bouffe, 4 dramas, 6 vaudevilles, 7 comedies, and 3 operas féerie. From the above it will be seen that M. Clement Martin has very properly—very properly for himself, as well as for the public—followed the advice, so often proffered last year, of producing and repeating operas comique as much as possible, and, by so doing, not overtaxing the capabilities of his artists. In grand opera he has not attempted such pieces as Hamlet, Romeo et Juliette, and others, which would not have drawn the crowded houses he has had, as a rule, all through the season. Halevy's Charles VI. was a success, and repeated four times. La Favorite, La Juive, Le Trouvère, La Muette de Portici (Masaniello), Les Huguenots, Lucie, and Guillaume Tell, made up the répertoire of grand operas. The operas comique, of course, owe their numerical strength to the Fille de Madame Angot; for no less than 19 times has this young lady appeared on the stage, to the delight of crammed houses. And when I say "has appeared nineteen times," I mean that the piquante little opera has been performed that number of times; for, counting the encores and entrances and exits "de la fille Angot," I could not possibly get a correct account. The latest novelty in the "Angot" way, by the bye, I saw this morning in the window of a musicseller's shop. It was a song, entitled "La petite Fille de Madame Angot," and supposed to be sung at the Alcazar, in Paris. It seems strange to put alongside La Fille, as opera comique, Le Barbier de Seville, Mignon, Le Domino Noir, Faust, Haydée, Les Dragons de Villars, &c.; but such they are styled. Le Petit Faust, repeated three times, makes up our bouffe entertainment. Comedies and vaudevilles, ten in number, consisted of one-act pieces, mostly played on a Sunday, when the "gods" and "gentlemen" under the balcony stalls go in at 6 p.m., and spend a good six hours at the play, sauntering out between the acts, and "marking the spot" where they sit during the play by binding their pocket handkerchiefs round the benches. As some are white, others red, blue, yellow, &c., the effect seen from the balcony is at once varied and charming (!!) N.B.—They tie them so at the beginning of the evening, and never remove them till the last note is sounded. The opera féerie was three representations of the Cheval de Bronze of Auber. And now about the artists who have taken part, or rather parts, in all these various and varied operas and other performances. Luckily M. Clement did not find it necessary to change his artists very often this year; and to this fact, no doubt, much of his success is owing. The number of artists who assisted are too numerous to detail; but let me mention with especial favour Mdlle. Telmar (soprano), Mdlle. Peyret (contralto), Mdlle. Noaille, and Mdlle. Poitevin; M. Bresson (our tenor of last season also), M. Budaut, and M. Larrivé. The artists in Madame Angot I take alone; Mdlle. Mey (who played "La fille"), Mdlle. Noaille (Mdlle. Lange), M. Descamps (Ange Pitou), and M. et Mdme. Kinnel, forming a host in themselves. The orchestra has all through the season been exceptionally good, under the baton of M. Champenois. The chorus also has been thoroughly up to the mark—always in "time and tune." Next week I shall give you a summary of what has gone on at the Etablissement des Bains during the past season.

S. C.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

After the great Triennial Festival a dead calm sets in here for some weeks; and well it is that such is the case, for were aught musical attempted in the interim, failure to a greater or less degree would be inevitable, both in an artistic and pecuniary sense, as no ordinary entertainment could for one moment compare, in the former respect, with what is not so much a local as an European celebration, while, prosperous though Birmingham may be, and undoubtedly is, so much money is spent during the four days of the all-important meeting, that for a time, at least, something like a semblance of economy is observed, even by those who are in a general way lavish in their expenditure. Now, however, a decent interval having intervened, the regular winter season has begun in good earnest, Messrs. Harrison, the enterprising caterers for public amusement (and I may add instruction), having been foremost in the field with the opening concert of the six, which are announced under the head of "Popular," though not in the "Arthur Chappell" reading of the term. The programme being essentially of a miscellaneous character exempts it from the necessity of a detailed notice, and it is sufficient to say that the artists engaged included Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and her sister, Miss José Sherrington, Mr. and Mdme. Patey, Miss Banks, M. Jules Lefort, M. Sainton, Mr. Sydney Smith, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Sims Reeves, who, to the great delight of his many admirers, was in splendid voice, and conferred a proportionate pleasure on his hearers.

Next, in chronological order, came the first concert of the Festival Choral Society, under the conductorship of the indefatigable Mr. Stockley, to whose careful training so much of the great effect produced at the musical festivals may be fairly attributed. Elijah was the work chosen, and although, for reasons which must have been at once apparent to the most casual observer, the performance fell far short of what was heard in the Town Hall on the 26th August last (the anniversary, to a day, of its original production under Mendelssohn's own direction in the same room twenty seven years previously). There was, nevertheless, much to praise, the solo singers, Mdme. Corrani, Miss Helen D'Alton, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Lewis Thomas, all more or less capable and practised exponents of their art, doing justice to their respective parts, while the chorus showed that they had not forgotten the training undergone for the Festival. The band, unfortunately, presented no more opportunity for eulogy than it has done on so many previous occasions.

Despite the éclat attendant on the triennial musical celebrations in the "Hardware Capital," personal observation forces upon me the conclusion that a true taste for what is best and noblest in music does not really exist here; and if anything were wanting to confirm such opinion, the attendance at Messrs. Harrisons' second concert would have furnished sufficient justification. For it is very evident that, as is but too frequently the case elsewhere, the more popular the name of the artist, and the more hackneyed the piece, the more certainly may the mass of the British public be expected to follow the invitation addressed by demagogues to their followers, and "come in their thousands;" for the hall was thronged to more than repletion when a scheme more or less commonplace in its construction was presented, while with a programme which included Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony, Beethoven's overture (No. 3) to Leonora, Schubert's Rosamunde music, and Weber's Concertstück, all with Mr. Charles Hallé's band, the number of empty benches was not creditable to what may be supposed to be the taste and appreciation of Birmingham amateurs. Those who did attend found ample gratification, and as, besides the pieces already named, the familiar overtures to Guillaume Tell and Zampa were given, while the vocalists included Miss Edith Wynne, Miss Enriquez, and Mr. Santley, all in good voice and singing their best, the latter in Rossini's aria, "Alle voci della gloria," astonishing even those most familiar with his capabilities by his marvellously facile execution of a piece which would appear to have been written for a very flexible light soprano rather than for a baritone or bass, it will be conceded that there was in every way an evening's entertainment worthy of the most ample support. Messrs. Harrisons' next concert is to be after the model of the Monday Pops., with Madame Norman-Néruda, Mr. Charles Hallé, Mr. Lazarus, and the quartet of strings, and Madame Lemmens-Sherrington and Mr. Sims Reeves as vocal stars.

During the present week the Carl Rosa Opera Company have drawn good houses to the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Maritana, The Rose of Castile, Marriage of Figaro, Bohemian Girl, Trovatore, and Don Giovanni being the operas represented; the principal parts being taken by Miss Blanche Cole, Miss Rose Hersee, Mdme. Vaneri, Miss Lucy Franklin, Messrs. Castle (the American tenor), Aynsley Cook, Stevens, and Campbell, with a small but efficient orchestra, conducted by the husband of Mdme. Parepa, whose pleasant genial face and brilliant vocal acquirements would have formed a delighful addition to the attractiveness of what may be considered the best English travelling opera company at present extant.

While on the subject of operas, I may mention that among the manifold delectations of the Birmingham Cattle Show week, in the beginning of December, Mr. Mapleson's Company, Mdlle. Tietjens, Mdme. Trebelli, &c., &c., will give four representations, Le Nozze di Figaro, Trovatore, Lucrezia Borgia, and Faust, at the Theatre Royal. Moreover, Mr. Stockley announces a series of these concerts, at each of which an entire Symphony is to form a leading feature, while other entrepreneurs are coming forward with musical promises more or less noteworthy. Thus the local season bids fair to be one of unusual extent and interest.

D. H.

—o—

M. DEPRET'S TE DEUM AT BRUSSELS.

The spirit which presided at the conception of this work is the spirit predominating in the compositions sprung from the innovating tendencies of the present day. The work is a sort of laudatory spirale, where a system of extreme sobriety produces in succession grand and striking effects. The whole is based upon vocal concerted pieces, skilfully grouped, which stand forth and alternate with each other in the most admirable manner. The author obtains extremely abundant resources from unison. This he envelops, according to his fancy, in the meanderings of the voices and the accompanying instruments, and, when he wishes, causes it to emerge in all the plentitude of its majestic and imposing expression. We have, indeed, a people praying to, and exalting, the Creator.

Never does the orchestra infringe on any of the rights belonging to the melody. It comments on, supports, and strengthens it. A hundred voices uttering the same words convey to the ear more effectually, perhaps, than any picturesque scoring that the author of the text desired to express.

The immense crowd assembled under the roof of St. Gudule, after listening with pious attention to the imposing work of our worthy compatriot, retired under the influence of sincere and deep emotion, which, we believe, will not be effaced for a long time. We may add that the King has accepted, in a most flattering letter, the dedication of the Te Deum, thus justly rewarding a man of real and serious talent, whose devotion to the art of his own country knows no limit.—Abridged from the Guide Musical.

AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

Dr. Hans von Bülow has made a decided hit on the piano. This is not a thumper: nor is he. So deftly does he manage the keys and the pedals, that, dropping the von, the Professor should be named Hans and Feet Bülow, or Hans Above and Feet Bülow. In the absence of Madame Arabella Goddard (now enchanting the Antipodes), it is most gratifying to hear so admirable a performance as is that of Dr. Hans von Bülow. So able an interpreter is he of the great musical Abbé's pieces, that in England he might head one part of his programme with the adopted Shakespearian motto, "Liszt, Liszt, oh, Liszt!" And we suggest that when he wants an epitaph—some hundred years hence, or more—it should be:—

"Faithful Bülow, he did his duty,
And now he's gone aloft."

Punch.

Digitized by Google

MISS GABRIEL'S "EVANGELINE."

The energetic conductor of the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts brought forward on Monday evening a welcome novelty in the shape of Miss Virginia Gabriel's Evangeline. The author of the libretto, Mr. J. J. Lonsdale, has followed the outline of Longfellow's poem in a very general way, and has furnished a thread for stringing together musical pieces of well-contrasted variety. After a bright and graceful overture comes a bridal chorus of somewhat serious and religious character, which is followed by a recitative and serenade, "The flowers I bring are dim and few," sung by Mr. George Perren, who did every justice to its melodious and flowing character. Then follows a march, introducing old English naval and military airs ingeniously interwoven and effectively instrumented; succeeded by two recitatives, one for a baritone, "Hard are my tidings to utter," sung with impressive emphasis and well-sustained power by Mr. Charles E. Tinney; and another, forming a spirited answer, "Down with the tyrants of England," leading up to a song, "Arm! for hearth and home," both sung by Mr. George Perren. A brawling chorus, "If a bear go prowling by," expressive of the tumultuous action of an excited multitude, following this appeal to arms, is, if not altogether original, one of the most stirring and well-written numbers in the whole work. A recitative and prayer, assigned to Mr. Tinney, then carry on the action until the principal soprano part is introduced, for the first time, in a duet (Madame Elena Corani and Mr. Perren). Some portion of this lengthy number is written in the composer's most happy vein, and produced a corresponding effect. A chorus, "Farewell, Arcadia," and a religious chant, "Sacred heart of the Saviour," the latter ingeniously written, were also greeted with signs of approbation; but, undoubtedly, the gem of the cantata is the slumber song (allotted to Miss Enriquez), "Sad heart, O take thy rest," the graceful character of the melody, one of the most original inspirations of Miss Gabriel, and the admirable manner in which it was sung, rousing the audience to enthusiastic demonstrations, and a demand for an encore. A scena and recitative and an aria, "In the hour of meeting," sung by Madame Corani, lead up to the finale, "Welcome, welcome a thousandfold," containing an extremely graceful movement, harmonized with ability, and producing so marked an effect as to constitute a brilliant termination to this very creditable production, which, though somewhat unsuited to a mixed audience, so abounds in melody that it was listened to with manifest interest throughout. Miss Gabriel's capabilities as a writer of melody needed no fresh assertion, but she has now established the title to be considered a sound musician.

—o—

MUSICAL EVENINGS.

The third concert of the series took place on the 19th, in St. George's Hall, and attracted a very full audience. Nobody present wondered at the crowd, because the programme was quite able to account for it. Rarely has a better or more interesting selection been presented than that which began with the one movement (in C minor) which is all that we have of a posthumous quartet by Schubert. The movement is in the master's best style, and excites regret that he did not live to finish what would probably have been one of his finest works. After a song —Hummel's "L'embrosa notte vien"—had been sung by Miss Abbie Whinery, Mr. Walter Macfarren played Sir Sterndale Bennett's new sonata, The Maid of Orleans, in a style which left little or nothing to desire. The artist had evidently mastered his interesting subject, and presented it, both intellectually and executively, with all requisite clearness and accuracy. It was but simple justice when Mr. Macfarren had to return and acknowledge the approval of his efforts. Miss Whinery next sang Mendelssohn's "First violet," and Haydn's "Mermaid's song," after which Schumann's Fantaisiestücke for piano, violin, and violoncello, were played by Messrs. Macfarren, Henry Holmes, and Pezze. A performance by Mr. Burnett of an "Air" for viola, the work of Mr. H. Holmes, deservedly won a recall, and the concert ended with Beethoven's quintet in E flat (Op. 4), which popular work was capitally played, and received with great favour. The conductor was Mr. Stephen Kemp.

Bologna.—Signor Braga, who is a violoncellist as well as a composer, intends giving a short series of concerts here.

MISS EMILY MOTT'S CONCERT.

A concert was given, under royal and distinguished patronage, in St. James's Hall, on the 20th, by Miss Emily Mott, a young contralto who is making her way, under favourable circumstances, to a good artistic position. The room was well filled, and the large audience seemed thoroughly pleased with the provision made for their gratification. As the programme was long, we can only make reference to its most important, or most successful items; and, first of all, as to the bénéficiaire, let us say that she sang Benedict's "Scenes of my youth" very nicely, winning an unmistakably warm encore. She next joined Mr. Sims Reeves in "Si la stanchezza," which was also encored, and, finally, contributed "Thady O'Flinn" with almost equal success. Miss Mott has only to work steadily on, in order to obtain the goal of her ambition. Miss Sophie Ferrari made a decided sensation by her performances at this concert. She gave Bishop's "Bid me discourse" with great fluency and point; following up this success with Wallace's "Softly ye night winds," and her clever sister's "Placido zeffiretto"—a really charming composition, delightfully rendered. There is no more pleasing artist before the public than Miss Ferrari, and we are always glad of an opportunity to applaud her efforts, for the simple reason that they invariably deserve applause. Among the other artists who appeared were Miss Banks, Mr. W. H. Cummings, Mr. Edwin, M. Lott; Mr. Betjemann, Mr. W. H. Thomas (who played Pauer's "La Cascade" to perfection), and Miss Lily Mott, a very young student of the piano.

—o—

MADAME ARABELLA GODDARD IN MELBOURNE.

(From the "Argus," October 4.)

The musical season, which will always in this city bear a distinct title on account of the great artist whose performances are now drawing nearly to a close, was further adorned on Saturday night by a grand concert, in which Mdme. Goddard re-appeared. It is much to be regretted that recent ill-health should have interfered with the continuity of Mdme. Goddard's public performances in Melbourne, because each one was a valuable lesson whose worth could not be expressed in figures. One more opportunity yet remains for art-lovers in music to take advantage of the greatest example that has ever been presented in this country—to witness the easy exercise of perfect manipulative skill, under the control of a quick intelligence in the highest condition of cultivation. Next Thursday night will witness Mdme. Arabella Goddard's final appearance in Melbourne, and on the following day she will leave by the mail steamer for India and the East. . . . The Mendelssohn trio in D minor (Op. 49) was a performance the audience should have been proud to hear as played by Madame Goddard (piano), Mr. John Hill (violin), and Mr. Montague (violoncello). Whether in the allegro, the andante, or the scherzo movements, Madame Goddard's play was perfect. Higher praise we cannot give, and a whole chapter of explanation could do no more than illustrate the meaning of it. The unexampled skill which charms the general ear in the interpretation of a popular tune was here brought to bear with the good will of a genial artist upon an elegant work of the last of the great masters, and the result was such as would have pleased the most exigent of musical audiences. Mr. Hill and Mr. Montague were honourably associated in this performance with Madame Goddard. In the duet by Thalberg and De Beriot, from The Huguenots, for piano and violin, Madame Goddard and Mr. Hill were equally successful. Both players knew Meyerbeer's opera, and the instruments they touched gave sympathetic and intelligible response to the minds that controlled their harmonious utterances. Madame Goddard played, as a solo, Brissac's Scotch fantasia, in which, amongst many a well-known tune, the air of "Annie Laurie" was given with beautiful simplicity and most artistic finish. A great encore followed this performance, and when Madame Goddard re-appeared she received a shower of bouquets from such amongst the audience as were near enough to fling them on the platform. To satisfy this demand, Madame Goddard played the "Last Rose of Summer" in the unapproachable manner with which all musical Melbourne is now acquainted.

Leghorn.—The Teatro Rossini was opened for the season with I promessi Sposi, by Signor Petrella. The principal parts were confided to Signore Maria Rossetti, Bernardoni, Uboldi, Signori Rampini, Boncori, Catani, and Borelli.

Digitized by Google

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS,
ST. JAMES'S HALL.

SIXTEENTH SEASON, 1873-4.

DIRECTOR—MR. S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

SEVENTH CONCERT,
MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 1, 1873.

To Commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET in G major, Op. 64, No. 4, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, MM. L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Haydn.
SONG, "The Erl King"—Mr. SANTLEY .. .. .. .. .. Schubert.
SONATA, "The Maid of Orleans," for pianoforte alone (first time at the Popular Concerts)—Dr. HANS VON BULOW .. ... Bennett.

PART II.

SONATA in D major, Op. 18, for pianoforte and violoncello (first time at the Popular Concerts)—Dr. HANS VON BULOW and Signor PIATTI .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Rubinstein.
SONGS, {"If doughty deeds" / "To Anthea"}—Mr. SANTLEY .. .. .. Sullivan. / Hatton.
TRIO in D major, Op. 70, No. 1, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Dr. HANS VON BULOW, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Signor PIATTI .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.
Conductor .. .. .. .. SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.
SATURDAY AFTERNOON (THIS DAY), Nov. 29, 1873.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET in B flat, Op. 33, No. 4, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, MM. L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Haydn.
LIEDERKREIS—Mr. SIMS REEVES .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.
FANTASIA, "Kreisleriana," for pianoforte alone, Op. 16 (first time at the Popular Concerts)—Dr. HANS VON BULOW .. .. Schumann.
SONG, "The requital"—Mr. SIMS REEVES .. .. .. .. Blumenthal.
TRIO in E flat, Op. 70, No. 2, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello—Dr. HANS VON BULOW, Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, and Signor PIATTI .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.
Conductor .. .. .. .. SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

NINTH CONCERT—THIS DAY—NOVEMBER 29th, 1873.

PROGRAMME.

OVERTURE, "Der Freischütz" .. .. .. .. .. Weber.
ARIA, "It is enough" (Elijah)—Mr. GEORGE FOX .. .. .. Mendelssohn.
SONATA, "The Maid of Orleans"—Mr. FRANKLIN TAYLOR .. W. S. Bennett.
Andante Pastorale. In the Fields. | Adagio Patetico. In Prison.
Allegro Marziale. In the Field. | Moto di Passione. The End.
(First Time.)
ARIA, "Zeffretti lusinghieri" (Idomeneo)—Madame ALVSLEBEN Mozart.
RECIT., ADAGIO, & ALLEGRO, Violin Concerto, No. 6—Herr STRAUS .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Spohr.
ARIA, "Be thou faithful unto death" (St. Paul)—Mr. VERNON RIGBY Mendelssohn.
CANTATA, "Praise of Music"—Madame ALVSLEBEN, Miss EMILY SPILLER, Mr. VERNON RIGBY, Mr. GEORGE FOX, and the CRYSTAL PALACE CHOIR .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.
Conductor .. .. .. .. .. MR. MANNS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

HAM.—Bacon.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 29, 1873.

THE following smart letter was published in the musical columns of last Saturday's Athenæum :—

"MUSICAL ANALYSIS.

"On Monday I went to the St. James's Hall to hear Von Bülow play a Beethoven Sonata, written in his* 'deaf' time, but when he could hear better and see further than he did in younger days. An analysis had been provided for the illiterate. It was meant to be an explanation of the order of the themes in the sonata, and of the relations of the key in which they appear. I opened the brochure at p. 87, and at the bottom read:—'This masterly exhibition breaks off upon the dominant of A flat, whence, through a bold transition, we are conducted to G minor,' &c. Any moderately informed student in a training-school would have written, 'the composer removes from sol to si minor.' The musician would say 'the change is from 5 to 7 minor'—a very natural and common remove.

"At p. 83, I read 'of an unexpected transition into an extraneous (unconnected) key.' This Beethoven never did. The school-boy would have said 'the remove is from flat six to flat four'—a pleasant and natural change, which the analyst describes as 'an enharmonic change of D flat to C sharp, modulating to E natural.' There is no enharmonic! Here we are told Beethoven did something very wrong, and of which 'he seems to be suddenly aware, and, as it were conscience-stricken, hurries back by a short cut to A flat.' As he was close home, how could he take a short cut?

Composers think with the sounds or intervals of the key expressed by figures, or by the movable do. They never use the letters of tones; these are of no avail in the consideration of proportions. These signs are do, sol, fa, la, mi, &c., or 1, 5, 4, 3, 6, &c. Let the analyst explain the plan of movements by these symbols, and a child may see the order and relation. For example (page 87), figure the theme of the fugue 1, 4, 2, 5, 3, 6, 5, 4, 3. Then turn over to page 88, and the likeness appears by the figures 8, 5, 7, 4, 6, 3, 4, 5, 6. Add them together, each couple equals nine.

"Our analysts seem to be unaware that the flat sixth major is as closely related to the key as the natural sixth minor. If they could be induced to learn the number of tones in a key, and their answering relatives, we should read no more of 'transitions,' 'extraneous,' 'enharmonic,' 'conscience-offending,' and the like. Readers of explanations may rest assured, whenever they meet with a string of long Latin or Greek words, they will find little or no real information. H. J. G."

The foregoing is a smart letter. Its exposition of "nine" is relishable. We should have thought that 1, 4, 2, 5, 3, 6, 5, 4, 3, "added together," would represent 33. Be chesm!—on our eyes be it. Equally we should have thought (that is, on "turning to page 88,") that 8, 5, 7, 4, 6, 3, 4, 5, 6, added together, would represent 48. Be chesm—on our eyes be it. This is surely "higher development" in arithmetic. Whose dogs are we?

Nevertheless, to be instructed is not to be mistaught, unless in a vocabulary sense, or in a sense of number. For the number "9" our reverence is of some date. We became conscious of its import after a first reading of the Amphitheatrum Æternæ Providentiæ Divino Magicum Christiano Physicum nec non Astrologico-Catholicum, adversus veteres Philosophos, Atheos, Epicuros, Peripateticos, et Stoicos, by Julius Cæsar Vaninus (Philosophus, Theologus, ac Iuris utriusque Doctorus), which, by mistake, was not dedicated to Dr. Ggiibbllleett, despite the fact that at that period Dr. Ggiibbllleett had not been expelled from his "antenatal tomb" (Shelley Bysshe Percy).

Thus, after a long preamble, writes Vaninus (who makes the number "7" kick the bucket):—

"—— est principium omnium numerorum; tum quia est finis; claudit namque novenarium; in quo sunt omnes species, ac proportiones, quantitatores, tam primariæ, quam consequentes, seu resultantes, longitudo, latitudo, profunditas, perfectum, imperfectum, divisibile, indivisibile, trigonum, cubum, oblongum, varilaterum (polyhedric—many-sided), æqualitas, inæqualitas, absolutum, comparatum, simplex, multiplex, simile, diversum"—&c., &c., &c.

Julius Cæsar Vaninus (Lucilio Vanini, if called by his Christian and proper names—although he was neither Christian nor proper*) says much more on the point (or rather on the "9,"):—but enough has been quoted.

HAPPY THOUGHT.

Lady Macbeth.—How now, my lord? Why do you keep alone?

* * * * * * * *

* Von Bulow's?

* Otherwise why brent?

Digitized by Google

Enter First Murderer.

Macbeth.—There's blood upon thy face.
Murderer.—'Tis Banquo's, then.
Macbeth.—Is he despatch'd?
Murderer.—My lord, his throat is cut, that I did for him in the last impression.
Macbeth.—Thou art the best of cut-throats. Yet he's good that did the like for Fleance; if thou didst it thou art the nonpareil.
Murderer.—Most royal sir, Fleance is 'scaped.
Macbeth.—Then comes my fit again.

'Ware Fleance! "Higher development" is a great matter; but 'ware Fleance.

Nevertheless, it must be borne in mind that Sir Thomas Browne not only wrote Hydriotaphia, or Urn Burial (two discourses found in Norfolk), but also the Garden of Cyrus, and other works. This, it may be surmised, is away from the matter in hand. Hardly so. Read, on the contrary, Sir Browne, in his dedication to Thomas le Gros, of Crostwick (Esq.):—

"But who knows the fate of his bones, or how often he is to be buried? Who hath the oracle of his ashes?"

And further on, Sir Browne, with his accustomed equanimity, saith:—

"Cornelius Sylla was not the first whose body was burned in Rome . . . . . for when even crows were funereally burned, Poppæa, the wife of Nero, found a peculiar grave-interment, &c."

Talk of the highest run of cremation as we may, the thing now of most grave import is the "higher development." Let us then be highlier developed, and then, if we feel inclined, we can change "from 5 to 7 minor." Mark the "not" in the reference to the body of Cornelius Sylla;—nay, mark it well (read Godwin's Essay on Sepulchres), and you will perceive that, after all, Mr. Shirley Brooks was not so wrong when he said something in his Essence of Parliament which we cannot remember, or Mr. Frank Burnand—who, though still horseless, persists in buying stamps.

We take this matter with more than usual earnestness, because, dulce subridens, a gentlemen asks you to dinner, and then has you carved up (like the plentiful goose) by another gentleman, who has not asked you to dinner, but entertains the design of eating you himself. Somebody says somewhere—Herodotus, Xenophon, or somebody—about somebody eating somebody's own son.

"One day the Fabii stoutly warred
One day the Fabii were destroyed."

Moreover, as one of our living and kicking (happily) epic poets writes:—

"This was his plan—
He made young Dan
Stay in a room below," &c.

But although all our fancy does not (mark the not) dwell upon Nancy, we have an abhorrence of "Tally-ho"—an absolute abhorrence. "Dulce et decorum pro patria mori" is, has always been, and ever will be our motto.

"Thy quick disease, whilst it is fresh to-day,
By all means crush; the feet at first step stay."

"Stay me with flagons, comfort me with apples," sang the wisest of kings, in the most beautiful of all songs. Why, then, should not other good rules and precepts be enjoined by our physicians? A great river cut into many channels runs low at last:—

"Hortor et ut paritèr binas habeatis amicas"

—a somewhat limping hexameter, as "any moderately informed student in a training school" would say.

And now we shall remove, "by a short cut," from "5 to 7 minor;" or, as another schoolboy has it, from "Sol to Si minor." Or—being rather tired of the discussion (our arguments on which have, we trust, convinced our readers) about the positive absurdity, comparatively speaking, of both sides of the question—from our study (what a study!) to our bed-room (a "very natural and common remove") where we hope to have a sound sleep without dreaming of the number "9." Nevertheless, Fleance is 'scaped.

Novenarius igitur cum ab alio numero non claudatur, &c.

Happy thought.

Enter First, Second, and Third Murderers.

First Murderer. Oh!
Second Murderer. Ah!
Third Murderer. Hi!

Curtain Falls.

Nevertheless, although we are virtuous, there shall be cakes and ale at the Gloucester Festival. Fleance is 'scaped. Be chesm—on our eyes be it!

Theophilus Queer (M.D.)

OCCASIONAL NOTES.

"Where were you wounded?" enquired Herr R. Wagner's Royal patron, meeting a Bavarian soldier with only one arm.—"At Sedan."—"Do you recognise me?"—"No!"—"I am the King."—The Invalid saluted as well as he could, observing at the same time, "I beg your Majesty will excuse me; I did not know you."—"I am surprised at that!"—"Well—you see, you are never with the army, and I never go to the Theatre, so how could I?"

A French paper says that, at the conflagration of the Grand Opera, Paris, the following instruments were destroyed: thirty violins, value 9,000 francs; thirty-two brass instruments, value 24,000 francs; thirty flutes, oboes, &c., 15,000; and fifteen violoncellos, 30,000 francs. In reference to this statement, a writer in the Echo Musical of Brussels, who is evidently not inclined to accept statistical returns as easily as most people, observes:—

"Were these figures exact, they would make people believe that the musicians of the Opera used exceptionally valuable instruments. Thus every brass specimen was worth 750 francs! Each flute, oboe, &c., was worth 1,000 francs! and each violoncello, 2,000 francs! We all know pretty well the usual price of a musical instrument, and can, therefore, easily perceive the fantastic character of the above figures."

Another journal says:—

"The losses of the orchestra are considerable, for most of the musicians had left their instruments in the theatre. We are assured that one of the first violins lost a Stradivarius worth from 7,000 to 8,000 francs."

Hereupon our statistical critic observes:—

"The artist who has experienced such a loss will be generally blamed. If the possessor of so valuable an instrument chooses to use it in the orchestra, the least he can do is to take it home with him when the performance is over. Supposing the sum of 8,000 francs for this Stradivarius to be correct, we cannot have any very high idea of the value of the remaining twenty-nine violins, which were not worth more than 1,000 francs altogether, or 35 francs each! about the price which would be given by a street fiddler for his instrument! Who would have thought that the masterpieces of Meyerbeer, Rossini, and others, had been made known to the public by such means?"

Sacred Harmonic Society.—Handel's Israel in Egypt will be performed, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, at Exeter Hall, on Friday next the 5th December. The principal vocalists are Mdme. Sherrington, Mdme. Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Thomas.

Digitized by Google

PLANETARY LIFE.

BY

Hermes.

(From "All the Year Round.")

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

(Concluded from page 783.)

Let me return to the dining-hall and its arrangements. The attendants, whose place is on the concave side of the table opposite to the guests, form a special class, having been instructed in their duties from early youth, as soon as the "character-divers" have ascertained their special qualities. They have generally been selected with a regard to elegance of form and manners, and they are attired in picturesque dresses of purple, blue, and scarlet, with a beautiful turban composed of similarly coloured tissues richly ornamented with precious stones. During the dinner they place upon the table the dishes, which, unseen by the guests, rise invisibly from the offices below. The sole charge of one little boy is to watch the occasions that arise for a change of napkins, which is effected by an ingenious mechanical contrivance. In front of the attendants, when these are not immediately engaged in the service of the table, passes a train of handsome children, each armed with a musical instrument smaller than your guitar, which it otherwise resembles. As a dish rises from below, one of these children proclaims its contents, not by words, but by an appropriate musical strain. The appearance of birds, for instance, is announced by a chirping sound; that of other meats, by an imitation of the lowings of the herd. Even fish, proverbially mute, rise to strains resembling the sounds peculiar to the waters in which they have been caught, the produce of the river being widely distinguished from that of the sea. Some of my readers may, I fear, think this practice ridiculous, so I should add that our imitations of natural sounds are highly idealised, and by no means copies.

Our dinner-table, when laid out, presents a very gay appearance, every expedient having been adopted to produce a picturesque effect. On the cloth are painted, at equal intervals, large rings of purple and gold, to mark the place for every plate, which is thus surrounded by a beautiful ring. Ovals, one in front of each ring, are likewise painted, that the cases containing the knife, fork, and spoon may be similarly framed. These useful articles, which differ from yours, are among the chief ornaments of the feast. The handles and cases are mostly of gold, inlaid with precious stones, and are highly ornamented, especially when they are for the use of ladies, who regard them as a valuable portion of their jewellery. When dinners are given at private houses, each guest is expected to bring his own knife-case, which, if he is a married man, is always the property of the lady, but the custom does not extend to the banquets given by the Tootmanyoso. Another important ornament of our tables are our goblets, each being provided with a spout, or tube, which is placed in the mouth, so that neither the lips nor teeth are wetted while an act of suction is performed. I am told that the principle of these goblets is recognised by the Anglo-Americans, and that with them the tube is simply a straw. It is a rule with us that the colours of the goblets should be at once varied and harmonious, and by an artistical distribution of the glasses among a series of guests, an effect is produced by the entire combination equal to that of the most beautiful rainbow.

I should not forget to state that at the side of every cover is a fan, elegantly formed, and made of material so slight, that a person, merely by speaking, sets it in motion, when it diffuses a delicious fragrance around. In form and colour these fans commonly resemble our most beautiful birds and butterflies, the motion of whose wings they imitate, and care is taken that all differ from each other. Our grand rule for the production of beauty is the combination of the most perfect harmony with the greatest possible variety.

When the dinner, strictly so called, is at an end, the table is removed, as if by enchantment, and is replaced by another, covered with cool and refreshing fruits prepared in a peculiar way, in dishes that have the appearance of ice. There is, however, an interval between the removal of the first table and the rise of the second, and during this a number of little boys and girls march in procession, each carrying, by a long handle, a basket of exquisite workmanship, filled with fragrant flowers and fruit-blossoms, which, when waved, spread a delicious odour. During the procession the children sing a hymn of thanks in harmony with the perfume. It will be understood that the special musical performances in the body of the hall are entirely independent of those of the instrumentalists in the galleries, who are silent when they take place.

The procession ended, the amusements of the evening begin. The centre of the room opens and a circular platform rises, upon which is stationed a group of female dancers. They wear dresses of a peculiar gauze, and in the course of their performance, which is distinguished by grace and elegance, they produce combinations, imitating beautiful objects in nature, such, for instance, as a rose, or a bouquet containing all the flowers of spring. The ornaments with which their dresses are decorated are chosen with regard to the proposed effects.

When the dance, which lasts about twenty minutes, is over, the most accomplished lady harpist, having volunteered to entertain the company, is led to a picturesque seat, frequently made in the semblance of a bird, and delights all ears with the strains of her instrument. When I say that the performance is voluntary, I mean the word to be taken in the strictest sense. While with you "pressing," as it is called, is an act of politeness, with us it would be a breach of etiquette even to ask a guest to play or sing. It should be observed that none of the guests offer to entertain the rest unless their skill in musical art has already been formally recognised.

After the lapse of a certain time, the principal lady gives the order, and a musical drum is struck, which resounds through every part of the room. Hereupon the attendants press an electric button; large doors, hitherto invisible, fly open. Before dinner, it will be recollected, each gentleman had the privilege of selecting his neighbour. The right of selection is now on the side of the ladies, each of whom having chosen a partner, the whole company proceed, accompanied by sweet music, to a large hall, magnificently arranged with ottomans, reclining couches, and all things conducive to luxury and ease.

When seated, the ladies are waited on by boys, whose singularly ruddy complexion distinguishes them from the other inhabitants of Montalluyah. They are generally natives of certain mountain districts, and they are employed in this menial capacity simply because, with rare exceptions, they are found unfitted for intellectual acquirements. Among us, distinction in rank is regulated exclusively by moral and intellectual worth. During the evening, following a royal dinner, these boys hand round to the ladies a salver, divided into as many as twenty compartments, which contains various fragrant spices, and revolves on a pivot, that each lady may, without effort, make choice of the odour she prefers.

Some of my readers will perhaps think that a banquet is

* Communicator of "Another World."

Digitized by Google

hardly complete unless it results in a cigar or meerschaum; but even here, though we never smoke tobacco, which is much stronger than yours, we are not behind the terrestrials. We smoke after a fashion peculiar to ourselves, in the presence of the ladies, each of whom, during the evening, is expected to contribute to the comfort of the gentleman whom she has chosen for a partner. Sometimes she will offer him a small cup, which will be found to contain an "inhaling case," accompanied by an assortment of the most fragrant spices. The fumes of the spices are drawn up by means of the case or pipe, and seldom exhaled. Our "inhaling cases" are very valuable, those belonging to the Tootmanyoso and the upper classes being set with precious stones.

Thus commonly ends a dinner in Montalluyah. At particular seasons, however, the company retire into flower gardens, which are very spacious. Here, amidst the warbling of birds, and an atmosphere impregnated with fragrant odours, and beneath our glorious sky, they have recourse to various amusements, a description of which I reserve for another occasion. Hermes.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The students gave a very interesting concert, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Thursday evening, as the following programme testifies:—

Anthem, "Hosanna"—G. A. Macfarren; Recitative ed Aria, "Quando miro" (Miss M. J. Williams)—Mozart; Sonata, in G minor (First Movement), No. 2, Op. 22, (Pianoforte, Miss Whitaker)—Schumann; Aria, "Se viver non poss' io" (Poro) (Miss Bradley)—Handel; Etude Fantastique, in F minor (MS.), (Pianoforte, Mr. Eaton Faning, Mendelssohn Scholar)—Eaton Faning; Duet, "Il core vi dono" (Cosi fan Tutte) (Miss Edonard and Mr. Aldersey)—Mozart; Song, "He roamed in the forest" (Miss Grace Bolton)—Arthur O'Leary; Concerto in D minor, for two violins (Mr. J. H. Reed and Mr. Szczepanowski)—J. S. Bach; Three-part Song (for female voices) "The glow-worm"—H. Smart; Sonata, Pianoforte, in A flat (Op. 46), "Die Jungfrau von Orleans" (Schiller) (The Maid of Orleans), in four Movements (Miss Conolly)—W. Sterndale Bennett; Songs, "To a woodlark," "Flow gently, sweet Afton" (Miss Nessie Goode)—John Gledhill; Tema and Variations, in B flat, for two Pianofortes (Miss Taylor and Miss Martin)—Schumann; Song, "The Erl king" (Miss Mary Davies, Welsh Choral Union Scholar)—F. Schubert: La Leggerezza in G, No. 2 of Allegri di Bravura (Pianoforte, Miss Ludovici)—Moscheles; Duet, "Pronta io son" (Don Pasquale) (Miss Nessie Goode and Mr. Wadmore)—Donizetti; Presto e Capriccio, in F sharp minor (Pianoforte, Miss McCarty)—Mendelssohn; Madrigal, "Cynthia"—Croce (1590).

The feature of the concert was, of course, Sir Sterndale Bennett's new sonata, which was listened to from beginning to end with fixed attention, eliciting hearty applause after each movement. The young pianist, Miss Conolly, went through her arduous undertaking evidently con amore, and was rewarded with general approbation. There were several other pieces in the programme worthy of particular notice, among which were Bach's duet for two violins, played by Messrs. Reed and Szczepanowski; the first movement of Schubert's sonata in G minor, and Mendelssohn's presto e capriccio for the pianoforte, both played "without book" by Miss Whittaker and Miss McCarty; and the vocal pieces sung respectively by Miss Nessie Goode and Miss Mary Davies. An "Etude Fantastique" for the pianoforte, composed and capitally played by Mr. Eaton Faning, and Moscheles' "La Leggerezza," carefully given by Miss Ludovici, also deserve mention. The vocal music was admirably accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Eaton Faning, Mr. Walter Fitton, and Mr. A. H. Jackson. Mr. Walter Macfarren conducted the choral music, among which the performance of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's anthem, "Hosanna," may be singled out as worthy of praise. The next Public Rehearsal is announced to take place at the Hanover Square Rooms on Tuesday Morning, December 9th.

VIENNA.—An important new orchestral composition by Herr Johannes Brahms was lately produced here with much success for the first time. It consisted of Variations on an Andante Theme in B flat, by Haydn.—According to report, a new ballet, Leonidas, by Herr Taglioni, will shortly be produced at the Imperial Operahouse.

PROVINCIAL.

RYDE (Isle of Wight).—The new Town Hall was crowded by an appreciative audience to assist at the first concert of the Ryde Choral Society. Mr. Bulley (tenor), Mr. Steers (violin), Miss Turtle (pianoforte), and the Misses Keet all pleased with their various solos. Mr. C. J. Bishenden, the well known bass, had a most flattering reception. He sang "Hearts of oak," "True to the last," "A warrior bold," and "The wolf," all of which were encored. The Choral Society sang several glees and part-songs in a highly effective manner. Mr. Jenkins conducted.

SHEPHERD'S BUSH.—The second of a series of entertainments, consisting of music and readings, was held on the 20th inst., in aid of the St. Stephen's Schools. The programme, which was very varied, opened with a pianoforte solo by Signor L. Guglielmo. This was followed by a song, "Forget me not," by Mrs. Allars, which she was called upon to repeat. Mr. Francis Andrews met with some success in "The Village Blacksmith" and "Tom Bowling." Some glees were sung by a party of ladies and gentlemen, amongst which we may specially mention Horsley's "See the chariot at hand," which met with an enthusiastic encore. Signor and Madame L. Guglielmo were also very successful in Ganz's "Qui Vive Galop," which they repeated in response to a unanimous encore. We must not omit to mention Mr. W. G. Reynolds' recitations, which are of an excellent description, and were much appreciated. Signor L. Guglielmo accompanied the songs and glees.

BIRMINGHAM.—The following highly eulogistic notice of Miss Rose Hersee as the Queen in The Rose of Castile is from the Daily Post:—

"Miss Rose Hersee, upon whom devolved the part of the masquerading Spanish Queen, brings to the task qualifications, both vocal and histrionic, of a very high order; and since Louisa Pyne first assumed the character, we doubt if it has had a more thoroughly satisfactory representative. A light, brilliant, and flexible voice, a petite, graceful figure, and a sprightly animated manner are among her most obvious recommendations for the part, which demands of its impersonator not only a voice of exceptional range, but also more than ordinary powers of execution. In this latter respect Miss Hersee's qualifications are especially noteworthy, her bravura singing generally is brilliant, articulate, and telling. There is not, of course, the same histrionic scope in the part of Donna Elvira as in that of Maritana, but so far as its opportunities go, Miss Hersee turns them to excellent account, and shows undoubted dramatic talent. It was, however, chiefly under its musical aspect that her performance on Tuesday commended itself to approval, her singing throughout being of the most finished and brilliant order. It is not necessary to review her efforts in detail, but we may particularise among the most effective her delivery of the fine cantabile speech from the throne, with harp obbligato and choral burden, in which the admirable phrasing and pure and resonant quality of her voice were strikingly exemplified; her part in the captivating trio between the Queen, Donna Carmen, and Manuel, 'I'm not the Queen,' in which the archness and the vocalisation of the fair singer were equally charming; the graceful, pensive ballad, 'The convent cell,' which was given with exquisite refinement and sweetness; the sparkling and difficult bravura, 'I'm but a simple peasant maid,' the elaborate cadenza of which fairly roused the enthusiasm of the audience, and won a vociferous encore; the exultant scena, commencing 'At last I'm sovereign here,' in the florid sequel of which her voice fairly held its own against the clarionet obbligato in the accompaniment; and the joyous finale, 'Ah, now by fortune blessed,' which, though last, was not least in merit, of her various performances."

LEEDS.—In the Leeds Mercury of Nov. 26th we find the following account of a "Recital," on the organ, of selections from Mr. Henry Smart's Jacob:—

"The chief feature of yesterday afternoon's organ recital at the Leeds Town Hall consisted of selections from Mr. Henry Smart's Jacob. Although modestly described by its composer as a cantata, it may fairly be ranked as an oratorio—small in dimensions it is true, but of high merit. With regard to the general characteristics of the work as a whole, it would be unsatisfactory to pronounce any further opinion from disjointed extracts. The fact that they were unconnected did not hinder the full appreciation of the portions presented yesterday. They give a most favourable impression of the oratorio, making many of the numerous audience wish that we could hear the complete work. Then as to the manner of their performance, those who know Dr. Spark will readily believe that the specimens lost none of their effect at his hands. In each number our borough organist did ample justice to the production of his friend, Mr. Smart, who would doubtless have been well pleased to have heard the performance. It was, indeed, expected that the eminent composer would himself have attended, but his promised visit to Leeds has been delayed by a bronchial affection, on account of which he may not arrive here until next week, when the selection will probably be repeated. The specimens given yesterday included the instrumental introduction; the air, 'O Thou that hearest;' the pastoral introduction to the second part of the cantata; Rachael's air, 'Who is this that cometh?' remarkable alike for the beauty of its melody and the aptness of its expression; the tuneful marriage duet, 'Tell me, O fairest;' the beautiful contralto air, 'Be thou patient,' a dignified yet tender and melodious rendering of the Divine exhortation to Jacob in summoning him to return to the land of his fathers; and finally the choral ascription of praise with which the cantata appropriately and even grandly concludes. In addition to these novelties, the recital included a charming andante from one of Beethoven's symphonies (C major), and the overture to the opera of Masaniello, which was substituted for Fra Diavolo.

Digitized by Google

OUR CONTEMPORARIES.

WAGNER SOCIETY.

The Sunday Times say:—

"What is the Wagner Society about? It started, last year, as the exponent of Wagner's music and the champion of his genius, in which capacity everybody gave it a welcome. As a matter of fact, no institution was ever founded with a more generally recognized raison d'être. It may suit the vituperators of England and of English art to say that Wagner is kept out of the country, but, in truth, there is nobody who does not welcome every effort to place the musician of the future fairly before the public. The Wagner Society had not a single enemy. Its concerts received due attention; and if the music sometimes called forth hostile opinions, it was not because of any hostility to those who presented it, or to the purpose of its presentation. How, then, are we to explain the fact that the society's new season is devoted not to Wagner alone, but to all the great masters? Properly speaking, there is no longer a Wagner Society; and, instead thereof, we have a Philharmonic, with a special leaning towards the school of orchestral composition which has grown, like a rank weed, upon the grave of Beethoven. It is as though a church consecrated to some doubtful hero or heroine in the Romish Calendar were re-consecrated to All Saints. In this case the inference would be that the doubtful hero or heroine either did not attract the faithful, or had weak intercessory powers. But we will not push the parallel to an extreme; enough that the enterprise devoted to Wagner has been abandoned, and that the first programme of the new season contained only two small illustrations of the Reformer's musical ideas. But if Wagner was not largely represented, he shared the scheme with kindred spirits, always excepting Beethoven, whose C minor Symphony seemed like a Triton among minnows."

SCHWERIN.—Our excellent harpist, Fräulin Anna Dubez, played last Friday at the Ducal Courttheater an effective harp solo by A. Zamara, "Fiori d'Italia." Her brilliant playing, combined with great taste and grace, was greatly admired by an appreciative audience, and the fair artist had afterwards the honour to be personally complimented by H.R.H. the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg. The piece in question was with orchestral accompaniments, to which the members of the Grand Ducal Orchestra, under the able direction of Capellmeister A. Schmidt, did every justice.— Mecklenburger Zeitung, Nov. 18.

BERLIN.—The Musical Department of the Royal Library, already so famous for its manuscript treasures, has lately been enriched by a highly important addition. At Mozart's death, Herr Anton André purchased of the composer's widow all the manuscripts he left behind him, amounting to two hundred and eighty in number. Of these, 131, in Mozart's own hand, remained up to within a very short period in the possession of the Brothers André in Offenbach, who inherited them from their father. Among them were ten operas, including Idomeneo and Così fan tutte, an oratorio, five masses, fifteen symphonies and a large number of other works, amounting in all to 531 separate compositions. They have just been purchased, with the approbation of the Emperor Wilhelm, by the State, and transferred to the Royal Library.

DRESDEN.—The death of the late King has for the moment brought musical matters to a standstill. Amongst other things it has temporarily put an end to the classical concert season, which opened well with a concert of Chamber Music given by Herren Lauterbach, Hullweck, Göring, and Grutzmacher. The programme comprised Mozart's Stringed Quartet, No. 4, in E flat major; Beethoven's Trio in G major, Op. 9, for Violin, Tenor, and Violoncello; and an Octet in C major, Op. 176, by Joachim Raff, for four Violins, two Tenors, and two Violoncellos. The new work is dedicated by its composer to Herr Lauterbach.—The latest novelty at the Theatre Royal, previously to the closing of that establishment in consequence of the King's death, was Herr R. Wagner's Meistersinger von Nürnberg, the principal characters being well sustained by Mdlle Malten, Herren Schaffganz, Köhler, and Degele.

REVIEWS.

EVANS & Co.

The Maiden and the Sunbeam. Song. Written by C. J. ROWE. Composed by BERTHOLD TOURS.

THE story of this song might have been suggested by Dickens's description of Little Nell sitting in the quaint old church, near which she died. It is very poetical in idea, and well told. Mr. Tours seems to have given much thought to the music, which is fluently written, and expressive far beyond common. That the song will meet with great favour can hardly be doubted.

Alla Bourrée in G major. By BERTHOLD TOURS.

THIS piece is a happy reflection of the old dance form after which it is called. It is agreeable to the ear, and easy to the fingers.

Menuetto in G minor. Pour Piano par BERTHOLD TOURS.

As easy as the Bourrée noticed above, if not quite up to the same mark. It is very difficult to write a good Menuetto without borrowing from some one or other of the masters. Mr. Tours has not borrowed. By the way, why "in G minor pour piano?" Are the titles of musical pieces necessarily polyglottish?

Alla Gavotte in D major. By BERTHOLD TOURS.

MORE elaborate than the one in G, but not more attractive and interesting. Some of the harmonic progressions strike us as being crude and harsh. Mr. Tours sometimes crashes through chords like an elephant through a jungle.

TO SHIRLEY BROOKS, ESQ.

SIR,—Dr. Broadcock was in error. The once famous overture to Alessandro nell' Indie was not by Jomelli, but by Piccini. Dr. Quick and Major Rawstone must have misunderstood their authorities. All that Sir Hinkley Cobb knew about the matter may be comprised in a cocoa-nut shell. Sir Hampton Wick knew better. Those who have dived into Albohalus and Avicenna (to say nothing of Cardan and Pomponatius, who, not being Arabs, flourished later) must be well cognisant of the fact. If you hunt in the sky the starlings will fly, and evil tongues, &c., &c. Dr. Kiddle is also wrong. No. The late M. Fètis never wrote any such book. He contemplated at one time compiling a reflex of analogies, but never carried out his intention. Heine, it is true, wrote no such book; and the Life of Rossini, to which Dr. Kiddle refers, is not by Mr. Tom Taylor, but by Mr. Sutherland Edwards. Mr. Augustus Mayhew is the brother, not the uncle. I am, sir, yours submissively,

CARVER SHARP.

MILAN.—En attendant Signor Sangiorgi's long-promised new opera, Guiseppe Balsamo, which, if nothing unforseen should happen, will have been produced before the publication of these lines, Signor Verdi's Ballo in Maschera has been drawing very good houses to the Teatro dal Verme. Signora Arancio Guerini appears to decided advantage as Amelia, while Signora Dario Maggi is a sprightly page. The tenor, Signor Pozzo, and Signor Buti, the baritone, also deserve commendation for their performance.—If the gossip at the cafés and in musical circles is to be credited, the Scala will open with Aida, to be followed by Signor Braga's Caligola, M. Gounod's Romeo et Juliette, Verdi's Macbeth, and Signor Ponchielli's Lituani.

BRUSSELS.—There is some talk of erecting upon the Boulevard Central a large theatre, covering a superficial area of more than 2,000 metres, for musical performances.—M. Henri Vieuxtemps will not resume his post as conductor of the Concerts Populaires before next January or February. Meanwhile, M. E. Mathieu, of Louvain, will probably act as his substitute.—The Director of the Royal Conservatory of Music has requested the Communal Board to increase by 3,000 francs a year the annual subsidy of 25,000 which they allow the institution. He wishes to raise the salaries of the subordinate professors, some of whom receive only 400 or 500 francs a year for giving lessons of two or three hours each three times a week.

GENOA.—The cholera having been officially declared to have at last left the city, the different places of amusements have once more flung open their doors to the public. The Teatro Paganini inaugurated the season by Donizetti's Lucia di Lammermoor, the principal characters being sustained by Signora Bianca Montesini, Signori Prudenza and Burgio. Herr von Flotow's Naida has been produced at the Teatro Nazionale. The composer passed through this town lately on his way to Paris, but was unable to stay and witness a performance of his opera. He attended, however, a rehearsal, and was so pleased that he wrote a letter, in which he begged the manager to thank the artists for the admirable manner in which they acquitted themselves of their task.

Digitized by Google

CHURCH MUSIC.*

By J. Barnby.

(Concluded from page 779.)

I have hitherto made a marked distinction between the congregational and the meditative, the Church and the Cathedral Service, and have endeavoured to show that a distinctive treatment is required in each case. Nevertheless, it has often occurred to me that there are points of connection between the two—that in certain particulars the Cathedral Service might adopt a feature of Congregational Worship, and that the majority of churches, on the other hand, may, without inconsistency, introduce an element generally associated with the Cathedral into their ordinary form of prayer. In the Cathedral, the congregation must, in the main, keep silence and hear; but why should not one part of the Service be so ordered that every worshipper may lift up the voice of praise and thanksgiving? A Hymn might be introduced into every Service, to be sung in unison by choir and congregation. This, I think, would stimulate devotion without in any way departing from the unity of the Service. On the other hand, an anthem introduced into the ordinary Church Service, where the choir could efficiently sing it, would certainly be an interesting and useful adjunct, and might be looked upon as a kind of musical sermon. This, indeed, may be regarded as an ex post facto suggestion, as the custom has already been introduced in various churches; but this gives me the advantage, that I am able to point to its successful and satisfactory effect where the attempt has been made, and thus to recommend its further extension as something that has been tried and not found wanting.

No thoughtful observer can have failed to notice a movement that has been taking place of late years in connection with our Cathedrals—a movement which, indeed, has been received with cordial and genial welcome, which has excited the sympathies and has been furthered by the efforts of some of the best men amongst us, but whose full importance and scope has scarcely, perhaps, as yet been fully appreciated. I mean, of course, the endeavour to render our great Cathedrals a more active means for the diffusion of religious knowledge and the development of Christian worship. There was a time, within the memory of many of us, when a Cathedral was hardly looked upon in the light of a church. It was considered by the majority even of educated Englishmen as a glorious monument of antiquity—a splendid relic of a former age, an enduring evidence of what the piety and munificence of our ancestors had been able to effect. I do not, of course, go back to those lamentable days when even the kindly pen of good-natured Goldsmith acquired a certain bitterness, when, with thoroughly legitimate and wholesome satire, he wrote of the manner in which a glorious Abbey was degraded into a show-place, when a wax-work exhibition was displayed, accompanied by a running descriptive commentary in the style of Mrs. Jarley, to the great emolument of certain attendants, and the proportionate discomfiture of all whose thoughts and meditations were disturbed by the vulgar tirade thrust upon them. I allude to those later times, when we had so far seen the error of our ways, that the showman scandal had been suppressed. But even then, the Cathedral, after the buyers and sellers had been driven forth from the Temple, remained, so far as its Services were concerned, an institution that stood alone—a noble relic, perhaps, of the past; but without its active and recognised share in the stirring religious work of the present.

Very happy are the indications that show what a change is coming over all this. The overflowing congregations that have listened with rapt attention to eloquent sermons, and participated in the hearty Services held in the naves of our Cathedrals on Sunday evenings—the evident interest with which the progress of the movement has been watched, not only by its promoters, but by the large class for whose benefit it has been chiefly intended; even the occasional difficulty and struggle to obtain a place, are the best criterion of the readiness with which the opportunity thus afforded was seized. All these things appear to me a most healthful proof that there is a stirring movement amongst the dry bones, and that a time is approaching when our grand Cathedrals shall fulfil an office, and occupy a place in the Church, worthy of the piety that erected, and the munificence that endowed them. It is in connection with this part of the subject that I would throw out a suggestion that has been long in my mind, and which indeed has been to a certain extent carried out; in every instance with a success that went beyond the most sanguine anticipations. I consider it would be a good and useful thing to introduce into our Cathedrals, appropriate musical services on the great Festivals and Fasts of the Church. I have said that this has already been successfully tried. At Westminster, nearly three years ago, the movement was inaugurated by the performance of Bach's Passion Music at a Service held in the Abbey, in Passion Week; and no one who was then present, and noted the bearing and demeanour of the vast congregation, who listened in awe-struck silence till the echo of the last word had died away, can have a doubt as to the solemn and elevating effect of that remarkable Service. The year before last the experiment—if indeed it had not gone past that phase—was repeated at Westminster, and last year it was introduced at St. Paul's. In the parish church of St. Anne's, Soho, the smaller Passion Music was given no less than seven times; and the interest, so far from falling off, as the services were repeated, was found steadily to increase. This seems clearly to indicate the direction in which a very comprehensive effort might be made. The last few years have witnessed a great awakening in the zeal and solicitude with which our Church Festivals and Fasts are celebrated. Considerable care is now taken, for instance, in the choice of anthems suitable to the various days. Many churches in which Service was performed on Festival days, and which on those occasions were almost empty, are now filled with devout and earnest worshippers. This suggests to me the feasibility of carrying out, on a large scale, the principle that led to the Musical Services I have mentioned. I should rejoice to see, throughout the length and breadth of the land, a complete series of Musical Services established, appropriate to the observance of the various Festivals and Fasts. I should like to see the genius of the greatest musical composers enlisted in the noble task of furnishing the medium for glorifying the Creator and singing the praises of the Redeemer. I should rejoice to see congregations thronging to our churches, as I firmly believe they would throng on such occasions, to return with hearts elevated and minds enlightened, thankful for the privilege of participating in a Service wherein, so far as human weakness and earthly imperfection can achieve such a result, the glory of the Immortal is foreshadowed.

But, plainly and clearly, what is the nature of these Services to be? I venture to think that they ought to be entirely musical. I would have them consist of the shortened Order of Evening Prayer, a special Psalm, a special Lesson, and an oratorio, or large psalm, after the third Collect. The oratorio should be accompanied by a complete orchestra, and divided into two parts, separated by a short sermon. An appropriate Hymn at the close of the Service would give the congregation an opportunity of joining practically in the celebration. Of available compositions there is certainly no lack. What is required is judicious selection and efficient performance. What more appropriate for the Season of Advent than Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, with its splendid central idea, that gives, as it were, the key-note to the whole "The night is departing, the day is at hand." Christmas-tide would find ample and appropriate illustration in Handel's Messiah and Bach's "Christmas Oratorio." For the period intervening between Christmas and Lent, we have a number of Church Cantatas of great power and excellence, an inheritance from the genius of Sebastian Bach. For the solemn period of Lent, the Passions of Handel and Bach, the Calvary of Spohr, with the Death of Jesus by Graun, are available. The Lessons for Easter Day tell the story of the Exodus of the children of Israel. How could this be better illustrated than by the glorious music of Handel's Israel in Egypt. Mendelssohn's Elijah would furnish a good illustration for the great Festival of the Ascension.

I am unwilling to trespass too long upon the kind attention that has been accorded to me; the subject, too, is one that requires far more elaborate treatment, if it is to be pursued exhaustively, than can be included within the limits of such a paper as this; therefore I am fain to content myself with the plain statement of facts and opinions I have had the honour to lay before you, leaving what is unspoken to-night to be submitted to you, I hope, at some future opportunity. The sum of what I would observe in conclusion is this:—We have, I consider, been grievously neglectful of the opportunities we have long possessed, of conducting Musical Services worthily and well. With ample means at our disposal, we have too readily contented ourselves with letting things remain as they have been. We are now, I think, awakening to a sense of our duties and responsibilities, and are beginning to utilize those means A greater amount of care and thought are being bestowed on the task of selecting those who hold musical posts, and the importance is now recognised of making Musical Services, as an integral part of public worship, to correspond with the remainder of the sacred rite. And surely there can be no higher incentive to stimulate exertion and awaken zeal in this direction than the thought that every one who contributes towards the perfection of the Church Service is employing his talents in his Master's service, and labouring for the honour of God.

* Read at the Church Congress held in Bath, October 10, 1873.

---

Mdme. Bohrer, a well known and highly esteemed professor of music at Boulogne-sur-Mer, died suddenly (while giving a singing lesson) on Saturday last, from the bursting of a blood-vessel. Mdme. Bohrer has left five young children, for whose benefit a concert is being organized. The Société des Orphéons have generously volunteered their services.

Digitized by Google

WAIFS.

A lady's definition of the polka—"A musical cuddle."

Query for "Smilers." Was ever Scotch whisky seen "Coming through the rye?"

A question for music masters. Can a miss be said to play the piano in a masterly style?

"Love not, love not, ye hapless sons of clay!" John says he don't care a penny for the sons, but he does for the daughters.

A young lady who had lost, or misled her beau, was advised to hang up her fiddle. She said the advice did great violence to her heart-strings.

The Musical World has an immense circulation, and is read by professors as well as amateurs. Have you subscribed?—Brainard, Cleveland.

The Worshipful Company of grocers, have kindly given a donation of fifty pounds, in aid of the fund of Her Majesty's Custom's Orphanage.

La petite Eugènie Bénard will play M. Dulken's "Tout le long le Ruisseau" at M. Rivière's concert, at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden, during the last week of his concerts.

Mr. J. B. Loveday, the agent of Mr. J. L. Toole, the celebrated English actor, will arrive in this country some time during the approaching month. He comes to make arrangements for Mr. Toole's appearance during the season of 1874-5.—Arcadian.

Miss Emily Tate, the juvenile pianist, appeared with decided success at M. Rivière's concert, Covent Garden, on the 17th inst., notwithstanding her being placed so late in the programme, and having the disadvantage of playing after an elaborate orchestral selection.

The New York Herald says of Mr. D. H. Harkins, one of the Grand Operahouse Company, that "he has not entirely succeeded in overcoming that unfortunate hesitation of speech, which is suggestive of an elephant crossing a broken bridge, and cautiously feeling its way.—Brainhard.

Miss Marianne Rock, another clever and useful pianist, made her bow before a Covent Garden audience, at M. Rivière's concerts, on Friday (November 21), and met with so much approbation, that she was called back twice to the orchestra, after her performance of Vincent Wallace's second grand polka de concert.

A first-class tenor in New York receives three thousand dollars. That is given by Christ Church and other churches. A basso gets nearly the same sum. A soprano commands even a higher salary, and an alto can manage to obtain quite a comfortable little addition to the week's income.—Brainhard.

Miss Lillie Albrecht, the talented young pianiste (pupil of Mr. Ignace Gibsone), who has recently acquired a large share of popularity, lately played one of her favourite pieces at M. Rivière's concerts, at Covent Garden. This young artist bids fair to achieve a foremost position in the profession which she has selected.

Canary birds have been substituted for bouquets, as tokens to actresses in New York, at the Black Crook revival. Miss Pauline Markham received gifts of flowers in more than ordinary profusion, one immense structure being a composition piece of flowers and fruit of every variety, and a canary bird in its cage swinging from the centre.

SERVANT.—Wanted, a young lady, as domestic servant, at a house pleasantly situated near Winsford. The master cleans boots, makes fire, &c., and the mistress will assist at the washing; references exchanged; none need apply who is not willing to do the other work. N.B.—Use of piano to one musically disposed.—Address, A. B. C., Post-office, Winsford.

In an old Greek play occurs the following description of a singing school: "They went together to the house of the teacher, where they learned to sing hymns set to the most simple melody used by their ancestors. If any one of them pretended to sing in a ridiculous manner, or to make such flourishes as were allowed in the airs of Phrynis, he was severely punished."

Liszt is said to be the hero, almost the divinity, of Weimar, just as Goethe was in his days. The Court honours him, the musicians worship him, the people are proud of him. Liszt knows how to maintain this position with a courtly serene dignity. His very appearance commands respect, and his manners are those of a powerful gentleman.—Brainhard (or Hardbrain).

Gerald Massey doesn't think much of the devil, and consequently the authorities of Princeton College don't think much of Gerald Massey. The unfortunate poet was to have lectured to the students of that seminary on Charles Lamb, but the orthodox people of Princeton, having read his lecture on the devil, compelled the students to cancel his engagement. This is severe both on the devil and Massey; but specially on Massey.—Arcadian.

A good old quaker lady, after listening to the extravagant yarns of a shopkeeper in Oxford Street, last week, as long as her patience would allow, said to him: "Friend, what a pity it is a sin to lie, when it seems so necessary to thy business."

"Mr. Jones, you said Mr. Rosin was a composer; does the court understand from that, that he was a writer of music?" "No, sir, he's called a composer, because he never talks to a man without putting him to sleep."—"Crier, call the next witness."

"Music," said Mr. Slur, "is very peculiar. However sprightly it may be, it cannot get on without staff-strains, so painful to us mortals are its chiefest delight. Scaly, as it is, it is admired by the delicate and refined, and is most tender when it abounds in slurs. It can rest as it passes over bars, is often very crotchety, and quavers at the slightest sound, and, when hurrying, can only be checked by beating. O dear, O dear, I don't wonder that musicians are a queer set!"—And the old gentleman resumed his cigar.

"Sir William Sterndale Bennett," says Brainard, "has composed a sonata for the pianoforte on the theme of the Maid of Orleans." It was written for Madame Arabella Goddard, and is spoken of by the London Globe as follows: 'The performance of the entire work will tax the powers of the most enduring and thoroughly prepared pianist; but two of the movements, the first and third, are physically within the reach of those performers whose fingers occasionally fail in doing justice to their tastes and intentions'"—[and who have taken four grains of blue pill.—A. S. S.]

The London Times, noticing Randegger's cantata, Fridolin, says, "with but little extension of the plan and a slight addition to the numbers, the result would be a highly effective two-act drama." Strangely enough we have before us the manuscript of a drama called Fridolin; or, the Trip to the Foundry, the plot taken from Schiller, and dramatized by F. W. Rosier, Richmond, Va., 1865. Mr. Rosier is well known through his excellent translations of Schubert's and other German songs, and has handled this subject, Fridolin, in a very vigorous and striking manner. He showed the sketch of the plot to the late Mr. Vincent Wallace, who had just commenced his Maritana, otherwise he would have accepted it as an opera. We think it would be a popular acting drama; we therefore call the attention of actors and managers to the subject.—Watson.

Miss Minnie Hauck is still at the National Theatre, Pesth. Speaking of the production of M. Ambroise Thomas's Mignon, the Hungarian Lloyd observes: "The first and the second acts were a complete success. The same cannot yet be said of the third. The performance was admirable. Our amiable visitor, Mdlle. Minnie Hauck completely convinced all who entertained any doubts on the subject of her great natural gifts. She was enthusiastically received." The Pesther Journal says in reference to the same subject: "Ambroise Thomas's opera of Mignon has been produced on the boards of our National Theatre with considerable success. As the performance proved, the work has been studied with the greatest care and elegantly placed upon the stage, while a happy judgment presided over the distribution of the principal parts. As Mignon, Mdlle. Minnie Hauck achieved a great triumph; never, perhaps, had she been so poetical and intelligent in any preceding part."

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING

BY

ADOLFO FERRARI.

THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.

Price 12s.

London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,

For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Labiache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each | 3 | 6 |

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

NOW READY.

ALL THE MUSIC FROM

LECOCQ'S

COMIC OPERA,

LA FILLE DE

MADAME ANGOT

The Greatest Success of the Day,

THROUGHOUT EUROPE & AMERICA.

The Complete Opera is in the Press.

A LIST OF THE MUSIC GRATIS ON APPLICATION.

LONDON:
BOOSEY & CO.,
HOLLES STREET.

SYDNEY SMITH'S

METHOD

FOR THE

PIANOFORTE.

64 pages, Full Music Size, Price 5*s.*

"There are features in this work of uncommon merit, but we shall say enough if we recommend it unreservedly to all who seek a manual of instruction well arranged, intelligible, and effective."—Musical World, April 23.

"While every care has been taken to cull all that was useful from the old regime, much that is altogether modern and thoroughly practical is here to be met with for the first time. In particular, it seems to have been the author's purpose to lead the student by gentle degrees, and to insure that one thing shall be properly acquired before another is attempted."—The Queen, April 30.

"The aim of the author seems to have been to supply as much information in as few words as possible, while aiding and directing the self-intelligence of the learner, and he certainly has succeeded admirably."—Examiner, April 30.

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - each | 3 | 6 | |

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

GEO. WOODS & CO.'S

AMERICAN MADE

PARLOR & CHAPEL ORGANS

Are unequalled for Purity and Beauty of Tone. Their peculiar and interior arrangements give them extraordinary power. Their Solo Stops are more varied and charming in their effects than any organ now made, and their facilities for combination are boundless.

Their Cases are of the most graceful design and perfect finish, and constructed in the most thorough and durable manner.

These Organs have received the most flattering encomiums from all who have examined them, and are pronounced by all the best musicians who have tested them to be the finest Organs ever offered in this country.

The Profession and Public generally are earnestly invited to examine these beautiful instruments at our own or agent's warerooms, and compare them with other instruments of their class.

Our Illustrated Circular, containing Choice Music, and full particulars of the Organs, will be sent post free to any address.

Agents wanted in every City and Town in Great Britain and the Colonies.

The latest and most valuable invention in Musical Instruments, the "PIANO ORGAN," a combination of Pianoforte and Organ in one instrument. Possessing the most surprising capacity for the production of orchestral effects.

MANUFACTORY:

CAMBRIDGEPORT, MASS., U.S.A.

A GREAT VARIETY OF ORGANS ARE ON EXHIBITION AT THE

LONDON SHOW ROOMS,

33, King William Street, London Bridge.

ALSO AT AGENT'S WAREROOMS IN ALL THE PRINCIPAL CITIES AND TOWNS.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT, the talented and rising young Pianist, who met with great success at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, will be happy to enter into engagements for concerts, soirees, &c. Address to care of Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., or at Miss Lillie Albrecht's, 5, Gower Street, Bedford Square.

MADAME BARTON-EDMONDS (late Miss ANNIE EDMONDS), begs to say that, having completely recovered from a protracted illness, she is now able to resume her profession. Address, 54, Queen's Road, Bayswater, London, W.; or to Pennard Lodge, Yardley, Worcestershire.

SIGNOR AGNESI will be at liberty to accept engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, &c., from December 20th, 1873, to February 20th, 1874. Address—26, Richmond Road, Bayswater, W.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce, in answer to numerous applications, that the vacancies for Artists in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., are now filled up.

MR. LANSDOWNE COTTELL'S MUSICAL EVENINGS at HOME, for the social study and practice of vocal and concerted music. Ladies and gentlemen desiring to assist, address, Charles Ray, Secretary, 37, Abbey Road, N.W.

MASON AND HAMLIN'S AMERICAN ORGANS.

THE first MEDAL at the VIENNA EXPOSITION, being the highest recompense for Material Superiority in Class XV. (including Musical Instruments from all countries), has been awarded the Mason and Hamlin Cabinet Organs, by the concurrence of the Special Jury, International Jury and two Sub-Juries, including most eminent artists and experts from different countries. In comparison with these, other American Organs were not found worthy of any—even an inferior Medal.

Sole Agents—METZLER & Co., 37, Great Marlborough Street, W.

CLERGYMEN, ORGANISTS, and others desirous of Purchasing, Hiring, or Exchanging ORGANS, are invited to inspect the Register of

SECOND-HAND INSTRUMENTS,

Established by

Messrs. J. J. CLEMMANS & SON,

OF No. 5, FINSBURY SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

Detailed particulars may be had on application.

REMOVAL.

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA and MADAME MARTORELLI GARCIA, beg leave to announce their Removal to 54, Portsdown Road, Clifton Gardens, Maida Hill, W. N.B.—Signor Gustave Garcia (Nephew of Malibran and Viardot Garcia) will sing at M. Riviere's Concerts during the Season; at the Philharmonic Society (Liverpool), December 9; and at Herr Kuhe's Grand Festival at Brighton in February.

A SIMPLE CATECHISM
ON THE
RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC AND PIANOFORTE PLAYING.
In the form of Question and Answer, and written in familiar language.
BY
E. ELLICE JEWELL.
Price 1s., Cloth Cover.
LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

RICHARD WAGNER'S

| | |
|---|---|
| "THE MUSIC OF THE FUTURE" (translated by EDWARD DANNREUTHER) | 1s 0d. |
| "ART ET POLITIQUE," 1er Partie | 1s. 0d. |
| "LA JUDAISME DANS LA MUSIQUE | 0s. 6d |

Sent post free.
SCHOTT & Co., 159, Regent Street.

FAVOURITE SONGS
By Mrs. J. HOLMAN-ANDREWS

| Name of Song. | Publishers |
|---|---|
| The Last Request | Boosey & Co |
| The Adieu | Duff & Stewart. |
| Angels (GERTRUDE HOLMAN-ANDREWS) | Duff & Stewart. |
| Waiting, watching | Chappell & Co. |
| The Rainbow | Chappell & Co. |
| Last Rose of Summer (for two voices) | Chappell & Co. |
| Old English Melodies (arranged for Ladies' Voices) | L. Cock. |
| Mary, bereft of thee | D. Davison & Co. |
| Ye are not miss'd, fair flow'rs | Shepherd. |
| I'll love but thee, my Native Home | Shepherd. |
| Gently, oh! gently (with Chorus for Ladies' Voices) | Weippert. |
| My first Love, and my last | J. Williams. |
| Go, lovely Rose | Weekes & Co. |
| The old Year | Weekes & Co. |
| Smile on my ev'ning hour | Weekes & Co. |

Mrs. J. HOLMAN-ANDREWS and Miss EDITH HOLMAN-ANDREWS visit professionally (weekly) Brighton, Blackheath, Richmond, Croydon, Forest Hill, &c. Their vocal classes have commenced. Address, 2, Park Place, Clarence Gate, Regent's Park.

Digitized by Google

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

The programmes of the Crystal Palace Concerts have contained many interesting things since our last account. A remarkably good performance of Beethoven's symphony in A (No. 7) was the distinguishing feature of the seventh. This great work, thanks to Mr. Manns and the remarks, historical and analytical, of "G.," has become so familiar at the Crystal Palace that few even of its most recondite beauties pass undetected. Never was it listened to with more attention, or applauded with more warmth, than on the occasion under notice. The concert began with Mendelssohn's overture to Victor Hugo's Ruy Blas, and ended with that with which the tragedy of Hamlet inspired the Danish composer, Niels Gade. About the first it is unnecessary to say one word. Of the last Mr. Manns gives a speculative description, which, however ingenious, can hardly induce any one to believe that the work is not as laboured as it is unquestionably clever. We can only imagine one composer able to illustrate in musical tones such a theme; and that is he to whom we are indebted for Egmont, Coriolanus, and Leonora. Every amateur was glad to hear the quiet and artistic playing of Mr. Edward Silas, who took the solo part in his own "Elegy," for pianoforte with orchestral accompaniments, which, though written some years ago, was as welcome as though it had been new, so rarely is it heard. Whatever may have called it forth, it is an elegy in the most poetical sense. In addition to the "Elegy," Mr. Silas contributed two short pianoforte solos—a romance, entitled Malvina, and a gavotte—both charming. The singers were Madame Edna Hall and Madame Patey.

The next concert began with Beethoven's overture in C, Op. 115, generally known as Namensfeier (having been composed for the "Name-day" festivities of the Emperor Francis II.), and ended with that by Schumann to his Genoveva, an orchestral prelude worthy to perpetuate the name of an opera of which every amateur would like to know more. The programme also comprised the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's Ottet, as arranged for the orchestra, to replace the minuet and trio originally forming part of his symphony in C minor, when, more than 40 years ago, that work was produced at one of the concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Of pieces so familiar to the Crystal Palace audiences a bare mention will suffice. The novelty and the feature at this concert was a new MS. symphony in G minor, from the pen of Sir Julius Benedict. A new symphony is always a thing of interest, especially when it comes from a musician who, like Sir Julius, has won distinction in every other branch of musical composition. It is singular, this being the case, and his last essay having been an oratorio on the largest scale, that Sir Julius should never till now have tried his practised hand at an orchestral symphony. But better late than never. An ordinarily ambitious man, at a certain period of life, might have been satisfied to rest on the laurels gained by St. Peter. But Sir Julius evidently does not belong to this more easily-contented class; and now he has given us a symphony, and what is more, a symphony of genuine stamp, in every respect worthy the title, the first production of which, entire, at the Crystal Palace, reflects credit on an institution which has already done so much for music. In the construction of his new work Sir Julius has adopted the forms to which "the great old masters" (Beethoven included) adhered so religiously, and with such magnificent results. But, after all, nothing else could be expected from the most gifted and favoured scholar of Carl Maria von Weber, by whom he was regarded, young as he was, scarcely less as a friend than as a pupil. Moreover, that Sir Julius is wise in his generation was proved by the issue. The old forms are inexhaustible. Those who were at Norwich in 1872 will not have forgotten that two movements, the first Allegro and Scherzo, were given on one of the evenings of the Festival, of which Sir Julius Benedict has been the conductor since 1846, and received with the utmost favour. The third and fourth movements, added since then, complete the symphony, which is not only the best written for many years, but may justly be pronounced a masterpiece. The allegro is preceded by an introduction, moderato, not consisting merely of a short series of connected phrases, but largely developed—something after the manner in which Mozart and Beethoven were wont to usher in their first movements. The Allegro, to which this preamble leads, is of an impassioned character, varied here and there by a pompous martial theme, which gives way to a tranquil and charming melody in the relative major—virtually the "second subject." The whole movement is wrought out with the ingenuity of an accomplished scholar. The Andante con moto, which follows the Allegro, is built upon an exquisite theme which, we quite agree with "G.," has a touch of Schubert in it, and is carried out and diversified much in that master's happiest style. The Scherzo will speak for itself wherever it is heard. It has that in it to please all hearers; the most uninitiated can hardly fail to be struck by its marked rhythm and its unceasing tunefulness, while the musician will be charmed with its ingenious contrivances, its sustained power, and its perfect development. The symphony is written for the orchestra throughout with a skill to which we have long been accustomed from the author, but the felicitous way in which all the instruments are made use of in this delicious Scherzo is, of its kind, unique. The Allegro con fuoco, which brings the work to an end, is, like the opening movement, of an impassioned character, and worked throughout with equal, if not, indeed—the coda especially—greater spirit. Here is a fitting climax to a work alike an honour to the composer and a gift to his art. Nothing could possibly be finer than the performance, under Mr Auguste Manns, to whom Sir Julius Benedict had confided the direction of the symphony, and nothing more unanimously cordial than its reception by the audience. Movement after movement was applauded; and Sir Julius was compelled to come forward in the orchestra, where he received a greeting he is not likely to forget. No success was ever more legitimately earned. The singers at this concert were Miss Edith Wynne and Mr. Sims Reeves, both of whom selected music of the best. At the following concert there was no symphony, and only one overture—that to Der Freischütz, of which nothing need be said. The pianoforte piece was Sir Sterndale Bennett's new sonata, The Maid of Orleans, with which every pianist seems desirous to make acquaintance. So much the better. The sonata is both original and beautiful, and its growing popularity is, therefore, not surprising. Its exponent on the present occasion was Mr. Franklin Taylor. He also performed it "from memory," and with such neatness, brilliancy, unforced expression, and invariable good taste, as to win universal sympathy. His delivery of the Allegro marziale was as full of healthy vigour as his reading of the Adagio ("Jean of Arc in Prison") of real feeling. In short, this was a performance deserving and eliciting unqualified praise, and Mr. Franklin Taylor, who was loudly applauded, added one more to his well-earned successes in the Crystal Palace orchestra. Another admirable solo display was that of the excellent violinist, Herr Ludwig Straus, in the recitative Adagio and Allegro from Spohr's concerto No. 6, one of the master's best. Few violinists are such thorough adepts in the music of Spohr as Herr Straus, who has seldom been heard to more advantage, and has seldom been more warmly appreciated. The want of a symphony was atoned for on this occasion—if anything can atone for the want of a symphony at a Crystal Palace Concert—by the introduction of Beethoven's cantata, composed in 1814, to celebrate the "Congress of Vienna." The original title of this cantata was Der Glorreiche Augenblick (The Glorious Moment). It was written under circumstances with which Beethoven had little sympathy; and although, as, coming from him, could not fail to be the case, it has many beauties, and even "great moments," it can never be received as one of the happiest inspirations of the master. "G." says justly that "Beethoven never appears at his best when writing to order;" and, indeed, for a man of such independent genius, whose ideas came to him unsought, it could not be otherwise. The cantata was not published until after its composer's death, when a new text was prepared for it by Rochlitz. A translation of this second version was used on the occasion under notice. The Crystal Palace choir, Madame Otto Alvsleben, Miss Emily Spiller, Messrs. George Fox and Vernon Rigby, as solo vocalists, and Herr Ludwig Straus, as solo violinist, took part in the performance. The effect, however, although the general performance was good, hardly satisfied expectation. So trying a work stands in need of careful and repeated rehearsals. Doubtless it will be brought forward again. The programme on Saturday afternoon contained several pieces by Mozart, the first being the overture to La Vilanella Rapita (composed for an opera by Bianchi), the last, the incomparable symphony in G minor, in which Mr. Manns and his orchestra always greatly distinguish themselves. They especially did so now. The impetuous finale was never played with more unflagging vigour and decision. Besides these, we had the concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, No. 20 (in E flat), last but five of the glorious family, written only six years before the author's death. The solo part was played in a thoroughly artistic manner, and with unfailing executive power, by Miss Agnes Zimmermann, who introduced clever cadenzas of her own in the Allegro and the Rondo finale, the first being both lengthy and elaborate. Miss Zimmermann's performance was much and deservedly applauded, and she was called back to the orchestra at the end. The vocal pieces in the Mozart selection consisted of the well-known aria, "Quando miro," sung by Miss Sterling, an American lady, who has a fine contralto voice, and an air from Zaida (an opera written about 1780), assigned to Mdlle. St. Alba, soprano. The remainder of the programme comprised songs by Schubert, Schumann, and Mendelssohn, given in German by Miss Sterling, accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Agnes Zimmermann; Meyerbeer's too familiar "Robert toi que j'aime," sung by Mdlle. St. Alba, in Italian; and Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Ouvertura di Ballo, of which it may be said that the more it is heard the more it is liked, and which was never better performed.

Digitized by Google

At the concert of to-day Dr. Herr von Bülow is to play the concerto in F flat of Franz Liszt. The symphony selected is the "No. 9" of Beethoven, a splendid climax for the anti-Christmas series.

—o—

DR. HANS VON BÜLOW'S RECITALS.

(From "The Times.")

A record, however brief, of each of the Pianoforte Recitals now being held at St. James's Hall by this renowned professor is called for, if only on account of the variety of styles he illustrates, all which, as has been said, he stamps with the impress of his own powerful individuality. That in whatever Dr. von Bülow plays the attention of the hearer is attracted as much to the executant as to the work he may be interpreting is incontestable. This, however, does not appear singular if we bear in mind the uncurbed enthusiasm he so frequently throws into his task. It was never more emphatically shown than when, at his second Recital, he was engaged upon the opening movement and finale of Weber's Sonata in D minor, not the least remarkable of the four largely developed works of the kind contributed by the composer of Der Freischütz to the repertory of the instrument of which he was himself so thorough a master. Both of these were delivered by Dr. von Bülow, with a vigour and spirit no less extraordinary than the ease with which the difficulties were vanquished; and these are neither few nor contemptible. To judge by his performances, however, such a thing as "difficulty" is unknown to this gentleman. Weber has prefixed to the first movement of his sonata the words, "Allegro feroce," and Dr. von Bülow is doubtless justified in translating them literally. At the same time, the final movement would, in our opinion, gain considerably by being taken at a somewhat less impetuous pace, especially near the end, where the episode and the leading theme are worked consentaneously. The reading of the melodious slow movement was almost in every sense irreproachable; and, indeed, we are disposed to think Dr. von Bülow is rarely heard to such advantage as in passages which demand soft playing, together with all the gradations from "piano" to "pianissimo." His tone is then exquisite, and his touch as delicate as it is elastic. But when yielding to an impulse which is apparently uncontrollable, he puts forth the maximum of energy and force, his tone is not always so legitimate, and the less willingly do the keys seem obedient to his behests. But players of that exceptionally endowed class of which Dr. von Bülow is now, perhaps, the foremost living example, have invariably peculiarities which belong to their idiosyncrasy, and must be regarded as part and parcel of themselves.

The miscellaneous pieces at this recital comprised the Prelude and Fugue in F minor from Handel's first book of Suite de Piéces, Mendelssohn's Air with Variations in E flat ("posthumous"), a Study by Moscheles, entitled La Leggerezza, a Barcarole by Rubinstein (encored and repeated), and Chopin's Allegro de Concert. These were given in every instance with wonderful facility, the beautiful variations of Mendelssohn affording Dr. von Bülow ample opportunities of exhibiting to advantage his highest qualities of tone and expression. Perhaps the most remarkable display of executive skill was the "Leggerezza" of Moscheles, in which he showed a freedom of wrist, a lightness and elasticity of touch, that could not have been surpassed by the master himself who composed it.

The last piece in the programme was again one of the five great works which are the crowning achievements of Beethoven as a composer for the pianoforte—the Sonata in A major, "Op. 101." This, like all that had preceded it, was, as usual, performed from memory.

On Wednesday afternoon week, at his third recital in St. James's Hall, Dr. von Bülow played from memory Beethoven's colossal sonata in B flat, Op. 106, than which nothing more difficult has been written for the pianoforte by any of the "classical" masters. It was Beethoven's greatest effort in that way, and so he himself esteemed it. Few pianists, even of the highest rank, have ventured to essay it in public, whatever they may have done in private. In one of Mendelssohn's letters from Frankfort he playfully writes—"I came home with S—— last night, from a punch party, where I first played Beethoven's sonata, Op. 106, in B flat, and then drank 212 glasses of punch, fortissimo." The performance of this extraordinary work on the occasion under notice was Dr. von Bülow's most remarkable feat since he came here to astonish us. It was, indeed, remarkable from beginning to end, not merely because a piece so long, so elaborate, and fatiguing was, like all the rest, given without book, but also for the sustained vigour with which the Allegro risoluto was delivered, the life thrown into the Scherzo, with its quaint and original trio, the expression imparted to the long drawn-out Adagio, and, above all, for the execution of the final Fugue, that seemingly inextricable labyrinth of notes. This all but impossible movement was played from first to last with invariable ease and unflagging spirit, the more surprising, inasmuch as the theme was given out at such a pace as to make every hearer wonder how by any possibility the artist, great as is his executive power and prodigious his memory, could accomplish his task. Dr. von Bülow, however, went through the whole without the slightest hesitation; accent never being lost, clearness rarely sacrificed. In fact, it was an exceptional display of mechanical power, untrammelled by any of the difficulties which seem to follow each other without a moment's intermission, and—until the tuneful episode with which the Fugue gets speedily entangled, and which has no small part to act in its further development—without a moment's repose. The Scherzo was applauded so loudly that Dr. von Bülow repeated it; but what was still more astonishing, in reply to another demonstration, he repeated the Fugue itself from end to end—an achievement, considering what he had already done, and what he still had to do, perhaps unprecedented. In certain passages of the Adagio, it may be added, the subtle gradations from piano to pianissimo, which Dr. von Bülow so greatly affects, had favourable scope for exhibition, and of these full advantage was taken.

The grand sonata of Beethoven was followed by Sir Sterndale Bennett's Rondo Piucevole in E, and the same composer's three musical sketches, "The Lake," "The Mill-Stream," and the "Fountain," familiar to every amateur in this country; and after these charming pieces, the rendering of which could have scarcely been more in consonance with the intentions of their author, came Mendelssohn's Capriccio in F sharp minor, entitled, it is related by the composer in the album to which at an early age he contributed it, "Bluette Musicale," though, considering its difficulties, it is by no means a "bluette," to any but the most practised executants. It is marked prestissimo, and it need hardly be added that Dr. von Bülow was not behindhand in obeying the indication thus conveyed. With the Capriccio were joined the Gavotte from Gluck's ballet, Don Juan, and J. S. Bach's Bourée in A minor.

The Recital began with one of Mozart's most admirable sonatas in the key of F; and ended with Liszt's Trilogie Suisse ("Lac de Wallenstadt," "Eclogue," and "Au bord d'une source"), combined with the same composer's Polonaise Héroique. That no pianist, except it be Liszt himself, can perform Liszt's music like Dr. von Bülow, it is superfluous to add. The Hall was crowded in every part.

---

(From the "Standard.")

The series of pianoforte recitals given by the eminent German pianist, Dr. Hans von Bülow, was brought to a close yesterday afternoon with a programme which at once proclaimed the eclecticism and versatility of the performer. Despite the unpropitious weather there was a considerable attendance, and the efforts of the entertainer were not exerted in vain, so far as responsive approbation is concerned. The selection commenced with Schubert's grand sonata in A major (posthumous), and included Braham's scherzo (Op. 4), Rhinberger's "Trois morceaux de concert" (Op. 5); a nocturne (in C minor), three Mazurkas, and Chant Polonais by Chopin; two descriptive pieces by Liszt, Beethoven sonata, quasi fantasia (Op. 27), in E flat, and the same master's 32 variations in C minor (Op. 36). As we have thoroughly discussed the merits of Dr. Hans von Bülow's playing, always giving him the fullest credit for the great power which he unquestionably possesses, although not raising him to the height of a god, like some of his too eager followers, we need but repeat our verdict in connection with the selection of yesterday. Dr. Bülow's performance was masterly in the broadest acceptation of the term, his brilliant execution was marred but by few of those slips which we have learned to accept as the penalty of his greatness; and while the sympathies of the audience may not have been thoroughly associated throughout with the feeling of the executant, their admiration and interest were seldom allowed to flag. Dr. von Bülow was successful in the interpretation of all his pieces, in but few of which he challenges comparison with other performers; where indeed comparisons might be instituted we will take Mrs. Malaprop's opinion of their efficacy, and drop them accordingly. Dr. Bülow has been wise in adopting the recital form of entertainment, through which he has thoroughly substantiated his claims to greatness. When, after the lapse of a brief period may be, the Dr. gives us another recital, we shall expect to find that his individualities are still further toned down, and that he is in all respects worthy the place he occupies in the estimation of the public.

Digitized by Google

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

(From "The Times," December 6.)

The performance of Handel's magnificent Israel in Egypt, last night, under the direction of Sir Michael Costa, whose "additional accompaniments" were used on the occasion, reflected more or less credit on all engaged in it. Handel's grand Biblical oratorio, for so long a period repudiated, or, when produced, brought forward with all kinds of barbarous curtailments and superfluous additions, is now rapidly attaining a popularity which, if public taste continues to progress as it has progressed during the last quarter of a century, promises before long to rival that of the Messiah. How much of this is due to the zealous and unremitting exertions of the Sacred Harmonic Society, the oldest institution of its kind ever set on foot in this country, need not be said, any more than how much that society has effected, through the medium of adequate representation, to make the oratorios of Handel generally familiar to the public. That Israel in Egypt contains more choruses coming one after another in immediate succession than any other work of the kind, is known to amateurs of choral music allied to sacred themes. This is the chief difficulty with which the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society had to contend, and which, with persistent determination, they, step by step, got over; and now for some time past the "Biblical Oratorio" may be said to have been common property, not only in the capital, but in all large towns where the study of choral music is encouraged and promoted. Enough, however, of an oft-told story.

The performance last night offered but few points for criticism. There is no oratorio which Sir Michael Costa seems to take more pleasure in conducting than Israel, and, remembering the successes he has achieved with it at the Handel Festivals, at the Birmingham Festival, &c., no wonder. He never was more careful, attentive, and exacting than last night; and the result was in almost every important instance such as he had good right to anticipate. We shall not go over old ground by enumerating, one by one, the choruses descriptive of the plagues and miracles which lead to the successful exodus and the passage through the Red Sea. It will suffice to state that, from the first of this magnificent series to the last—a series only interrupted by a tenor recitative and an air for contralto ("Their land brought forth frogs")—all was satisfactory. That some choruses were, on the whole, more smoothly and precisely given than others will be readily understood; but when it is stated that the fugal one, "They loathed to drink of the river," "He spake the word and there came all manner of flies," "He sent a thick darkness"—one of the most trying of all for unwavering intonation; "He smote all the first-born of Egypt," and "The waters overwhelmed them," were among those to the execution of which almost unqualified praise can be accorded, it may be understood how excellent was the performance generally. About "He gave them hailstones for rain," and the sensation it invariably creates, we are absolved from speaking.

The still more trying choruses in the second part of the oratorio (the first written by Handel, who entitled it The Song of Moses)—the recapitulation of the miracles worked by the Almighty on behalf of His chosen people, were no less entitled to warm eulogy. Among these, "The horse and his rider," "Thy right hand, O Lord," and "With the blast of Thy nostrils"—in which occurs the wonderfully suggestive musical expression of the sentence, "The floods stood upright as an heap," with its sublime antithesis, "The depths were congealed in the heart of the sea"—were the most remarkable. This last, with one exception—"The people shall hear and be afraid" (which rarely happens to go well)—is the most complex and elaborate of them all.

The solo singers have a less responsible task in Israel than in any other oratorio. Nevertheless, what is to be done must be done with scrupulous care; and though, in consequence of the indisposition of our excellent contralto, Madame Patey, Miss Enriquez had, at a very short notice, to act as substitute, all went well. Miss Enriquez, passing the recitative which prefaces the chorus, "And the children of Israel wept," got fairly through all the music allotted to her, and, in short, did her very best under the trying circumstances. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, an expert in Handel's sacred music, can always be relied upon; and nothing could be more artistic than her delivery of the air (with its quaint "ground bass"), "Thou didst blow with Thy wind," or her duet with Mrs. Suter, "The Lord is my strength." The great duet for basses, "The Lord is a man of war," declaimed with striking power and vigorous unanimity by Messrs. Santley and Lewis Thomas, was, as rarely fails to be the case when thus adequately rendered, encored. The encore was accepted, and the duet repeated, to the delight of an over-exacting audience. The chief vocal display of the evening, however, was Mr. Sims Reeves' superb delivery of "The enemy said 'I will pursue;'" an air which this greatest of Handelian tenors has made his own. What might be legitimately done with this, one of the finest of Handel's declamatory songs, was shown at the first Handel Festival in the Crystal Palace, when it created a sensation still remembered. Mr. Reeves sings it now as he sang it then, and revives the old enthusiasm. His voice was never in better condition, and last night he made an exceptional display. Finer, and, if we may be allowed the expression, more "dramatic" singing we cannot remember. The applause was deafening, and there was but one wish in the vast assembly—that the air might be repeated; but, wise in his generation, Mr. Reeves was heedless of the wish. He probably thought that if he sang it a second time he might not sing it quite as well, or (like a true artist) that a repetition of the air would go far to spoil the effect of "Thou didst blow," the more gentle and melodious piece which immediately comes after, and which Madame Lemmens-Sherrington sings so charmingly. An encore of a ballad is one thing; an encore of a bravura air—for "The enemy said" can be regarded as nothing less—is another. If the system of encores could be got rid of entirely, it would be a benefit to singers and public alike. It depends upon artists like Mr. Reeves to set the example and adhere to it; but when they do one thing at one time and another thing at the next, the question may as well drop for any hope of its obtaining the desired solution.

Mr. Montem Smith was second tenor, and did the little he had to do like a genuine artist. The band (leader—M. Sainton) was admirable, as usual, and nothing could possibly be better than Mr. Willing's performance of the by no means easy, while at the same time very responsible, organ part.

The Christmas performances of the Messiah come next. After these we are promised some novelties—one being the almost forgotten oratorio, Palestine, by the late Dr. Crotch, the other Mr. Macfarren's John the Baptist, still fresh in the remembrance of everyone who attended the recent Bristol Festival, at which it was produced with such merited success.

—o—

ALEXANDRA HALL.

An interesting concert of classical and other music was given in the Alexandra Hall, Blackheath, on Monday evening, by Mr. Charles Edwards, a local professor of repute. We were glad to see that the classical selections, numerous and long though they were, had no bad effect upon the attendance, the hall being filled in every part. Hummel's pianoforte trio in E flat (Op. 96) opened the programme, played by Mr. Edwards (pianoforte), Herr Jacobi (violin), and Signor Pezze (violoncello); after which came Mendelssohn's fantasia in F sharp minor, for pianoforte (Mr. Edwards), the same composer's sonata in D major, for pianoforte (Mr. Edwards), and violin (Herr Jacobi); and three short pianoforte solos by Schumann, Mendelssohn, and Hiller, in which the concert-giver also displayed his powers. We counsel Mr. Edwards, who was heard to best advantage in the Mendelssohn duet, not to do so much on another occasion, because it is impossible to do everything well. His accompaniments, for example, were, in a great measure, what accompaniments should not be. The vocalists were the sisters Badia, Mr. Stanley Hoole, Mr. Cummings, and his young amateur pupil, Mr. William Webster. The youthful ladies sang several duets and solos in a manner that won general applause; Mr. Cummings was encored both in his own graceful song, "Just as of old," and Molloy's "Claudine;" while Mr. Webster, who has a good baritone voice, and all the necessary requirements of a superior singer, obtained a like honour for Lardelli's romanza, "Riccardo Cuor di Leone." Herr Jacobi gave a brilliant rendering of Sainton's Scotch fantasia for violin, which was repeated, as was Schumann's "Widmung," sung by Mr. Hoole.

Digitized by Google

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE.

In the Clouds; a Glimpse of Utopia; is the title of the new extravaganza produced on Monday evening. Prince Polydor (Mdme. St. Claire), in his search for a new sensation, dips his handkerchief in the "well of truth," and finds one by falling in love with a young maiden, Celiante (Miss Barth).

The inhabitants of Utopia are a "peculiar people." Their king, for example, is merely kept to "wear a crown and lay foundation stones." He has, however, a queen, a commander-in-chief, and an army of one man (fit for active service), but how many he possesses "on paper" we are not informed. The piece is, to use an "international" phrase, a "fair imitation" (whatever that means) of the Happy Land, Mr. John Bright being "taken off" in place of the persons who do the "funny" in the afterpiece. The extravaganza is full of hits, or intended hits, and the characters being in the hands of Miss Alice Barth, Miss M. Davis, Miss M. K. Nott, Messrs. Danvers, Turner, and Chamberlayne, besides the fair lessee, Mdme. St. Claire (who, by-the-bye, looked, danced, and dressed the prince to the life), the fun was quite up to the mark. Some very pretty music is introduced, and some composed for the piece by Mr. Thorpe Pede, a trio, "Hold him tight," being particularly commendable. We must not omit to mention that a dance, by a young lady in "black tights," is introduced with "special effects." Mr. Thorpe Pede's pretty operetta, Marguerite, began, and The Illustrious Stranger concluded the evening's amusement.

—o—

HERR PAUER'S LECTURES.

Herr Ernst Pauer, who seems to have taken a permanent position among our foremost public teachers of music and the literature connected therewith, has resumed his interesting lectures at the South Kensington Museum. The subject of the present course is twofold, dealing first with the rise and development of the various forms of instrumental music, and passing on to the "Art and Science of Pianoforte-playing." The third lecture took place on Saturday, both it and the one immediately preceding having to do exclusively with the first of these divisions. Thus, on Saturday week, Herr Pauer discussed the history and character of the fugue, symphony, sonata, quartet, and other instrumental forms, illustrating his remarks by playing, in his own neat and finished style, a number of well chosen examples. There could be no more instructive lecture than this; but the one given on Saturday last had a more general interest, and attracted a large as well as attentive auditory. The subject was Dance Music, upon which Herr Pauer said a great deal without at all exhausting the material at command. Indeed, a course of lectures would be required in order to cover all the ground occupied by this one theme, and to do full justice to its significance. But in the brief time at his command Herr Pauer was careful to put forward the intimate connection between dance tunes and those forms of instrumental music which are now accounted classical. This, of course, led him to a discussion of the Suite, with its almost exclusive use of dance forms, and to the symphony, in which, till Beethoven invented the scherzo, one dance form—the minuet—had a regular place. Herr Pauer could do little more than glance at the attractive subject he opened up; but we trust that some day it will receive separate and exhaustive treatment. "It is highly interesting," says Richard Wagner, in his Zukunftsmusik, Brief an einem Franzosischen Freund, "and, at the same time, the only way of elucidating the nature of all musical form—to observe how the German masters have all aimed at giving a richer and broader development to the simple dance melody, executed independently by instruments. . . . . That peculiar work of art, the symphony, was founded and developed on this simple basis." The process by which the noble symphony grew out of the humble dance tune might well engage Herr Pauer's attention as a lecturer, and lead to a result as interesting as Wagner describes the process of investigation to be. From general observations, Herr Pauer went on to explain the origin and character of particular dances, taking his audience from country to country, and giving examples from the music of each. Beginning with Germany, the lecturer passed to Sweden and Norway, jumping thence across the Continent to the Danubian provinces, and afterwards passing to Italy, Spain, Bohemia, Russia, Poland, and Hungary, not forgetting the British Islands in the course of his route. The multitude of dance forms brought under notice, their distinctive character, the beauty of some, and the interest of all, kept the audience closely attentive to the end, and nobody could have gone away without a vivid idea of the important position held by dance music, not only in the history of the art, but also in the history of nations. For this result alone Herr Pauer deserved all the applause he received. The lectures will be resumed on February 18; subject, "The Art and Science of Pianoforte-playing."

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A public rehearsal was given in the Hanover Square Rooms, on Tuesday afternoon, when the following programme was gone through by the students, to the entire satisfaction of the audience:—

Andante and Menuetto, from Symphony (MS.)—J. H. Roberts (Student); Mass in C (Solos by Miss Beasley, Miss Grace Bolton, Westmorland Scholar, Mr. Dudley Thomas, and Mr. Pope)—Beethoven; Andante and Finale from Concerto in A minor (Pianoforte, Miss Troup)—W. G. Cusins; Finale to Act I, Don Giovanni (Solos by Miss Jessie Jones, Miss Beata Francis, Miss Nessie Goode, Mr. Henry Guy, Mr. Wadmore, Mr. Aldersey, and Mr. Pope)—Mozart; Concerto in E minor, (Violin, Mr. Palmer)—Mendelssohn; Psalm, "Hear my prayer" (Solo by Miss Nessie Goode)—Mendelssohn; Barcarole and Finale from Concerto in F minor (Pianoforte, Mr. A. H. Jackson)—W. Sterndale Bennett; Overture, "Prometheus"—Beethoven.

Beethoven's Mass—considering its difficulties—was exceedingly well executed, and the performance reflected the highest credit on the young artists. The same approbation must be bestowed on those to whom the finale to the first act of Don Giovanni was entrusted. Miss Nessie Goode and Mr. Wadmore particularly distinguished themselves. Mr. Palmer obtained a recall for his clever performance of Mendelssohn's violin concerto, and the same compliment was paid to Miss Troup and Mr. Jackson for the intelligent way in which they played the excerpts from the pianoforte concertos of Mr. Cusins and Sir Sterndale Bennett. Mr. Walter Macfarren conducted in a thoroughly efficient manner.

—o—

JOHN SEVERIN SVENDSEN.

("To the Editor of the London "Musical World."")

DEAR SIR,—In your number 32, Vol. 49, August 12th, 1871, and in your copy of "The Life of John Severin Svendsen," you mention in a small editorial that you know nothing whatever of Herr Svendsen, but if he be only half what the Leipsic Journal makes him we shall be glad of his further acquaintance. In accordance with your remarks I herewith take the liberty, which I trust you will pardon, of enclosing the critiques of two of our most influential daily papers (the New York World and the Daily Tribune), on Mr. Theo. Thomas's Classical Concert, given at Steinway Hall last Saturday evening, when Herr Svendsen's recent composition, Sigurd Slembe, was given with MARKED SUCCESS.

Herr Svendsen is now sojourning with his wife in Christiana, Norway, his native city, for the present. Again apologizing for the liberty and boldness of my addressing you, allow me to subscribe myself, dear Sir, very respectfully yours, DR. M. LEVETT.

37, West Twenty-Third Street, New York.

"The concluding wonder of the programme was the overture of Svendsen, Sigurd Slembe. Already this young Scandinavian composer has made himself recognised, even in this country, by the composition or two of his which have been heard here, as among the very first of living musicians. His is the novelty which 'consents to shine with new gracefulness through old forms,' and accomplishes some of the unexhausted effects of music, instead of straining after effects which, whatever else they are, are not musical effects. We are not contrasting him in this respect with the master of the new school, but with the most conspicuous disciples of that master. His technical mastery of the resources of the modern orchestra is as complete as that of Liszt or Berlioz. But, unlike these composers, that mastery is with him a means, and not as with them, it seems to us, an end."—New York Tribune.

"The Symphonic Introduction of Svendsen's is entirely new to this country, and, indeed, we had no practical acquaintance with any of the works of this young and promising Norwegian composer until Mr. Thomas gave us a specimen of his quality last summer. This introduction is short, vigorous, and richly scored, and will, doubtless, often find a place upon our concert programmes."—New York World.

[After this, we must strongly urge Messrs. Grove and Manns to bestow their kind attentions upon Svendsen and his Sigurd Slembe. ED. M. W.]

MADRID.—After the Roméo et Juliette of M. Gounod, Señor Robles has treated his subscribers to La Traviata and Les Vêpres Siciliennes, but the subscribers have not been very well pleased with the way in which those works were presented, while the general public have been even less so; at any rate, they do not patronise the theatre. Of the artists, Signora Fossa and Signor Bocolini are much liked.—Signor Stagno announces that he has selected for his benefit the opera of Marina, by Señor Arreta. The principal parts will be sustained by Madame Sass and Signor Stagno, who will both sing the original Spanish text.

Digitized by Google

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(From our own Correspondent.)

It rarely falls to the lot of what is denominated the "provinces" to hear a better performance of Mozart's ever welcome and ever fresh Nozze di Figaro than that rendered by Mr. Mapleson's company at the Theatre Royal last week, an additional charm being derived from the fact that the opera had not been previously given (in its Italian garb at least) in Birmingham. To dilate upon the manner in which Mdlle. Tietjens, as the more or less sentimental Countess, Mdme. Sinico, as the lively waiting-maid, Susannah, and Mdme. Trebelli-Bettini, as the mischievous and saucy page, Cherubino, played and sang their respective parts would be superfluous; while Signor Borella's Bartolo, Signor Rinaldini's Basilio, Signor Casaboni's drunken gardener, and Mdlle. Bauermeister's Marcellina are hardly less familiar to the music-loving public. Signor Campobello is, however, new to the part of the Count, and deserves a separate line of praise and encouragement for the manner in which he sustained the by no means easy rôle of the jealous and unfaithful noble, whose droits du signeur were, no doubt, rigidly (one cannot say righteously) exercised. In look and bearing little, if anything, was left to be desired, and it only needs further practice to enable Signor Campobello to make as good a representative of the Count as may reasonably be expected. Under the conductorship of Signor Li Calsi, an orchestra of some thirty instrumentalists acquitted themselves in a manner more than creditable; while the chorus and ballet (with Mdlle. Blanche Ricois as principal dancer) were fairly efficient.

Il Trovatore is an opera which I do not much affect; en revanche, it does not much affect me, more particularly when I don't hear it, as was the case when it was played here last week. I learn, however, from trustworthy sources, that Mdme. Sinico as Leonora (how different to the Leonora of Beethoven, to say nothing of her of Donizetti), Mdlle. Macvitz as Azucena, Mdlle. Bauermeister as Inez, Signor Aramburo as Manrico, Signor Sterbini as Il Conte di Luna, and Signor Campobello as Fernando, were all more or less effective, the audience (not of the largest) being proportionately appreciative. I forbear further remark, as criticism, even if vicarious, should not be perfunctory.

If the Theatre Royal, Birmingham—or, at any rate, that part of it which includes the stage and its approaches—was christened the Cave of Æolus, or Temple of the Winds, the title would not be inappropriate, for it might be safely asserted that so draughty and uncomfortable a region can hardly be found elsewhere. That under such circumstances coughs and colds must abound (more particularly at this season of the year), is but a foregone conclusion; and one result was that those who went to the morning performance of Saturday in the expectation of hearing Lucrezia Borgia, with Mdlle. Tietjens as the heroine, were disappointed, the illustrious prima donna being hors de combat (no pun is intended) from the causes already hinted at. Compensation was, however, found by the substitution for Donizetti's desperate Duchess of Rossini's romantic Rosina, in the bright and sparkling Barbiere, Madame Trebelli-Bettini sustaining the part of the vivacious ward in so charmingly captivating a manner as to enchant all hearers. In the evening, M. Gounod's Faust was given with Mdlle. Roze as Marguerite. Mdlle. Macvitz produced a satisfactory effect as Siebel, while the part of Martha was sustained by Mdlle. Bauermeister with the same conscientious care and attention that she invariably devotes to all that may fall to her share. If the Faust (Signor Urio) and the Mephistopheles (Signor Giulio Perkiu)—two of Mr. Mapleson's recent acquisitions, each possessing the first qualification, a good voice—fell somewhat short, dramatically or vocally, in conception and execution, want of experience may be pleaded as the excuse, for both gentlemen appear to have ability which, with proper study and training, may render them valuable additions to the lyric stage; and, as some months must elapse ere they can make their début in London, no doubt considerable improvement may be effected meanwhile. Band and chorus were well under the control of Signor Li Calsi, and the opera appeared to give satisfaction to an appreciative, if not enthusiastic, audience.

Mr. Mapleson's company left on Sunday by special train for Bristol, where they give three operatic performances, after which a like number at Bath, then a week at Brighton, and the Christmas week will give them breathing time till they recommence their tour with concert business.

In justice to a clever and rising artist, I must apologize for the omission of the name of Mr. Edward Lloyd, in my recent notice of Messrs. Harrisons' last concert. Mr. Lloyd sang like a cultivated musician, and was warmly applauded in "M'appari tutt' amor," and encored in Lindsay Sloper's "Airs that wander," for which he substituted "Good-bye, sweetheart." At Messrs. Adams and Beresford's first chamber concert, Hummel's Septet for piano, strings, and wind, and Bach's Triple concerto for three pianos, with stringed accompaniments, will be given. The Amateur Harmonic Association promise M. Gounod's Gallia, and Mr. Henry Smart's Bride of Dunkerron, at an early date.

D. H.

—o—

ANECDOTE OF MOZART.

One day, Schachtner found little Wolfgang Mozart practising alone upon a violin of which some one had made him a present.—"Good day, Herr Schachtner," said the boy; "how is your butter violin (ihre Buttergeige)?"—This was the name he gave Schachtner's violin, on account of the softness of its tone. Any other boy would, probably, have said: "your violin of sugar."—"Do you know," he added, "it is an eighth of a tone lower than mine? At least, if you have left it as it was the other day." Mozart's father, who knew his son's exceptional memory and profound feeling for tone, felt curious to ascertain whether the boy was right. He sent, therefore, for the violin, and found it was tuned exactly as Wolfgang had said. On another occasion, as Schachtner was playing the second violin part in a trio at Mozart Sen.'s, Wolfgang came and stood behind him, and insisted on doubling the part. As Wolfgang had not yet learnt the first principles of the instrument, his father refused to comply with this boyish caprice. Seeing, however, that his refusal made the boy cry, he finished by taking compassion on him. "Sit down here," he said, "and play so gently that no one shall be able to hear you." Scarcely had the trio begun, before Schachtner was stupified to find that he was perfectly superfluous, since Wolfgang played his part admirably. Without saying a word, he laid down his instrument, and not only did the boy finish the piece begun, but deciphered with equal ease many others. On being greatly complimented for his ability, he appeared flattered, and asserted that he could also have played the first violin part. Being put to the proof, he succeeded in doing what he said he could do. It is true that he sometimes got involved in difficulties, but he always extricated himself from them in a marvellous manner. Andreas Schachtner, to whom we owe these extraordinary and almost incredible anecdotes, was a simple-minded, truthful man, and an intimate friend of the Mozart family. His words merit our full confidence, for he speaks only of what he himself saw, and only to persons whose reminiscences could act as a check upon his own.

Cologne.—Since the 1st September, when the present season commenced, the operatic performances at the Stadttheater have been exceedingly satisfactory, as the company is not only numerous but efficient. Among the works less known here which have been produced, may be mentioned Jessonda and Joseph en Egypte. Herr R. Wagner's Meistersinger von Nürnberg will be the next novelty.

Strassburg.—According to all accounts, Herr Hessler, the manager of the Stadttheater, is "the right man in the right place." Thanks to his thorough knowledge of every professional requirement connected with his position; to his appreciation of the peculiar circumstances in which he is placed; and to his steady perseverance in carrying out whatever his judgment tells him is advisable, he has succeeded in enlisting public favour for his efforts, especially as regards opera. The operatic company is exceptionally good, and some of the members, such as Mdlle Hasselt-Barth, Mdme Krempter-Leonoff and Herr Hesselbach, are highly popular.—According to statistical returns published by Herr Hessler of what was done by him from the 15th September, 1872 to 31st August, 1873, we learn that, besides appearing in Strassburg, his company visited Metz, Muhlhausen, and Colmar, playing in all 493 times, 276 performances being German and 127 French. At Muhlhausen there were 39 German and 58 French performances; at Colmar, 17 German and 25 French; at Metz, 96 German and 36 French, and at Strassburg, 123 German. There were 23 performances of classic operas, Beethoven being represented three times; Méhul, twice; Mozart, thirteen times; and Weber, five.

Digitized by Google

LAST MONDAY POPULAR CONCERT

BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

SIXTEENTH SEASON, 1873-4.

DIRECTOR—MR. S. ARTHUR CHAPPELL.

ELEVENTH CONCERT,

MONDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 15, 1873.

To Commence at Eight o'clock precisely.

Programme.

PART I.

QUARTET in D minor, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, MM. L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI. Mozart.

DUET, "Caro, bella" (Giulio Cesare)—Miss JESSIE JONES and Mdlle. REIMAR .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Handel.

SONATA, in F major, for pianoforte alone—Dr. HANS VON BULOW Mozart.

PART II.

SONATA, in D major, Op. 18, for pianoforte and violoncello—(repeated by desire)—Dr. HANS VON BULOW and Signor PIATTI Rubinstein.

DUETS, {"Come, oh! night" / "Song of the Swallow"} Miss JESSIE JONES and Mdlle. REIMAR Ferdinand Hiller.

SONATA, in C minor, Op. 30, No. 2, for pianoforte and violin—Dr. HANS VON BULOW and Madame NORMAN-NERUDA .. .. Beethoven.

Conductor .. .. .. .. SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

LAST SATURDAY POPULAR CONCERT

BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON (THIS DAY), DEC. 13, 1873.

To Commence at Three o'clock precisely.

Programme.

QUARTET, in C major, for two violins, viola, and violoncello—Madame NORMAN-NERUDA, MM. L. RIES, ZERBINI, and PIATTI Mozart.

SONG, "The Erl King" (by desire)—Mr. SANTLEY .. .. .. Schubert.

SONATA, in E flat, Op. 122 (No. 5 of Hallé's edition), for pianoforte alone (first time at the Popular Concerts)—Mr. CHARLES HALLE .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Schubert.

RECIT. & AIR, "Revenge, Timotheus cries"—Mr. SANTLEY .. Handel.

SONATA, in A major, Op. 47 (dedicated to Kreutzer), for pianoforte and violin (by desire)—Mr. CHARLES HALLE and Mdme. NORMAN-NERUDA .. .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.

Conductor .. .. .. .. .. SIR JULIUS BENEDICT.

CRYSTAL PALACE SATURDAY CONCERTS.

ELEVENTH CONCERT—THIS DAY—DECEMBER 13th, 1873.

PROGRAMME.

OVERTURE, "Exhibition" .. .. .. .. .. .. Auber.

SONG—Madame OTTO-ALVSLEBEN.

PIANOFORTE CONCERTO in E flat—Dr. HANS VON BULOW .. Liszt.

SONG—Mr. GEORGE WERRENRATH.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS—Dr. HANS VON BULOW.

DUET—Madame OTTO-ALVSLEBEN and Mr. GEORGE WERRENRATH.

CHORAL SYMPHONY .. .. .. .. .. .. .. Beethoven.

Vocalists—Mdme. OTTO-ALVSLEBEN, Miss MARION SEVERN, Mr. GEORGE WERRENRATH, Mr. GEORGE FOX, and the CRYSTAL PALACE CHOIR.

Conductor .. .. .. .. .. MR. MANNS.

MARRIAGE.

On the 10th inst., at St. George's, Hanover Square, by the Rev. Philip S. O'Brien, FRANCIS, son of the late THOMAS HOLYOAKE, Esq., of Redditch, Worcestershire, to Miss MARIE ROLPH, of Great Portland Street, W. (late of the London Academy of Music). No cards.

DEATH.

On December 6, suddenly, Mr. ELLIS ROBERTS, Harpist to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales, aged 54.

TESTIMONIAL TO MR. G. A. MACFARREN.—We are requested to inform our readers, that, by an unaccountable oversight, the name of Mr. Arthur Sullivan, a Professor of Harmony and Composition, and of "Reading from Score and Figured Bass," in the Royal Academy of Music, was omitted from the list of Professors who signed the testimonial to Mr. G. A. Macfarren, particulars of which were published in the Musical World of November 22.

NOTICE.

TO ADVERTISERS.—The Office of the MUSICAL WORLD is at Messrs DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.'S, 244, Regent Street, corner of Little Argyll Street (First Floor). It is requested that Advertisements may be sent not later than Thursday. Payment on delivery.

The Musical World.

LONDON, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1873.

WE do not suppose that time will ever seriously affect the position held in England by Handel's Messiah. That work has grown, like the British oak, for more than a hundred years, and now its roots have so firm a hold on popular affection that nothing can move it. The Messiah is assimilated into the national body, and forms part of the national life. But, while this is the case, and while there is neither a chance of its pre-eminence being shaken, nor a desire for such a result, the fact is obvious that Handel's work no longer stands alone as the oratorio of Christianity. Till lately it held this position. Only the Messiah gave musical embodiment to the mission of Christ, and to the grand cardinal doctrines of the religion He established—reason the more why a distinctively Christian nation should cherish it with peculiar fervour. But there came a change when Bach's Passions-Musik, after one or two ineffective efforts at distant intervals, gained a hold upon the public. The Messiah found then, we will not say a rival, but a companion,—a work treating the same exalted theme of suffering and redemption, and embodying, within limits, the same grand and touching story. This was a step in advance; because it is no more good for a public to be a public of one work, than for a man to be a man of one book. The tendency in such a case is towards a confirmed narrowness of view. Everything has to be tested by the one admitted standard, and there can hardly be progress or variety. It was well, therefore, when Bach's Passion gained the public ear, and began slowly, though surely, to worm its way into favour. That the movement will go on, we have no more doubt than that its result will be to encourage an eclectic musical taste among the masses of the people. But there is every probability of a third work soon taking its place by the side of the Messiah and the Passion—a work also dealing with the story of the Redemption, and the person and mission of the Redeemer. Many years ago, the Bach Society, now defunct, took in hand what is called the Christmas Oratorio of the great master, after whom the society was named. More—it did for the Christmas Oratorio what it did for the Passion, and gave a public performance of the work in a necessarily abridged form. But the Bach Society, admirable in intention, and, so far as it went, in action, seemed unable to carry out its designs. It could give one or two performances, and no more; the inevitable consequence being that, as regards achieving popularity for a neglected masterpiece, its efforts were thrown away and wasted. No more was heard of the Christmas Oratorio till two parts of it were given in St. James's Hall, three or four years back, by the curious organisation which called itself the "Ancient Concerts." Our readers will have that performance in mind, and need not be told that it did very little towards commending the old master's music. Even after this fiasco the Christmas Oratorio was not wholly abandoned, for, in 1870, portions of it were heard at a concert given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, under Mr. John Hullah's direction. Such repeated attentions to the work showed that an adequate revival was only a question of time. Indeed, that revival would certainly have come in any case. It is one of the peculiar features of the present day, as regards music, that while a numerous and powerful party are projecting themselves into the "future," others, obeying an instinct of compensation, are exploring the past. On every side we meet with rivals of all kinds; and, this being the case, it was not probable that such a work as the Christmas Oratorio would be overlooked. Happily, it has fallen now into the right hands, and will have everything done for it that perseverance can do. We need scarcely remind any one that Mr. Barnby, then at the head of the Oratorio Concerts, popularised Bach's Passion by resolutely keeping it before the public eye. That he will do the same for Bach's other great sacred work there is good reason to believe. Mr. Barnby has shown that he is not the man to put his hand to the plough, and then look back. Wherefore, we expect him to drive the new furrow straight ahead till the task he has set himself is done.

Digitized by Google

The first performance of the Christmas Oratorio takes place in Albert Hall on Monday next, under conditions well adapted to ensure success. Till after it, we must reserve any observations upon the work itself, merely pointing out that, as a collection of six cantatas for as many Church feasts more or less connected with the birth of Christ, it is very long, and can no more be given in its entirety than under the original conditions. But, though the Christmas Oratorio was never intended to do duty as an oratorio, nor ever written for the concert-room, its revival will excite the greatest interest, and Mr. Barnby will have preferred another claim to the gratitude of amateurs.

OCCASIONAL NOTE.

THE Standard, in a recent article on the Crystal Palace Saturday Concerts, speaks in the following terms of Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Ouvertura di Ballo, which was the last piece in the programme:—

"Mr. Arthur Sullivan's Ouvertura di Ballo, a bright, vivacious inspiration, which would have done honour to Auber, brought a concert of unusual interest to a brilliant termination. In this class of composition Mr. Sullivan stands without a rival, and such a position ought to render him anxious of adding new triumphs to his list. The Ouvertura di Ballo possesses the Auberian spirit in all its essentials—that is to say, that scholarship, fanciful invention, and airiness of expression are combined in a work which is very light and brisk, but never trivial or vapid. One more attribute of Auber's Mr. Sullivan also possesses in the knowledge of how to employ the brass and percussion instruments, so as to reap all their advantages without developing any vulgarity."

With every word of which we agree.

BACH'S CHRISTMAS ORATORIO.—The next concert of the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society, which is to be given on Monday next, the 15th inst., will be signalized by the production of Bach's Christmas Oratorio, for the first time in this country. It is certainly remarkable that so great a work as this should have remained unheard, and, except to the student, almost unknown in England—although it can scarcely be wondered at, considering the unaccountable neglect with which Bach's sublime setting of the Passion has, until very lately, been treated. The interest, however, which has been created by, and which always now attaches to every performance of the last named work, proves the fact that such masterpieces only require to have a fair hearing and a satisfactory rendering, to attain, in a very short time, a lasting popularity. It is by no means improbable that the Christmas Oratorio may become even more attractive than the Passion Music, being less fragmentary, and also naturally of a more jubilant character: the whole work is, in fact, a joyous song of praise and gratitude for the coming season, when all "good Christian men rejoice." The vocalists announced to take part in this performance are Madame Otto-Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. W. H. Cummings and Signor Agnesi; Dr. Stainer presiding at the organ. The performance will be, as usual, under the direction of Mr. Barnby.

CONCERTS VARIOUS.

THE All Saints' Musical Society gave a grand evening concert on December 9th at St. Peter's Hall, Walworth. The Misses Brown, Wheeldon, and Blanche Hinderer, Messrs. Braden, Carter, and Ch. J. Bishenden were the principal vocalists. In the first part, the society gave selections from the Messiah, St. Paul, and Judas in excellent style. Mr. Bishenden gained great applause, and was encored in his songs, "Nazareth," "True to the last," and a new song, "Sir Marmaduke." The various other solos were duly appreciated. Messrs. Vernham and Freeman accompanied the vocal music, and Mr. R. Mackie conducted.

MR. W. F. TAYLOR, organist of the Parish Church, Battersea, gave his annual concert at the Llamas Hall on Monday last. He was assisted by Mesdames Elise de Waldeck, Burgess, Withers, Messrs. Carter and Ransford, who all acquitted themselves in a manner satisfactory to a numerous and fashionable audience, Mr. Ransford being, as usual, a marked favourite. The chief interest in the concert was centred in Mr. Taylor's new compositions, among which was a charming part-song, for voices alone, "When the sun retires to rest," and some pianoforte pieces, "Adeline" (Romance), "Kenilworth" (Tempo di Gavotta), and "Wladislawa" (Polonaise de Concert). The first two were played by Mr. Taylor, in a finished manner, and the third ("Wladislawa") by a little pupil of Mr. Taylor's, Miss Hamilton, scarcely in her teens, who played in a manner (considering the polonaise is a very brilliant concert-piece for any performer) that was quite surprising, and showed how well she had been instructed; this was further illustrated by her performance, with Mr. Taylor, of Herz's brilliant duet on the March from Guillaume Tell, which called forth a unanimous encore. Altogether the concert was highly satisfactory. Among the audience we noticed the Rev. Dr. Thomson, vicar of an adjoining parish, but, we regret to say, none of the Battersea clergy, under whose "patronage" the concert was given.

ATHENÆUM READINGS, CAMDEN ROAD.—The concerts, which take place at the Lecture Hall every Friday evening, have been more than usually attractive, thanks to the exertions of an energetic committee, amongst whom Mr. P. Waterlow, son of Sir S. Waterlow the ex-Lord Mayor, takes a most active part, ably assisted by Mr. Robert Smith, the hon. secretary. The spacious hall was crowded on Friday evening, December 5, to listen to a performance of particular interest. The concert began with Signor Tito Mattei's "Grand Valse," for piano solo, brilliantly played by Miss Kenny. Mdlle. St. Clair sang, in the first part, a song by Claribel, and, in the second part, Pinsuti's song, "I love my love," and was in both very successful. Mr. C. D. Hoblin gave two comic songs, the last one being encored. Herr. A. Kühne, whose fine voice and exquisite style of singing have been often admired at these concerts, sang a romance by Stanzieri, "To t'amero," as also a song by C. Oberthür, with harp accompaniment, and was immensely successful in both. One of the great attractions of the evening was decidedly Mr. Oberthür's harp-playing. He was loudly encored in his effective solo, "Clouds and Sunshine," when he gave his well-known brilliant solo, "La Cascade;" the same compliment was awarded him after his fine performance of Parish Alvar's "Serenade," when he played another brilliant piece. Mr. Oberthür's unquestionable merit as a composer of the legitimate school was fully sustained by his clever performance of his "Concertino," a composition of three highly interesting movements; the orchestral parts, adapted for the piano, were played by Herr A. Kühne, who proved himself an excellent pianist and thorough musician. The vocal pieces were accompanied on the piano by Miss Kenny and Mr. Lee. We must, also, not omit to state that Mr. R. W. Davison read two scenes from Sheridan's The Rivals with great effect. For the next concert, on the 12th inst., the co-operation of Mr. Wilbye Cooper, the vocalist, is promised; and Beethoven's piano quartet in E flat will be given.

ON BLUNT.

There is a gay villain called Carker,
Whose conduct grows darker and darker;
When played by A. Cecil,
His polish and vis 'll
Astonish each candid remarker.

Z's OWL.

BRUNSWICK.—Herr Franz Abt has written a romantic four-act opera entitled Des Königs Scharfschütz.

ROME.—Weber's opera, Der Freischütz, has been produced with great success at the Teatro Apollo. The artists were Signore Bedetti, Singer, Signori Perotti and Petit. The performance was altogether exceptionally good. According to report, the last opera produced during the present season will be Poliuto, with Signora Pozzi-Brazzanti, Signori Patierno and Sparapani.

Digitized by Google

PLANETARY LIFE.

BY

Hermes.

(From "All the Year Round.")

"There are more things in heaven and earth, Horatio,
Than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

NO. II. THE HORSE IN ANOTHER WORLD.

(Continued from page 818.)

I may here give a brief account of our slinging machines, to which you have nothing similar. Experience had led us to the conclusion that the practice of tying up horses by their heads was attended with many bad results. The high-spirited animal thus held for several hours proved, in many cases, eager to rebel, until his temper was spoiled, and he became vicious. We also found that the weight of the body, pressing on the slender limbs of a thorough-bred horse, frequently engendered diseases, and often caused injuries to the fetlock joint, sometimes terminating in lameness. At first we substituted for the old arrangement a sort of spacious box, in which the horse was, as it were, a prisoner at large, but when the animals were high-tempered they would resent even this milder form of restraint, and probably injure themselves by plunging and kicking about. Ultimately we hit upon the "slinging machine," which completely answers its purpose. It consists of a kind of mattress, stuffed with soft hair, which is so constructed as to envelope the body of the horse, with "continuations" to encase the legs and feet, and is suspended, by means of ropes from large rings, firmly fixed in a cross beam, near the roof of the stable. The feet generally touch the ground, but so lightly that the weight of the body does not press on them. The whole apparatus is so arranged that the horse can move in any direction, and can even lie down on any part of the padding, which corresponds to his movements, for, by means of a winch, we can raise and lower him at pleasure. We had additional motives for the adoption of our present system in the fact that our steeds are very fleet, and our lands very hilly. It is therefore desirable that the strength of the horse should be husbanded, which would not be the case if he had to bear the weight of his body on his slender legs.

The construction of our "Nozia," or "head-holder," which differs essentially from your bit, is in accordance with the leading principle of allowing the animal as much ease as possible. It forms a figure, not unlike that of your 8, and we so place it that one portion goes under the lower, and the other over the upper jaw, while the central piece enters the lower extremity of the mouth over the tongue. Attached to either side of the nozia, which is of metal, and opens by means of a spring, is a single rein, made of the hide of a hippopotamus, a material which is never known to break. The power of directing the animal is principally obtained by pressing both jaws together, and bringing down the head close to the chest, a perfectly painless operation, but one which enables the rider to hold his steed firmly, when a decrease of speed is desired. The saddle for men is very small, and is so placed, by means of two girths, as to avoid pressure on the spine, above which it is slightly raised. The hoofs of the horses are protected by noiseless shoes, made of the hide of the hippopotamus, and so roughed that a slip is impossible even on the smoothest and most precipitous road.

For ladies who take a pleasure in equestrian exercises, a special arrangement is made. Two broad bands, consisting partly of a light kind of metal, partly of a substance like a strong and very elastic leather, and lined with an exceedingly soft material, encircle the body of the horse, at the greatest possible distance from each other. Screwed into four metal ferrules, a pair on each band, are as many strong, slender supports, or poles, from which a small car, placed sideways, is suspended. This falls near, but does not touch, the horse's back, and is so firmly sustained that there is no danger of its slipping lower than the point intended. Attached to the car, of which, indeed, it forms a portion, is a small, light, but extremely firm, piece of mechanism, comprising four or five steps, by means of which the lady easily mounts, and which, when she has taken her seat, she pulls up after her, and fastens to one of the poles. In this position it forms a stool for her feet. Strong as it is, the whole apparatus, including the seat and the steps, is not heavier than one of your side-saddles.

The absence of all pressure on the horse's spine, which is thus enabled to move freely, is regarded by us as a great advantage.

The lady, as soon as she has taken her seat, fixes a small bar, so that she is firmly enclosed on all sides. When the animal moves, the chair swings slightly, but is checked at a certain point, and the skill of the fair equestrian is shown by the ease with which she keeps herself in an erect position, and accommodates herself to the varied movements of the horse. A certain knack is required to preserve a steady and graceful seat, but, proficiency once obtained, the lady feels as easy in her car as if she were on a chair in her drawing-room. Holding the reins from her seat, she guides the horse without difficulty; and when she wishes to descend, having stopped the animal, she fastens them to one of the poles, and, the steps being let down, readily descends. Neither in mounting nor alighting does she require assistance, and anything like a jump from the seat would be contrary to our notions of decorum.

The exercise taken by our ladies in their cars is far milder than that which results from the use of your side-saddles. Our hot climate is opposed to violence of any kind, and I should not forget to state that, in the season when the sun is most powerful, a canopy is placed over the poles as a screen for the rider. The side towards which the seat is turned is varied on every occasion, that the body of the rider may not acquire any improper bias by too constant usage to one position.

With our horses a propensity to "bolt" is very rare, but if anything of the sort is attempted, the lady can draw the animal's jaw close to its chest, instantly attaching the reins firmly to one of the poles. In that position the horse stops at once, and the lady, if she chooses to descend may d so with perfect safety. Serious accidents to ladies on horseback, even to novices, are to us utterly unknown.

(To be continued.)

* Communicator of "Another World."

PLAUEN.—A new oratorio, Petrus, has been executed under the direction of Herr Gast, by about four hundred singers, the solo vocalists being Madame Lang-Klauwell and Herr Joseph Erl, from Dresden. The oratorio is from the pen of Herr Theodor Berthold, Organist to the Court of Saxony, and was exceedingly well received.

MUNICH.—It seems likely that Herr R. Wagner's idea of an operatic training school will shortly be carried out, though with certain modifications in the original plan. The School will be established, not in Bayreuth, but in Munich, and will form a sort of subordinate branch of the Theatre Royal, being placed, for a time, at least, under the orders of the Intendant-General.

BAYREUTH.—The prospects of the Grand-National-Festival-Stage-Play-Theatre are not particularly promising at the present moment, if foreign papers are to be credited. It appears that not only are the works suspended for want of funds, but that, in consequence of the foundations giving way, the walls are gradually settling down, and will, probably, shortly come to the ground, unless energetic measures are at once taken to prevent their doing so.

Digitized by Google

PROVINCIAL.

BURY.—Mrs. John Macfarren gave, at the Athenæum Hall, a pianoforte and vocal recital, assisted by Miss Agnes Drummond, who sang with great taste, and was called upon to repeat "There's nae luck about the house." "Mrs. Macfarren's performance on the piano"—writes the Bury Free Press—"proved how richly that lady deserves the favourable critiques which have been written of her. It is not often that one finds the capability of appreciating and appropriating the spirit which imbued the composer, combined with the ability of infusing that spirit into the performance of his productions; but both these powers Mrs. Macfarren possesses in a high degree. Whether it was a brilliant rondo, or one of the descriptive 'water pieces,' which have been so much favoured by both composers and pianists, whether it was a caprice, a funeral march, or a fantasia, they were all equally well rendered, and the faultless and rapid fingering could not but elicit admiration from an appreciative audience."

LIVERPOOL.—The Liverpool Daily Post of December 8 writes as follows:—

"On Saturday evening the members of the Societa Armonica gave an open rehearsal at the Liverpool Institute. The rehearsal began with an overture by Mozart (Don Juan), which was more than fairly executed, much of the success being due to the able manner in which Mr. Armstrong wielded the conductor's bâton, and to Mr. Lawson's skilful leadership. The other performances of the orchestra included Kalliwoda's Symphony, No. 6, in F, Op. 132, all the four numbers of which were played with faultless precision; and a march by Ries. The vocalists were the Liverpool Vocalists' Union, the soloists being Miss Monkhouse and Mr. Busfield. Balfe's chorus, 'Hither we come,' was a creditable performance, and the same may be said of Bishop's chorus, 'The tiger crouches in the wood.' Miss Monkhouse sang with her usual care and sweetness the song, 'Oh, happy is the little bird,' and was heartily encored, Mr. Smith's horn obbligato blending agreeably with her voice. Mr. Busfield was equally successful with the scena from Oberon, 'Oh, 'tis a glorious sight.'"

NOTTINGHAM.—We read in the Nottingham Daily Express as follows:—

"The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a first-class rendering of the Messiah at the Mechanics' Hall last Thursday evening. The artists engaged for the solo parts were Madame Frances Brooke, Miss Enriquez, Mr. G. T. Carter, and Mr. Chaplin Henry. The band consisted of over thirty performers; Mr. Essex presided at the organ, and Mr. Henry Farmer conducted in a most masterly manner. We never remember to have heard a grander performance of the Messiah. The choruses were really fine, and rendered with a smoothness and precision which produced a perfect result. Mr. Farmer must have been at great pains, and given much valuable time to have brought his band and chorus to such a point of perfection. We were much gratified to see a crowded hall, and it must have had an encouraging effect on the members of the society. The next concert is announced to take place on the 21st of January, when Mr. Sullivan's new oratorio, The Light of the World, will be presented. Mr. Santley, Madame Patey, and other famous vocalists are engaged. Mr. Charles Hallé's band will compose the orchestra, and Mr. Sullivan himself will conduct the performance."

BELFAST.—The inaugural concert of "Carroll's Choral Society," which has been formed by Mr. B. Hobson Carroll for the performance of oratorios, cantatas, part-songs, glees, and madrigals, took place in the Music Hall, where a numerous and fashionable audience assembled to listen to Mr. J. F. Barnett's cantata, The Ancient Mariner. That every care had been taken to render the choral numbers of the cantata in the most satisfactory manner—says the Northern Whig—was at once apparent, and though—as might naturally be expected in a work abounding with so much descriptive music—the absence of an orchestral accompaniment was sometimes felt, yet the way in which the cantata was produced left no ground for complaint. The society is, as it describes itself, a "Choral Society," and in the special department from which it takes its name it has made a successful and encouraging début. Miss Helen Horne (soprano), and Miss Holden (a local amateur contralto), sang all the music assigned to them, in the highest degree creditably. The tenor was Mr. Barton M'Guckin, and Mr. J. L. Wadmore was the baritone. There were about eighty voices on the orchestra. Occasionally—remarks the Northern Whig—the tenors came out a little too strongly, but careful training was everywhere apparent; and at the conclusion of the cantata Mr. Carroll, who conducted with his usual efficiency, was honoured with a most enthusiastic outburst of applause, which he acknowledged by bowing to the house. Mr. T. Osborne Marks, Oxon., presided at the harmonium, and Mr. George Mellor at the pianoforte. The second part of the concert consisted of a "miscellaneous selection." Signor Randegger's cantata, Fridolin, composed for the Birmingham Festival, is to be at once put in rehearsal.

KIRKCALDY.—The Kirkcaldy Musical Society gave a performance of Haydn's Creation in the Corn Exchange on Friday week. There was a good attendance, comprising the élite of the district. Mr. Adam Hamilton, of Edinburgh, conducted.

TUNBRIDGE WELLS.—The first morning subscription classical concert has taken place in the Assembly Room, where a large and fashionable audience assembled. The concert was under the conductorship of Mr. G. F. Kiallmark. The performers were Mr. H. Holmes (first violin), Mr. F. Folkes (second violin), Mr. A. Burnett (viola), Signor Pezze (violoncello), Mr. Kiallmark (pianoforte), and Miss Purdy (vocalist). The programme comprised compositions by Schubert, Mozart, and Mendelssohn, all of which were executed in a most brilliant manner. Miss Purdy sang Giordani's "Caro mio ben," and the old English ballad, "Near Woodstock town," with excellent taste; and Mr. Holmes contributed a violin solo, Beethoven's "Romance in G," in finished style.

ARE BURLESQUES DEMORALIZING?

(To the Editor of the "Musical World.")

SIR,—This is a question for authors, actors, managers, the public, and above all, the Lord Chamberlain, to seriously consider.—Can it raise the position of an author of any original merit to try and turn into ridicule the works of our great dramatic writers, such as Shakspeare and Bulwer, by course jokes, senseless puns, so far fetched as to cause a general outcry from the audience of—"Oh!"—and derisive laughter? Such applause as this can only convince the writer of the worthless effect of his handy-work upon the general public—the thinking portion leave the theatre before the piece is half finished, going away wondering how any man, with a spark of talent, can throw it away so recklessly, instead of cultivating that talent for something original; and, instead of demoralizing the rising generation with exhibitions, termed "breakdowns" and "comic (?) songs," only worthy of music-halls at the east end of London, writing such pieces as were produced by Madame Vestris. The young author by so doing would not only improve the tone of society—which has been so lowered by the coarse vulgarity of the stage—but would prepare himself for better things. There are some lofty "geniuses" of the present day who actually deny that Shakspeare was a great writer. Shakspeare's "fools" speak wisdom; but our modern authors' "fools" go right on to buffoonery! speaking nothing but folly!—and that, too, often of a very vicious kind. Now, I seriously ask, how can it improve the comedian to go and study the manner of an acknowledged public favourite, and try to turn his best points into ridicule?

This buffoonery is not difficult, and has been a serious stumbling-block to many a rising comedian, who, had he made originality his study, and gone to nature for his models, would have held a high position in his profession. The old comedians never stooped to this kind of clap-trap; what would Farren or C. Matthews the elder have said to any manager who would have had the courage to ask them to try to make Macready or Edmund Kean look ridiculous by making Tom-fools of themselves!—Fancy the sons of these two great actors now filling the high position their fathers held, being asked to buffoon Mr. Irving in the great part he is now playing, or in his fine rendering of Charles the First. We may "fancy such a thing" without any doubt with respect to the result. A manager can only bring contempt upon himself in the eyes of every thinking and right-minded man when he condescends to pander to a degraded taste by trying to bring into contempt that which is refined and elevating. It is in such cases as these that the Lord Chamberlain should exercise his authority, for the stage has a very great power over our social and moral condition; and if the managers of our theatres have not the good sense to know what responsibilities rest upon them for the well-being of society, it is the duty of the Lord Chamberlain to teach them that the stage is not to be made a medium for libel and demoralization!—Yours, &c.,

R. C.

HAMBURG.—The Stadttheater, after being entirely renovated, is to be reopened on the 1st September, 1874. Signor B. Pollini has been selected as manager, a character in which he is already favourably known. It is to be hoped that the old theatre may be more fortunate under this gentleman than it has been under several of his predecessors.

NEW YORK.—The first Symphony Concert given by Mr. Theodore Thomas introduced to the public Franz Schubert's Symphony in C major, a Symphonic Introduction by Svendsen, and "Queen Mab," from Romeo and Juliet, by Hector Berlioz.—Great things were expected of Verdi's Aida, and, according to the latest accounts, public expectations and managerial hopes were thoroughly realised. M. Strakosch announced that on the mise-en-scène of this opera he had expended thirty thousand dollars. He did not say, however, whether in paper or gold.

Digitized by Google

CHARLEY SCHULTZ.

One morning in 1853, a sailor boy—a blonde, curly-haired German—dressed in a red flannel shirt, dark trowsers, slippers, and no stockings, stopped in front of a music store in this city and looked wistfully in. Some one was trying the tones of a piano, and the sailor-boy eagerly listened, his hands nervously moving, and his lips parting and firmly compressing. He stepped in cautiously, paused a moment, advanced a little further, and stood until the person testing the instrument had left the stool, and then our sailor-boy turned and asked permission to try the instrument. The clerk, smiling contemptuously at the rough figure, motioned his hand toward the door, indicating him to leave. In 1849 or 1850 the habiliments of a stranger wouldn't have incurred this ungracious reception, but this was 1853. The sailor-boy hesitated, looking yearningly at the piano, when a fellow-countryman, a musician, standing by, said: "Why, of course, you may try it, sit down!" With a flushed face, the boy sprang to the seat, and ran his tarry fingers over the keys; he paused, and bit his lips with surprised mortification, looked at his rough, soiled digitals, opened and closed them rapidly, frowning at them with a kind of surprised curiosity, as if, by mistake, he had changed hands with somebody, and had only just discovered it; ran his fingers irritably over the keys again, and then folding his arms, dropped his head, and sat dejectedly looking at the key-board.

His new friend, who was intently observing him all the time, and had seen the accomplished artist at once, through the cramped and ineffectual attempts, now said, "You must be patient and wait the recovery of your fingers from their rough usage." The boy said he had just arrived from Europe before the mast. On questioning him it was discovered that he was a violinist and a private pupil of Spohr, and, his story being confirmed by well known German residents of this city—who had received letters desiring them to be on the look out for the boy, whose family suspected he had gone to California—he was properly cared for, and entered on the duties of his profession. Schultz is now the established director of the orchestra at the California Theatre. There has never been a charitable object for which his services have been asked that he has not responded to, and in all these years he never has received a benefit or complimentary testimonial to his generosity or professional merits.—B.

PROJECTED NEW THEATRE AT SAN FRANCISCO.

(From a Californian Correspondent.)

Dimensions of lot: 110 feet by 275 feet. The building will occupy the entire lot. The theatre proper will be situated at the rear portion, and will be 161 feet deep, by a width of 110 feet. The remaining 114 feet, at the front, will be devoted to stairs and entrances on the ground floor; art gallery on the first, and studios on the second floor; also, a grand vestibule and billiard saloon. The stairs will be two in number, 26 feet wide, 75 feet deep, and 20 feet high, with large show windows opening into the entrances, and into Mission Street. The entrances will be three in number, viz., one grand central entrance, 24 feet wide, and one on each extreme end of front, 12 feet wide. The lower one, used for the two upper galleries of the theatre, and the upper for the art gallery, making the total width of entrances 48 feet. These are all used as exits from the theatre, and as there is a communication with Jessie Street, at the proscenium, and a 25 feet passage to Stevenson Street, at the rear of the stage, the capabilities of emptying the house, in case of a panic, are great. The main entrance has convenient box-offices on either side, and in connection with the grand vestibule, laid in tile, with a Cologne fountain of chaste design in the centre of the latter. The grand vestibule is 35 feet wide, 65 feet long, and, extending up through three stories to the roof, terminates in a dome skylight 60 feet from the floor. The orchestra circle and parquette are entered from corridors opening on to the ground floor of vestibule, and staircases on either hand conduct to a continuous gallery around the grand vestibule, conducting, in the same manner as above, to the dress circle. The billiard room and saloon are beneath the grand vestibule, and are reached by a stairway out of the gentlemen's sitting-room. The art gallery proper is situated in the central portion of the front, 38 feet wide by 80 feet long, and extends up through two stories, with rooms for statuary, &c., on the first floor, and studios on the second, surrounding the art gallery proper, and provided with ample staircases, elevators, ladies and gentlemen's sitting and dressing rooms, lavatories, &c., the art gallery opening into the gallery of the grand vestibule, furnishing a magnificent promenade, and allowing of its being used in connection with the theatre. On the ground floor of this portion of the house are ample box-offices, retiring rooms for ladies and gentlemen from the theatre, manager's office, and office for the transaction of business for the art gallery.

Theatre proper.—The general contour of the auditorium is a circle of 87 feet diameter, the circumference striking the curtain line, back and sides, of the house, and each circle is reached by a corridor 12 feet wide, and extending around each circle and conducting to the proscenium boxes and stage. The total height of the auditorium is 78 feet, from the orchestra rail to the eye of the dome, from which will be suspended a magnificent chandelier. The circles are all open, as is the style in American theatres, and will be provided with light iron chairs of neat pattern, elegantly upholstered, and which turn up when the sitter rises, leaving the egress from the row free. The parquette is on the ground floor, from the rear of which, and about one foot above it, rises the orchestra circle, following the lines of the walls of the auditorium. These are reached from the ground floor of the vestibule, above the orchestra circle, and following its lines is the dress circle supported on iron columns, and reached from the gallery of the grand vestibule. The balcony is above the dress circle, and the gallery, or the amphitheatre, the topmost of all. These latter are reached by a separate entrance, as before mentioned, and are supported in the same manner as the dress circle, having the same contour. The house will seat about 2,300 persons. The orchestra will be sunk below, and partially under, the stage, which will be 3 feet 9 inches high at the foot-lights. Stage.—Depth of stage to foot-lights, 82 feet; to curtain, 74 feet; width of stage, 110 feet. Proscenium opening, 46 feet high and 44 feet wide; proscenium, 12 feet wide on the splay, and fitted with twelve boxes, six on a side, and upholstered A No. 1. The scene docks will extend the full length of the stage, and will admit of each flat being run directly off the grooves into the dock. The provisions for dressing-rooms (star, stock, and super), green-rooms, traps, property-rooms, paint galleries, &c., are unrivalled on this coast. Dr. Thomas Wade, the well-known dentist, is the prime mover in the enterprise; F. W. Best, the lessee; and Messrs. Wilber and Ford the builders. The house is situated on the north side of Mission Street, and will be styled "Wade's Grand Opera House."

MAGDEBURG.—Mozart's Requiem was lately performed with great effect by the Association for Sacred Music, under the direction of Herr Rebling.

BARCELONA.—A new opera, Editta, will be produced during the ensuing season at the Teatro del Liceo. The music is by Señor Obiols, and the libretto by Señor Don Francesco Fors de Casamayor.

FLORENCE.—A new opera, L'Avaro burlato, is announced at the Teatro Rossini. It is by Signor Giuseppe Maria Sborgi.—According to report, another new opera, Il Re Nala, by Signor Dall' Argine, will be brought out at the Teatro Principe Umberto during the Carnival.—Niccolo de' Lapi has been given fourteen times at the Pagliano.

BRUSSELS.—The prize offered by the Academy of Arts for the best Stringed Quartet has, according to several papers, been gained by M. S. de Langle, Junr., of Rotterdam.

MILAN.—Signor Sangiorgi's new opera, Giuseppe Balsamo, has, after numberless delays and postponements, at length been produced at the Teatro dal Verme. If the fact that the composer was called on twenty times during the first performance, and the author of the libretto once, and that some of the pieces were encored, constitutes a genuine success, then, without doubt, Giuseppe Balsamo may be ranked as such. But we all know what bravos, recalls, laurel wreaths, complimentary verses, and so on, mean on first nights in Italy at the present day. No one, therefore, will, probably, be surprised to hear that Giuseppe Balsamo is not a masterpiece, and will, in all probability, vanish ere long from the bills, never to return. In the first place, it is two long; there are five mortal acts of it. Then, it is deficient in originality and character. Parts of it are very old-fashioned as regards form, and reminiscences from other operas are by no means scarce. On the other hand, the melody is easy, elegant, and abundant. The principal parts were sustained by Signore Lodi Mariannina, Wanda Miller, Signori Maurelli, Storti, and Fabri. Saffo is underlined with Signore Barbot, Viale, Signori Pardini and Buti.—A new opera, Morovico, by Signor Dominiceti, is in preparation at the Teatro Carcano.—M. A. Rubinstein has given two concerts at the Conservatory. His programme included compositions by Handel, Chopin, Beethoven, Schumann, Liszt, and Mozart; as well as various emanations from his own pen. The well-known Florentine Quartet, also, have given a concert in the same place.

Digitized by Google

REVIEWS.

R. Mills & Sons.

Strive, Wait, and Pray. Words by Miss Proctor. Music by Walter Austin.

The setting of Miss Proctor's verses shows a skill and taste quite out of the common order. The music is well written, and not only suited to the words, but adapted to heighten their effect by means at once legitimate and artistic. Equally well fitted for soprano or tenor, this song has only to be known to find extensive favour. We should add that the accompaniment, though a very important feature, is not at all difficult.

Henry Klein & Co.

The Sailor's Bride. Song. Written by Charles J. Rowe. Composed by Sir Julius Benedict.

The subject of this song has been worked almost to death, but when a musician like Sir Julius Benedict takes a stale topic in hand we confidently look for something new to be made out of it. In the case before us the result is one of the most charming songs conceivable—a song with grace and beauty in every bar. The melody is charming, and not less so the accompaniment, which shows the master's hand alike in details and general design. We commend the song as one which should have a place in every amateur's repertory.

He was her only Son. Written by C. J. Rowe. Composed by J. Schira.

This should be called a scena rather than a song, since it consists of various movements, and tells a complete dramatic story, beginning with the separation of a sailor lad from his mother, and ending with his happy return, laden with fame and fortune. It may be imagined that a narrative like this suited the genius of Signor Schira, whose music illustrates its various incidents with graphic and striking force. The work exacts a good deal from the singer, but, if its exaction can be met, the question of success is a question no more.

Petits Souvenirs. Deux Morceaux de Genre pour Piano, par Gustave Erlanger.

Only one of these pieces is before us, and that is an Andante in D flat major, of considerable merit, and agreeable effect.

Air Favori de Henri IV. Transcription pour Piano par Paul Barbot.

This air has an unquestionable historic interest if it be, as stated, the one composed for Henri the Fourth's marriage with Marguerite de France, and performed at the Louvre. Apart from this, its interest is small. The transcription is very easy.

My Love's True-hearted. Song. Words by C. J. Rowe. Music by L. Zavertiial.

There may be nothing very distinctive in this song, but it is well written, and if well sung (by either bass or contralto voice), cannot fail to be well received.

I hear thee speak of a better land. Song. Words by Mrs. Hemans. Music by Arthur Cecil.

So far as we know, this is Mr. Arthur Cecil's maiden work, and, as a maiden work, it undoubtedly promises much. The music shows a good feeling for the words, and considerable power of expression. On the other hand, there are one or two passages questionable from a technical point of view. Mr. Cecil should submit his MS. to an expert.

Ransford & Son.

Who comes so gracefully gliding along. Trio for ladies' voices. Poetry by Moore. Music by W. F. Taylor.

A tuneful and pleasing composition in C major, easy to sing and accompany. Well adapted for home use.

Sir Ralph and the Lady Fair. Written by William Jones. Music by M. Keller.

The words of this song tell an exciting story of knightly derring-do; and the music is bold and full of spirit. Just the thing for amateur basses.

Musing Alone. Ballad. Written by the Author of "Who can tell?" Music by J. P. Knight.

A simple ballad in G major, upon a subject that appeals to every heart. There is little in the music, but a good singer could make an effect with the song.

I Would not Change my English Home. Ballad. Written by Dr. J. E. Carpenter. Music by J. L. Hatton.

Another simple ballad in C major.

A Sailor's Yarn. Song. Words by C. J. Rowe. Music by J. L. Hatton.

A stirring tale of the sea, with which Mr. Hatton has interfered as little as possible.

The Boy and the Brook. Song. Written by Longfellow. Music by J. L. Hatton.

Here we recognise the hand of Mr. Hatton in his best mood. The song is one of much interest and equal charm. Especially should the graceful and characteristic accompaniment be noticed. Let our amateur readers take care to procure "The Boy and the Brook."

WAIFS.

Next year will be the year of pianists, as Arabella Goddard comes here in the spring, fresh from her Australian triumphs, and Dr. Hans von Bülow is to succeed her in the fall.—New York Arcadian.

There are now six musical journals published in Trieste.

The direction of the Frascati Concerts, in Paris, has been entrusted to M. Maton.

The Messiah will be performed at the Cirque des Champs Elysees on the 18th inst.

M. Vieuxtemps, the violinist, has retired from public life for the present, owing to his state of health.

Madame Faure has just lost her father, M. Decius Brutus Lefèvre, and, in attending the funeral, M. Faure contracted an illness which, says the Ménestrel, causes his friends great anxiety.

An orchestra has been formed out of the students of the Paris Conservatoire, and the Ménestrel jerkily says of the first performance:—"Triomphe sur toute la ligne. Ensemble de véterans, verve de vingt ans."

Captain Flood Page, well-known to the volunteer world, has been appointed to the place so long and admirably filled by Mr. George Grove, as Secretary to the Crystal Palace. Mr. Wilkins will now be general manager.

Louis Drouet, the distinguished flute player, whose death we announced last week, is said to have been the composer of the air, "Partant pour la Syrie," which is generally attributed to Queen Hortense, of whose suite the musician was a member.

Miss Emily Mott, who recently made so promising a début at St. James's Hall, is now suffering severely from rheumatic fever. Miss Mott was on the eve of her departure for Italy, to complete her vocal studies, when she was so unfortunately attacked with the above malady.

London appears to be inundated with a swarm of young pianists. By far the most promising of these is Miss Josephine Lawrence, a pupil of Hallé and Arabella Goddard. This young lady made a very successful début at her own concert some time since, and we read of her having been playing privately before royalty.—New York Arcadian.

The Oswestry "Handel Society" announce a performance of the Messiah on the 16th inst. The principal vocalists engaged are Miss Edith Wynne and Miss Jessie Bond. The efforts of this society to promote a love of first-class music are meeting with success, and will, no doubt, ere long, enable the members to occupy an important position in the principality, as educators of the people in the knowledge of the works of the great masters.

Mr. Charles Hallé announced six concerts in Liverpool; the first on the 18th ult., at St. George's Hall. A contemporary says: "We distinctly remember the year of 1848, when he gave his first concert at the Assembly Rooms, with Herr Ernst, to an audience of 7. This was the encouragement Liverpool then gave to what is termed classical concerts. Now Mr. Hallé ensures a crowded hall of 2,000 people." Here is encouragement for some of our concert speculators.

Paul Moist begs to state that he misses Augusta Thomson from the London stage, but hears that she is "opera-boufferising" in the provinces (provinces—word specially adopted by the Era). Augusta goeth to the Theatre Royal, Liverpool, for the pantomime; after that P. M. trusts to again see her in the great metropolis (great metropolis—special title, registered by the late editor of the Morning Advertiser). Your readers may take that for granted! (This goak is registered).

The Telegraph's Parisian correspondent says:—

"The much-vexed question of the opera is settled at last. The Government has decided in the sense which I indicated some weeks ago, and the French company is to alternate with the Italian at the Salle Ventadour. The new Minister of Public Instruction, M. de Fourtou, has brought in a bill for an extraordinary grant in order to defray the expenses incurred by the destruction of the house in the Rue Lepelletier, and by the necessity of providing for the temporary representations to be given during the period required for the completion of the new house."

The Philadelphia Press, in writing about a performance of Vincent Wallace's opera of Maritana, says:—"Mr. Wilford Morgan, an English tenor, appeared as Don Cæsar de Bazan, it being his début on the American stage. He achieved a gratifying success. His voice is of the robusto order, with a clear, crisp, and telling quality, and is smooth and even. He has also command of an unusually effective falsetto, which he uses very gracefully in the softer passages. Several of his airs were encored, and the audience were evidently highly pleased both with his singing and acting. His make-up, as the vagrant nobleman, was at once picturesque and appropriate, and his impersonation marked by the requisite swagger and abandon. Mr. Morgan has since appeared with great success as Fra Diavolo, Manrico (Trovatore), and Thaddeus (Bohemian Girl).

Digitized by Google

Madame Adelina Patti has returned from Moscow to St. Petersburgh. Her first appearance at the opera was as Gilda in Rigoletto. She was welcomed back with enthusiasm.

Mr. George Russell announces his intention to play Sir Sterndale Bennett's new sonata, The Maid of Orleans, at his concert, at Croydon, on Monday next. A fine performance of this beautiful work is expected; and that expectation will be fulfilled, there is no reason to doubt from the well-known antecedents of this accomplished pianist.

Two performances of J. S. Bach's Christmas Oratorio were given by the Choirs of Christ Church, New College, and Magdalen Chapel Choirs, assisted by several members of the University, on Tuesday and Thursday, the 2nd and 4th of December. At noon on Thursday, after an introductory voluntary by the organist of New College (Mr. Taylor), the service was commenced by a short form of prayer selected from Daily Service, and so arranged that, in some measure, the Oratorio took the place of the Anthem. Before the commencement of the Christmas music Mr. Taylor resigned his seat at the organ to the organist of Magdalen (Mr. Parret), who accompanied the oratorio throughout. In the opening chorus, "Christians, be joyful," the manner in which the boys attacked the second subject, and the accuracy with which they took the high notes were deserving of praise. The part of the Evangelist, by whom the story of the Incarnation is told, was sustained by Mr. Robson, of the Cathedral Choir. The choral, "How shall I fitly meet Thee?" and, in fact, the whole of the choral music, was sung in excellent style. It may be doubted whether any part of the music will have done more towards educating the musical taste of the congregation than the performance of these chorals. The bass aria, "Lord Almighty," was sung by Mr. R. Macan, tutor of Christ Church, who most ably rendered the whole of the bass music. The choruses, "Glory to God in the highest," "Glory be to God Almighty," "Come and thank Him," "Lord, when our haughty foes," and "Hear, King of Angels," were performed with clearness and precision, notably in the case of the fugal chorus, "Glory to God in the highest." If it were not invidious to particularize, we should award the palm to the performance of the alto, "Sleep, my beloved," the choral, "'Tis right that angels," with its delicate reminiscence of the previous air in the accompaniment, and the soprano air, "Ah, my Saviour," accurately rendered by Mr. Donaldson. The service was concluded by the benediction, and Mr. Taylor having resumed his seat at the organ, terminated the musical part of the service with a toccata and fugue by J. S. Bach.

MUSIC RECEIVED FOR REVIEW.

RANSFORD & SON.—"A Sailor's Yarn," "I would not change my English home," and "The Boy and the Brook," by J. L. Hatton; "Musing alone," by J. P. Knight; "Sir Ralph and the Lady fair," by M. Keller; "Who comes so gracefully gliding along," by W. F. Taylor.

HENRY KLEIN & Co.—Air favori de Henri IV. pour piano par Paul Barbot; "Petit Souvenirs" pour piano (Op. 17), par Gustave Erlanger; "The Sailor's Bride," song by Sir Julius Benedict; "I hear thee speak of a better land," by Arthur Cecil; "Camella and Rose" and "A damsel fair was singing," by Wilhelm Ganz; "Fear not," by Joseph Romano; "He was her only son," by F. Sohira; "My love's true hearted," by L. Zaverthal.

Advertisements.

THE VOICE & SINGING
BY
ADOLFO FERRARI.
THE FORMATION AND CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE FOR SINGING.
Price 12s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, REGENT STREET, W.

"The remarkable qualities of this book are the author's freedom from conventional trammels, the strong sense of his opinions, and the novelty yet evident soundness of his precepts; his work has consequently come into general use as a manual of vocal instruction."—Daily News.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE,
For invigorating and enriching the voice, and removing affections of the throat.

DR. STOLBERG'S VOICE LOZENGE is universally acknowledged to be the most valuable remedy for sore throat, hoarseness and relaxed throat. It should always be taken before singing or reciting, as it strengthens the vocal organs. It is most extensively prescribed by the faculty for the throat and voice. Dr. Lewis of Basingstoke says he finds them most efficacious, and in Dr. Copland's Dictionary of Practical Medicine (Longman & Co.), they are strongly recommended at pages 872 and 1492. They are used by all the greatest vocalists and orators in Europe, and have been established over a quarter of a century. Testimonials from Patti, Grisi, Lablache, Santley, &c. Sold in boxes, 1s. 1½d. and 2s. 9d. by all Chemists throughout the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

BRIGHTON CONCERT AGENTS,
PIANOFORTE AND MUSICSELLERS
LYON & HALL,
WARWICK MANSION.

MOLLOY'S LATEST SONGS.
THE RIDE (in three keys). 4s.
THE BROOK AND THE WAVE. 4s.

ROBERT COCKS & CO.'S NEW PART SONGS for FOUR VOICES (post free for two stamps each), i.e., "God save the Queen," "Far away," "Happy be thy dreams," "A Rose in Heaven," "God bless our Sailor Prince," "Let the hills resound," and "God bless the Prince of Wales." The two last four stamps each.

LET THE HILLS RESOUND. A new Part Song, by the composer of "God Bless the Prince of Wales." Post free, the Song, 18 stamps; Piano Solo and Duet, 24 stamps each; four voices, class copy, 4 stamps.
London: ROBERT COCKS & Co., New Burlington Street, W.

"THE SACRED HEART." The beautiful Processional Hymn sung by all the Pilgrims to Paray-le-Monial. Arranged as a piece for Pianoforte or Harmonium by J. Pittman. Price 2s.; or, for one or four voices, with French and English words, 1s.—London: E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

THE TALE OF A SHAH. Sung, with immense success, by Mr. Templeton, at every performance of the Moore and Burgess Minstrels. 18 stamps.—E. C. BOOSEY, 2, Little Argyll Street, Regent Street, W.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH'S
CHRISTMAS ORATORIO.
Parts I. and II. (Embracing the Birth of Christ),
Translated and Adapted by HELEN F. H. JOHNSTON
(Translator of the "Grosse Passions-Musik"),
FOR THE BACH SOCIETY,
By whom it was first performed in England, 1861, under the direction of
SIR W. STENDALE BENNETT,
And afterwards by the
STUDENTS OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, 1870,
Under the direction of MR. JOHN HULLAH.
Edited and Revised from the Full Score by ARTHUR O'LEARY.
PRINTED FROM ENGRAVED PLATES.

Price, in Paper Covers, 2s. net; in Cloth Boards, 4s. net. Chorus Parts, 1s. 9d. each. Band Parts can be hired.

LONDON: LAMBORN COCK, 63, NEW BOND STREET.

"AWAKE THEE, O ZION!"
AND
"SLUMBER BELOVED,"
The two Contralto Songs in
J. S. BACH'S "CHRISTMAS ORATORIO."
FOLIO EDITIONS.
Post Free for 18 Stamps each.
LAMBORN COCK, 63, New Bond Street.

HERR REICHARDT'S LATEST SONGS.
(Composer of "Love's Request" and "Thou art so near.")
"THE HEART'S MEMORIES." Poetry by Tennyson. .. .. 4s.
(R. MILLS and SONS.)
"AUBADE" (LOVE'S VOICE). Poetry by Victor Hugo... .. 4s.
(E. C. BOOSEY.)
"Two graceful examples of Herr Reichardt's well-known and highly appreciated style."—The Queen.

"HOMEWARD BOUND."
PART SONG. S.A.T.B.
Composed by the Rev. JOHN HAMPTON, M.A.
Price Fourpence. Octavo size.
London: NOVELLO, EWER & Co., 1, Berners Street.

"IL RITORNO."
("LE RETOUR.")
RONDO VALSE (with Italian and French Words).
Composed by
MICHEL BERGSON.
Price 4s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

"OUR DARLING,"
SONG,
(in C and in E flat).
The Words by ETTY LOVELL.
The Music by J. HALLETT SHEPPARD.
Price 3s.
London: DUNCAN DAVISON & Co., 244, Regent Street, W.

Digitized by Google

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1873.

MESSRS. HUTCHINGS & ROMER beg to announce that the following New Works, performed for the first time at the Festival, are now ready:—

The Lord of Burleigh.

PASTORAL CANTATA.

Written by DESMOND L. RYAN.

The Music by F. SCHIRA.

PRICE—In Paper Covers, 6s.; Bound in Cloth, 8s.

---

FROM THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF ROSSINI.

The Song of the Titans, 4s.,
National Hymn, 6s.,
Ave Maria, 4s.,
AND
Cantemus, 4s.

---

Break, Break,

TRIO,

SUNG BY MDLLE. TIETJENS, MDME. TREBELLI-BETTINI, AND MR. SIMS REEVES.

Music by T. ANDERTON.

PRICE 3s.

---

PUBLISHED BY

HUTCHINGS & ROMER,

9, Conduit Street, Regent Street, London, W.

---

Performed at the Birmingham Festival, with immense success.

FRIDOLIN,

A DRAMATIC CANTATA,

COMPOSED BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER

| | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|
| The Score complete, for Voice and Pianoforte, paper cover - - | 6 | 0 |
| Ditto, ditto, bound in cloth - - | 8 | 0 |
| "Repose and Peace" (Sung by Madame Sherrington) - - | 3 | 0 |
| "Wildest Conflicts" (Sung by Mr. Santley) - - - - - | 3 | 0 |

PIANOFORTE.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Nava's Three Subjects from "Fridolin" - - - | each | 3 | 6 |

No. 1. Hunting Chorus.
„ 2. Chorus of Handmaidens.
„ 3. Dance and Chorus of Villagers.

---

N.B.—The separate Chorus and Orchestra Parts may also be had, and other Pianoforte Arrangements are in the press.

---

CHAPPELL & CO.,

50, NEW BOND STREET, LONDON.

Digitized by Google

Edited by WM. SPARK, Mus. D.,
Organist of the Town Hall, &c., Leeds.

A SELECTION OF

COMPOSITIONS

FOR THE # ORGAN,

BY

EDOUARD BATISTE,

Organist of St. Eustache, Paris.

| No. | | s. | d. |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 | FOUR ANDANTES | 4 | 0 |
| 2 | TWO ANDANTES | 4 | 0 |
| 3 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in D minor | 3 | 0 |
| 4 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in C minor | 4 | 0 |
| 5 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in D | 5 | 0 |
| 6 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in F | 5 | 0 |
| 7 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in E minor | 3 | 0 |
| 8 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE for EASTER DAY; in A minor | 4 | 0 |
| 9 | GRAND OFFERTOIRE in F minor | 4 | 0 |
| 10 | TWO ELEVATIONS—F major and E flat major | 3 | 0 |
| 11 | SIX SHORT LOUD and SOFT VOLUNTARIES (Suitable for the Opening or Closing of Divine Service.) | 3 | 0 |
| 12 | TWO SOFT VOLUNTARIES—A minor and D minor | 3 | 0 |
| 13 | FUNERAL MARCH | 3 | 0 |
| 14 | TWO PROCESSIONAL MARCHES | 3 | 0 |
| 15 | OFFERTOIRE in B flat | 3 | 0 |
| 16 | OFFERTOIRE in A | 3 | 0 |
| 17 | TWO VOLUNTARIES | 3 | 0 |
| 18 | MARCH in E flat and POSTLUDE | 3 | 0 |
| 19 | THREE ANDANTES | 4 | 0 |
| 20 | ELEVATION and TWO COMMUNIONS | 4 | 0 |
| 21 | NINE PRELUDES | 4 | 0 |
| 22 | OFFERTOIRE in E major | 4 | 0 |
| 23 | LARGHETTO in G and EIGHT SHORT and EASY PRELUDES | 3 | 0 |
| 24 | FOURTEEN SHORT and EASY PRELUDES (First Set) | 4 | 0 |
| 25 | FOURTEEN SHORT and EASY PRELUDES (Second Set) | 4 | 0 |
| 26 | OFFERTOIRE in A flat | 3 | 0 |
| 27 | FOURTEEN SHORT and EASY PRELUDES (Third Set) | 4 | 0 |

LONDON:
ASHDOWN & PARRY,
HANOVER SQUARE.

THIS DAY.

Price 2s. 6d., paper; 4s. cloth, gilt edges.

Sacred Songs,

ANCIENT & MODERN.

A Collection of One Hundred Songs by the following Composers:—

| | |
|---|---|
| HANDEL. | MEYERBEER. |
| MOZART. | BEETHOVEN. |
| MORLACHI. | MENDELSSOHN |
| HAYDN. | CRESCENTINI. |
| ROUSSEAU. | CHERUBINI. |
| MARTINI. | MÉHUL. |
| Sir J. STEVENSON. | ROMBERG. |
| Dr. ARNE. | MARCELLO. |
| BACH. | AVISON. |
| PERGOLESI. | WELY. |
| J. B. CRAMER. | SHRIVAL. |
| LOTTI. | ARCADELT. |
| GORDIGIANI. | Dr. GREEN. |
| A. S. SULLIVAN. | STRADELLA. |
| Sir J. BENEDICT. | ROSSINI. |
| HENRY SMART. | HEROLD. |
| KNIGHT. | J. L. HATTON. |
| ALEX. EWING. | F. H. COWEN. |

LONDON:
BOOSEY & CO.,
HOLLES STREET.

Digitized by Google

Printed by Henderson, Rait, and Fenton, at No. 69, Marylebone Lane, Oxford Street, in the Parish of Marylebone, in the County of Middlesex.
Published by William Duncan Davison, at the Office, 244, Regent Street, Saturday, Dec. 27, 1873.

The Musical World.

(REGISTERED AT THE GENERAL POST OFFICE AS A NEWSPAPER.)

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED: IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Goethe.

SUBSCRIPTION, FREE BY POST, 20s. PER ANNUM,
Payable in advance by Cash or Post-Office Order to DUNCAN DAVISON & CO., 244, Regent Street, London, W.

VOL. 51—No. 51. SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1873. Price { 4d. Unstamped. 5d. Stamped.

THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

CRYSTAL PALACE.—THIS DAY.—"PUSS IN BOOTS."

CRYSTAL PALACE.—PRODUCTION of the New CHRISTMAS PANTOMIME, written expressly for the Crystal Palace by Mr. E. L. Blanchard. THIS DAY (SATURDAY).

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The GRAND CHRISTMAS ANNUAL, written by Mr. E. L. Blanchard, entitled, "PUSS IN BOOTS; or, Dame Trot and her Comical Cat, and the Great Ogre, Fee Fo Fum," will be performed for the first time THIS DAY, Dec. 20, commencing at 2.30 p.m. A portion of the opening has been written expressly for Mr. George Conquest and his son, who will be supported by a powerful cast. The elaborate and magnificent scenery (with the exception of the transformation picture) by Mr. F. Fenton, Mr. Emden, and assistants. Among many beautiful scenes, that of the Grand Ballet, Opening of the Valentine, will be of particularly gorgeous beauty and novel and interesting effects. The great Transformation Scene, entitled, A Child's Vision of Fairy Land, by Mr. Charles Brew (whose services have been secured exclusively for the Crystal Palace), will be of unsurpassed magnificence, a masterpiece of imaginative power, illustrated by dazzling beauty. The Ballet arranged by Madame Colliere; the Music composed and selected by Mr. Oscar Barrett; the Harlequinade invented by Rowella; the general action arranged by Mr. T. H. Friend, the stage-manager; and the whole produced under the Company's own management. Admission, Half-a-crown, or by Guinea Season Ticket.

ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE, Park Street, Regent's Park, close to the York and Albany.—Proprietress—Madame ST. CLAIR.—Every evening at 8.45, a new Fairy Extravaganza, entitled, "IN THE CLOUDS: A GLIMPSE OF UTOPIA," by Gilbert à Beckett. Characters by Misses Alice Barth, Costin, Davis, Nott, and Madame Marion St. Clair; Messrs. E. Danvers, C. Morelli, Baker, Valentine, Chamberlain, and J. W. Turner. Preceded by, at 7.30, the highly successful Opera, in One Act, entitled, "MARGUERITE." Miss Ashton and Mr. Turner. Conclude with "ILLUSTRIOUS STRANGER." Doors open at 7. Box-office open from 11 to 5. No charge for booking.

GREAT SUCCESS OF "IN THE CLOUDS."—ROYAL ALEXANDRA THEATRE, Park Street, Regent's Park. Last Night of "MARGUERITE," SATURDAY, Dec. 20, when the theatre will be closed for the great preparations for the Grand Pantomime, entitled, "MOTHER REDCAP; or, Harlequin Queen Fancy and the King of the Golden Mountain." Morning performance on Boxing Day at 2·30; evening performance at 7.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL CHORAL SOCIETY.—Conductor—Mr. BARNBY. Handel's MESSIAH, on WEDNESDAY, Dec. 24, at Eight o'clock. Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Edna Hall, Madame Patey, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Signor Giullo Perkin (his first appearance in London). Organist—Dr. Stainer. Solo Trumpet—Mr. T. Harper. Boxes, £3 3s., £2 10s., and £1 10s.; Stalls, 7s. 6d. and 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; 5000 Admission at 1s. Tickets at Novello's, 1, Berners Street, and 35, Poultry (where also may be had small scores, paper covers, 1s. 4d. and 2s.; cloth 2s. 6d. and 4s.); the usual Agents, and at the Royal Albert Hall.

"ONE WORD."

NICOLAI'S Popular Duet, "ONE WORD," for Contralto and Tenor, will be sung by Miss Julian and Mr. Albert James at Miss Kate Gordon's Concerts at Ambleside, This Day; on Monday at Kendal; on Tuesday at Dalton-in-Furness; and on Wednesday at Ulverstone.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR. ALBERT JAMES will sing (by desire) Ascher's Popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" every evening during the ensuing week at Ambleside, Kendal, Dalton-in-Furness, Ulverstone, &c.

ELECTRICITY VALSE,

By HENRY KLEIN.

Price 4s.

"Is tuneful, danceable, and not difficult."—The Graphic.

"This is really a very pretty waltz, with good melodies admirably arranged for the pianoforte."—The Era.

"Whether used for dance purposes, or played for its own sake, it cannot fail to please."—Musical World.

"The music is pretty, and variety of effect produced by broken rhythm."—The Court Circular.

Post free, 24 stamps.

London: HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC. Instituted 1861.

Supported by the following eminent Professors:—

Principal, Professor WYLDE, Mus. Doc. Cantab.

| | |
|---|---|
| Signor Manuel Garcia, M.D. | Mr. Joseph Barnett |
| Chevalier F. Schira | Signor F. Lablache |
| Mr. J. F. Barnett | Signor Traventi |
| Herr Ganz | Herr Henseler |
| Mr. C. K. Salaman | Herr Lehmeyer |
| Signor Scuderi | Mr. A. Barth |
| Signor Tartaglioni | Signor Praga |
| M. Beauvoisin | Mr. Mann |

The ANNUAL CHRISTMAS MORNING CONCERT will take place on SATURDAY next, at Half-past Two o'clock, and the ANNUAL EVENING CONCERT on TUESDAY, December 30, at Eight, in ST. GEORGE'S HALL.

The Next Term commences January 9, the entrance day for which is WEDNESDAY, January 7, between 11 and 4. Fee, per term, for instruction in three branches of study, Five Guineas. Prospectuses at St. George's Hall, Langham Place, Regent Street.

G. R. WILKINSON, Sec.

"LOVE AT SEA."

MISS EDITH WYNNE will sing Sir Julius Benedict's New Song, "LOVE AT SEA," at Mrs. Scarisbrick's Concert, at Liverpool, Saturday Morning (This Day), Dec. 20th.

"ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?"

MR. EDWARD LLOYD will sing Ascher's popular Romance, "ALICE, WHERE ART THOU?" at Liverpool, This Day, December 20th.

MR. PEARSON will sing at Manchester this Evening, Chester, 23rd; Liverpool Musical Society, 24th; Manchester, 25th; Preston, 26th; Manchester, 27th; Glasgow, 29th and Jan. 1st, 1874,; City, 7th; Ashton-under-Lyne, 15th; Mr. Kuhe's Brighton Festival, Feb. 19th; Sheffield, 24th and 25th. For intermediate dates, address to No. 18, Cecil Street, London.

MISS LILLIE ALBRECHT, the talented and rising young Pianist, who met with great success at the Promenade Concerts, Covent Garden, will be happy to enter into engagements for concerts, soirees, &c. Address to care of Messrs. Duncan Davison & Co., or at Miss Lillie Albrecht's, 5, Gower Street, Bedford Square.

HERR SCHUBERTH begs to announce, in answer to numerous applications, that the vacancies for Artists in the forthcoming concerts of the Schubert Society, Mozart and Beethoven Society, &c., are now filled up.

MR. LANSDOWNE COTTELL'S MUSICAL EVENINGS at HOME, for the social study and practice of vocal and concerted music. Ladies and gentlemen desiring to assist, address, Charles Ray, Secretary, 37, Abbey Road, N.W.

MR. H. C. COOPER, formerly one of the Solo and Principal Violins of the Philharmonic Society of London, will return permanently to London in the middle of January, 1874. Mr. Cooper accepts engagements as Soloist for Violin or Viola, or in the Orchestra. Lessons given. For terms, &c., apply (pro tem.) to 14, Prince's Street, Leicester Square.

REMOVAL.

SIGNOR GUSTAVE GARCIA and MADAME MARTORELLI GARCIA, beg leave to announce their Removal to 54, Portsdown Road, Clifton Gardens, Maida Hill, W. N.B.—Signor Gustave Garcia (Nephew of Malibran and Viardot Garcia) sang at M. Riviere's Concerts during the Season; at the Philharmonic Society (Liverpool), December 9; and will sing at Herr Kuhe's Grand Festival at Brighton in February.

NEW SONGS by the most Popular Composers.

Just Published.

SIR JULIUS BENEDICT'S "The Sailor's Bride." 4s.
VIRGINIA GABRIEL'S "A Shadow." 4s.
SCHIRA'S "He was her only Son." 4s.
ARTHUR CECIL'S "I hear thee speak of a better land." 4s.
WILHELM GANZ'S "Camelia and Rose." 4s.
In D flat for Soprano, and in A flat for Contralto.
WILHELM GANZ'S "A damsel fair was singing." 4s.
Post-free at half-price.

London: HENRY KLEIN & CO., 6, ARGYLL STREET, REGENT STREET, W.

Digitized by Google

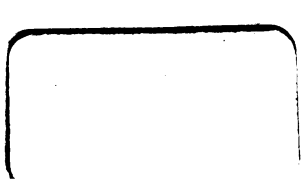
Digitized by Google

3 2044 043 850 056

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.



Digitized by Google

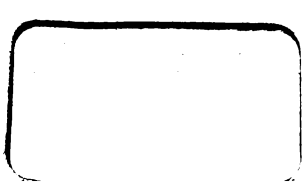
Digitized by Google

3 2044 043 850 056

This book should be returned to the Library on or before the last date stamped below.

A fine of five cents a day is incurred by retaining it beyond the specified time.

Please return promptly.



Digitized by Google

Digitized by Google